PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 76th CONGRESS, THIRD SESSION

SENATE

TUESDAY, JULY 9, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, July 8, 1940)

The Senate met in executive session at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Duncan Fraser, assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our Governor, whose glory is in all the world, we commend this Nation to Thy merciful care, that, being guided by Thy Providence, we may dwell secure in Thy peace. Grant to the President of the United States, the President of this Senate, and all others in authority wisdom and strength to know and to do Thy will. Fill them with the love of truth and righteousness; and make them ever mindful of their calling to serve this people in Thy fear. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

As in legislative session,

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Monday, July 8, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 9576) relating to the admission to St. Elizabeths Hospital of persons resident or domiciled in the Virgin Islands of the United States.

The message announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 326) for the payment of awards and appraisals heretofore made in favor of citizens of the United States on claims presented under the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, United States and Mexico, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9875) to provide that payments made to States or Territories to aid in the maintenance of disabled veterans in State or Territorial homes shall be used solely for such purpose, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 2289. An act for the relief of the Leesburg Welding & Garage Co.; and

H. R. 7233. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the disposition, control, and use of surplus real property acquired by Federal agencies, and for other purposes," approved August 27, 1935 (Public, No. 351, 74th Cong.), and for other purposes.

During the executive session the following legislative business, by unanimous consent, was transacted as in legislative session:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACTS ANNOTATED, 1940 SUPPLEMENT (S. DOC. NO. 202)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting, pursuant to (S. Res. 259) authorizing the preparation of a supplement to the document on the Compilation of Federal Laws Relating to the Regulation of Carriers Subject to the Interstate Commerce Act (submitted by Mr. TYDINGS, and agreed to May 28, 1940), a manuscript supplement bringing as closely to date as practicable Senate Document No. 166, Seventieth Congress, first session, and Senate Document No. 139, Seventy-third Congress, second session, which, with the accompanying document, were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and, under the terms of the resolution, ordered to be printed.

PETITION AND MEMORIAL

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a petition of several citizens of Weehawken, N. J., praying that the United States keep out of war, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a memorial from the Legion of American Mothers, Helen Hamilton, chairman, Oakland, Calif., remonstrating against confirmation of the nominations of Henry L. Stimson, of New York, to be Secretary of War, and Frank Knox, of Illinois, to be Secretary of the Navy, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10014) to amend the Transportation Act, 1920, as amended, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1948) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 3163. A bill to provide for a national cemetery in the vicinity of Portland, Oreg. (Rept. No. 1949); and

S. 4106. A bill to authorize the construction of certain facilities in Marjorie Park, Davis Island, Tampa, Fla., and for other purposes (Rept. No. 1950).

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 9875) to provide that payments made to States or Territories to aid in the maintenance of disabled veterans in State or Territorial homes shall be used solely for such purpose was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

META DE RENE M'LOSKEY—CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Finance be discharged from the consideration of House bill 554, for the relief of Meta De Rene McLoskey.

I have spoken to the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the chairman of the subcommittee having the bill in charge, and it is entirely satisfactory to him that the committee be discharged, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection, if the Senator has spoken to the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. MINTON. I have done so. I spoke to the Senator from Georgia about the matter today, and it is entirely agreeable to him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Committee on Finance is discharged from the further consideration of House bill 554, and the bill is referred to the Committee on Claims.

TITLE TO LOW-VALUE LANDS OF THE UNITED STATES—AMENDMENT

Mr. BILBO submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. S. 3931. An act for the acquisition of Indian lands for the Parker Dam and Reservoir project, and for other purposes.

HENRY L. STIMSON

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess yesterday afternoon it was in executive session. The question then before the Senate was the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Stimson to be Secretary of War.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. With the greatest personal regret, I intend to vote against the confirmation of Mr. Stimson, and desire to state briefly the reasons that have led me to that conclusion.

In my opinion, the greatest issue before the American people today, except our own preparedness for defense, is the question whether we shall go to war with Germany and Italy in the absence of any attack on this Nation by Germany or Italy. I realize that this issue has not been clearly stated nor frankly faced by the people of this country, because most of those who really favor our intervention in the war have not admitted the logical conclusion of their own arguments. This is not true of everyone. A petition urging a declaration of war was recently signed by 30 prominent citizens, including Mr. Frank Kent, one of the leading columnists of the United States; but many of the strongest interventionists still keep up the pretense that they are trying to avoid war. The favorite demand is for all possible aid to the Allies "short of war." The argument is that the best and almost the only certain way of defending America is to aid the Allies. William Allen White's committee is a committee to defend America by aiding the Allies. I wonder whether he is going to change the name, now that there are no Allies, and France has gone Fascist.

Of course, if the argument is sound that the best way to defend America is to aid England, then we should go the whole way, and declare war at once on Germany and Italy. Those who advocate intervention usually try to protect themselves by arguing that there is no use in our declaring war at the moment, because we cannot assist the British today by such a course. As a matter of fact, however, we probably could assist the British materially by declaring war. We could render them naval aid, both in the North Sea and in the Mediterranean, even without sending the bulk of our fleet to Europe. We could take over many of the activities in which their fleets are engaged throughout the world, and release British ships for the defense of England. On Saturday Mr. Walter Lippmann, the new apostle of establishing a Fascist government in the United States, published an article in which he took the position that the defeat of Great Britain would leave us completely defenseless, and that any person who opposes active assistance to the British in conducting the war is opposing preparedness. Every argument that he makes for the confirmation of Mr. Stimson is just as good an argument for an immediate declaration of war against Germany and Italy.

The President himself, in a series of speeches protesting his intention to keep the country out of war, has favored policies likely to lead to war, and has left himself clear to advocate a declaration of war. His Chicago speech of November 16, 1937, declared his belief that we should quarantine the aggressor nations. On January 24, 1939, he advocated intervention in Europe through methods short of war, to defend religion, democracy, and good faith throughout the world. His address of January 3, 1940, implies a right and duty to intervene in foreign wars because of the character of government adopted by some of the belligerents. His recent speeches show a willingness to stir up animosity against this country in many other countries with whom we are at peace, and show a complete recklessness with regard to provoking those countries to war. The action of our Government in permitting the sale to England of naval airplanes and motorboats ordered for the Navy is almost a participation in the war, even though legally it is not an act of war.

Mr. Stimson advocates a policy which amounts to war and would certainly lead to war. The day before he was appointed, he made a speech at New Haven in which he advocated, first, the repeal of the cash-and-carry provisions of the Neutrality Act, and sending American munitions in American ships to England under convoy of our own Navy; second, throwing open all our ports to the British and French Navies and merchant marine vessels for repairs, refueling, and other naval services. He devoted most of his speech to the argument that we must allow the British Navy to use our ports as bases in order that it may more effectively carry on the war against Germany. In his appearance before the committee Mr. Stimson stated that since June 19 he had learned that the British bases were not so subject to attack by the Germans as he thought, and that he was, therefore, willing to put off this particular action on our part as long as the British could use their own bases. But this is what he actually said in that speech:

> Today so long as that British sea power still exists, the Atlantic still remains for us a protection instead of a channel for the approach of our enemies. * * *

In other words, if the British Fleet should be defeated, the Atlantic would be simply a channel to approach America.

> If assured of our supplies and of the use of our naval bases, it could in all probability continue to command that ocean and our own fleet could devote itself to its present mission of holding the Pacific for us against the manifest dangers which may face us there.
> Such corporation could be made effective and could probably do its work without the necessity of sending any American soldiers abroad. On the other hand, if no such cooperation were given and if the British Fleet were rendered helpless or fell into German power our men would soon be fighting for their own and our lives on American soil. * * *
> I say with the utmost earnestness that America today is standing at the parting of two ways: In this moment of world peril she can cling to the dreams of a mistaken fiction of neutrality no longer applicable to her interests or her safety; she can leave the British Fleet to its fate and face the consequences of a future which may leave her virtually defenseless to a Fascist attack. * * *
> Or she can frankly realize that now as for many years past our own immediate safety depends in part upon the continuance of British sea power, and she can lend her resources to make our joint sea power effective for that purpose.
> By that action she can help to insure that the British Government will not under the stress of the dire attacks to which it will soon be subjected, in a moment of desperation, try to purchase the preservation of its own island home by a submission to Hitler's terms.

A careful reading of Mr. Stimson's speech shows that his argument really applies just as strongly today regardless of the supposed improvement in the British position. Granting his premises, we should be at war today. Regardless of his protestations, he can only believe that war with Germany and Italy is an immediate necessity, if he believes the statements which he himself made in that speech. The truth is that the course advocated by Mr. Stimson, and certainly receiving sympathetic approval from the President, logically demands immediate declaration of war against Germany and Italy. In my opinion, the real reason why these gentlemen do not openly advocate a declaration of war is that they are afraid that public opinion in the United States does not support such a frank position, and it does not.

The concealment of the real purpose of the interventionists is justified by them on the ground that public opinion can only be gradually educated to support a war policy.

I quite agree that public opinion is not necessarily always right, and I believe we should consider, and consider now, the argument for war. It cannot be lightly dismissed. I disagree with it, but I recognize its strength. It is based on the theory that if the British are defeated we shall be immediately subjected to attack by Germany and Italy, and therefore our own defense requires that we join in the war to maintain the power of the British Fleet over the seas, at least until we have enlarged our defense forces.

And we must face the fact that, no matter what we do now, no matter how much we desire to remain at peace, we may be drawn into the war. If the field of war should shift to America we would be compelled to participate, for we cannot permit the establishment of any German base within reach of this country. But I disagree with the arguments which are urged in favor of our joining in a war in Europe or Asia which has not involved an attack on America.

It is not a light thing to go to war at any time, and certainly not under modern conditions. There is still plenty of death and permanent disability and suffering resulting from the World War, plus a tremendous financial burden, but it would be nothing compared to the loss if we should become involved in this war. No one can say that war would not involve sending troops abroad. Today, perhaps, it would be foolish to send troops to the continent of Europe, but if this should become a world war there are many places where American troops might be of tremendous value, and once involved in war we could not refuse to send them.

The idea that we can help democracy by going to war seems to me fantastic. Nothing is so destructive of government, particularly forms of democratic government, as war. Our going to war would be more likely to destroy American democracy than to destroy dictatorships in the totalitarian countries.

The strongest argument for our taking part in the war is that if the British should be defeated we should be immediately subjected to attack by the Germans. I do not minimize the seriousness of the situation that would be produced by a German victory. While I do not think there would be a German attack on the United States, because I see no reason for it, nevertheless it is a possibility in the future which we cannot ignore. I do not believe that the Germans could effectively attack the United States even if they should destroy the British Fleet or capture part of it. Our Navy would be the strongest in the world, and the idea that it must remain in the Pacific is contrary to all principles of naval strategy which we have been taught for the past 20 years. But we should find ourselves in a world where ruthless force had been triumphant over every principle of justice, and where the possibility of its continued triumph would always be before the peoples of the world. We should have to expend a very large sum every year on armament, and that would involve some reduction in our standard of living. We should have to dominate the Caribbean Sea and assist the defense of Canada. But if we do this and develop our preparedness program as it should be developed, I do not believe we shall ever face an actual attack on this country by European or Asiatic nations.

On the other hand, if we become involved in this war, if we admit that Germany is a perpetual enemy, I see no reason to think that we will ever see any real peace during our lifetime. We will be involved in the same expense for preparedness, and we will be involved in a much larger expense of money and lives in carrying on continuous warfare. We would become a totalitarian state and subject ourselves to exactly the same kind of tyranny which we oppose in Germany today. It seems to me clear that the proper defense of America should be undertaken on the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. If we admit that those are our borders to be defended, then we can hope to remain at peace. If we admit that our boundary is the English Channel, then we would be certain to be involved in warfare for years to come.

It is said that our foreign trade would be destroyed, but I do not see the reason for that result—so long as we are at peace. It is said that we would be conquered by a wave of totalitarian ideas, which we will be too lacking in intellect to resist. I see no reason why we cannot remain a democratic nation even if the totalitarian ideas prevail in other parts of the world—so long as we remain at peace. The extra expense for armament can be met by a reduction of domestic expense and an increased taxation which will still permit the operation of a system of free enterprise within our boundaries.

For these reasons I am convinced that our best interests require a policy which does not involve intervention in Europe. It is hard for many of us to consider these questions solely from the point of view of the American people, when we have such an intense sympathy for England and a desire for English success. I earnestly pray for that success, but surely we must consider first the interest and welfare of 130,000,000 Americans, who came to this country largely to escape the conflicts of Europe and have an intense yearning to remain at peace.

I voted for the repeal of the arms embargo, and I believe our markets should remain completely open to the British. The very capacity to produce munitions and implements of war which we need for our own protection can be available to the British. In fact, probably that is one of the most effective forms of aid we can render. It has always been permitted by international law and cannot be regarded by anyone as an intervention in Europe, particularly while we maintain our cash-and-carry policy.

Mr. Stimson has been appointed Secretary of War. On the witness stand he attempted to claim that as Secretary of War he was concerned only with preparedness and in no way with foreign policy. That position does not recognize the real importance of the President's Cabinet. On all questions involving intervention in Europe the advice of the Secretary of War will be sought, and he will be compelled by his position to give it. In fact, when I asked him whether he had any argument to present in support of his position that he could immunize himself as Secretary of War against participation in other policies he admitted that he could not so immunize himself. In view of the position he has already taken, it is a reasonable conclusion that his advice will always be in favor of intervention, even though intervention takes the form of acts of war on our part against Germany and Italy. He has also taken always an aggressive attitude toward Japan, and would apparently be likely to advocate intervention in Asia as well as in Europe. Under these circumstances, I cannot bring myself to vote in favor of Mr. Stimson's confirmation. I am myself convinced that such a vote would be a vote leading to intervention in the European war.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question, for information?

Mr. TAFT. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I recall reading a dispatch from Philadelphia a few days before the Republican convention in which the Senator from Ohio was quoted as having said that he would vote for the confirmation of Mr. Stimson and Mr. Knox unless the hearing which was to be held the following week developed some fact which might change his opinion about it. I am wondering whether the Senator was misquoted or whether something happened subsequently which changed his opinion regarding Mr. Stimson.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator will understand that I do not remember exactly what happened in Philadelphia [laughter], but I might well have made such a statement. If so, what changed my opinion was the reading of the speech of June 18, which I had not read, and which I read in connection with the hearings. It was Mr. Stimson's speech of June 18, I think, which determined the actual position he occupied. I had not read that speech before returning from Philadelphia.

Mr. BARKLEY. He had made the speech practically a week before the Senator made his statement which was quoted. I am not impunging the Senator's motives at all.

Mr. TAFT. I was busy at the time. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Not busy enough, however.

Mr. TAFT. I collected all the speeches of Mr. Stimson——

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator says he does not recall everything that happened in Philadelphia. He recalls vividly the blitzkrieg that was operated there during the week of the convention.

Mr. TAFT. I collected all those speeches, but I put them in a folder to be read later. I did not read them until after the convention, and I did not know Mr. Stimson had gone to the extent to which he had gone.

Mr. BARKLEY. What happened after the Senator made the statement that he would vote for confirmation was that he read a speech which had been made previous to his statement.

Mr. TAFT. That is correct.

EXTENSION OF BENEFITS OF THE UNITED STATES EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION ACT

As in legislative session,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3131) to extend the benefits of the United States Employees' Compensation Act to members of the Officers' Reserve Corps and of the Enlisted Reserve Corps of the Army who were physically injured in line of duty while performing active duty or engaged in authorized training between dates of February 28, 1925, and July 15, 1939, both inclusive, and for other purposes, which were, on page 2, line 4, after the word "inclusive", to insert "when such injury or death results from an accident involving a military hazard such as flying in military aircraft, participation in military drills, target practice and tactical exercises, and in injury cases where such injury has resulted in permanent partial or permanent total disability"; on page 3, line 7, to strike out all after "status:" down to and including "Act:" in line 11; and in line 17, after the word "approval" to insert "and the 8-year period of limitation in section 10–G of the Federal Employees' Compensation Act of September 7, 1916, shall be computed for purposes of this act, from the date of approval thereof."

Mr. HILL. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

SUPERHIGHWAY SYSTEM AND ADMISSION OF EUROPEAN REFUGEES

As in legislative session,

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce, for appropriate reference, at this time two bills, one providing for an integrated system of superhighways in the United States for military and other purposes, which is self-explanatory; and one providing for the issuance of immigration visas to, and the admission into the United States of, children under 16 years of age from Great Britain and other countries in Europe.

In connection with this bill I should like briefly to call to the attention of the Senate a very tragic and unhappy condition now existing in France, arising from the internment in that country of a very large number of soldiers of the unsuccessful Spanish Army, who fled from Spain to France and who are there now interned and who face possible death from the German or Italian Governments.

Interned now in France there is also what is termed the "international army" or the "international brigade," made up of soldiers from Poland, Czechoslovakia, and other European countries who went to France to fight against fascism. I am informed that the Government of Mexico is willing freely to admit all these ex-soldiers without any conditions, but I am also informed that only by the interposition of the United States Government in helping to perfect some arrangement with the Italian Government, the German Government, and the French Government, and the offering of American ships, can hope be afforded that this humanitarian plan will be successfully worked out.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator's bill provide any method for working out a program by which the United States could assist Mexico in carrying out such an arrangement, if it could be made, and provide a place of refuge for these unfortunate people?

Mr. DOWNEY. I will say to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska that my bill does not cover that at all. I think the appropriate action would have to be taken by and that it lies entirely within the hands of the Chief Executive, and I hope that the Chief Executive will proceed very vigorously to do whatever can be done.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will further yield, I feel a very deep sympathy for these people. As vigorously as any people in the world they have demonstrated by their conduct, it seems to me, that they are opposed to fascism and nazism. They have shown that by their willingness to fight on the battlefields to carry out their ideas. There are between three and six thousand of these people now held in France, I understand. Germany and Italy claim that they are all German or Italian subjects. Undoubtedly some of them come within that category—some are German, some are Italian, some are Polish, some are Czechoslovakian—but under the rule of Hitler or Mussolini, if these people are surrendered to Hitler and Mussolini, in all probability they will all be shot, whether they are German citizens without any question, or whether they come from Czechoslovakia, or some other country which Hitler has captured and taken over.

If I am correctly informed, the Government of Mexico has agreed to take all these people and provide a refuge for them if they can be transported from France to Mexico, and the question arises, How can they be transported? The proposal the Senator advocates, and which I think is very noble in its purpose, is that the Government of the United States transport these people if it can be done. To do that it will be necessary, under the circumstances, it seems to me, to get the consent of Hitler and Mussolini and to arrive at an agreement or understanding with them that they will permit American ships, if American ships are to be used, to transport these refugees to Mexico. Whether such an understanding could be reached or not I do not know, and I express no opinion with respect to it. I have some doubt whether Hitler would consent to it. He claims these people are either Italian or German subjects and that in taking part in the controversy in Spain they were fighting against Germany and Italy, and I suppose he naturally feels a desire to shoot them or to punish them, as under his law they could be punished, because, if the statements just made are true, he considers the persons mentioned as being traitors to Germany and to Italy.

I know considerable disagreement existed in our own country with respect to the controversy in Spain. It seems to me a good deal of that disagreement has now disappeared. I confess that my sympathy was always with the Loyalist Army, which was defeated. The people in question were soldiers in the Loyalist Army. Unless something is done to relieve them from their present situation, they are probably headed straight for death.

I do not see how Congress could pass any law which would change the situation. I do not believe any law is necessary. It seems to me that there would be no difficulty if an understanding could be reached whereby our private shipowners, if they were willing to do so, would bring these people over to Mexico, if Hitler and Mussolini would not object. Then they could be brought over without any trouble. I do not know that we could pass any statute which would help the situation.

Mr. DOWNEY. I do not think we could.

Mr. NORRIS. I sincerely hope that some method may be agreed upon by which the lives of these people can be saved, because whether we agree with them or not, they stand before the world today as brave soldiers who were willing to back up their belief and opposition to Hitler and Mussolini by risking their lives in the Spanish controversy.

Mr. DOWNEY. I thank the distinguished Senator. He has so fully covered the subject that I will not remark upon it any further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bills will be received as in legislative session, and appropriately referred.

(For bills introduced by Mr. DOWNEY, see under the appropriate heading of "Bills introduced" Senate bills 4194 and 4195, which were referred, respectively, to the Committee on Immigration and the Committee on Military Affairs.)

HENRY L. STIMSON

The Senate resumed the consideration of the nomination of Henry L. Stimson, of New York, to be Secretary of War.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I most heartily agree with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] in his declaration that the question involved in the pending appointment is one of intervention or nonintervention. I am somewhat amazed at the ease with which some Members of this body entertain the feeling that the President has a right to name whomsoever he may choose to name to his official family. I am not ready to agree with those who so maintain. After all, there is a constitutional provision calling for Senate confirmation of Cabinet appointments. The writers of the Constitution were not given to superfluous language. There must have been some reasoning behind that constitutional provision. That is the reason I am provoked even by the mere thought of the chance of the appointment to the Cabinet of policymakers who would run contrary to what is considered the accepted American policy.

I think there has never been such need as now exists, not only for a clear enunciation of what is American policy, but, more than that, for it to be made so clear to all Americans that they may have assurance that there has not been a departure from the policy which has prevailed through all the years and which has given America such complete security against danger from abroad.

No one has better declared the American foreign policy than Henry Clay, who after all was only repeating the declarations previously made by Washington, by Jefferson, by Madison, and by others.

Dr. Charles Beard, in his most recent book, has brought to light Clay's declaration of what was American foreign policy. The declaration grew out of the request of Hungary for help at the hands of the United States in her conflict with Austria. Clay's response was simply this, that by giving official aid to Hungary we would abandon "our ancient policy of amity and nonintervention" and that by taking such a step we would also justify European monarchs in surrendering their policy of forbearance, and in turning upon us in an hour of weakness and exhaustion for the purpose of crushing us "as the propagandists of doctrines destructive of the peace and good order of the world." Clay went on to say:

> By the policy to which we have adhered since the days of Washington * * * we have done more for the cause of liberty in the world than arms could effect; we have shown to other nations the way to greatness and happiness. * * * Far better is it for ourselves, for Hungary, and the cause of liberty, that, adhering to our pacific system and avoiding the distant wars of Europe, we should keep our lamp burning brightly on this western shore, as a light to all nations, than to hazard its utter extinction amid the ruins of fallen and falling republics in Europe.

Mr. President, those are worth-while words in this particular hour when some Americans would seemingly have America hazard her liberty "amid the ruins of fallen and falling republics in Europe" today.

What does Mr. Stimson, whose nomination is pending before the Senate at this time, think should be our policy? Others have too clearly portrayed Mr. Stimson's thought on this matter to warrant any repetition on my part. We know that Mr. Stimson hides behind the theory that as Secretary of War he would not be a shaper of American policy, that it would be only for him in his official capacity to cause the Army to be in such a state of preparedness that it could pursue any policy which the policymakers might lay down.

In his testimony before the Senate Military Affairs Committee Senator BRIDGES asked:

> I would like to ask Mr. Stimson whether or not he believes that the Secretary of War—the post of Secretary of War—is a policy-making post, or whether or not the Secretary of War would be within his jurisdiction to in any way outline policies of this country.

Mr. Stimson responded:

> I am very glad that you asked that question, Senator. I touched upon it when I spoke of the duties, just a minute ago, of the Secretary of War. It has nothing to do with policy. Policy is determined by other branches of the Government, and it is his duty to prepare for the troubles that may be brought about by their determinations.

Mr. President, that testimony by Mr. Stimson rather clearly reveals that he would intervene in the European war if only certain conditions could be made to prevail.

In that hearing the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] said:

> I was going to ask, Mr. Stimson, whether you thought the defense of this country requires our intervention in the war in Europe.
> Mr. STIMSON. I do not think so today.

I place emphasis on the "today."

> I think that it will, however, depend upon what you call intervention. I think it does involve the taking of steps which can be counted on as necessary to protect the defenses of the United States.
> Senator MINTON. Do you think that that entails the sending of troops to Europe?
> Mr. STIMSON. I do not today; no.

And again I emphasize Mr. Stimson's "today." Why does Mr. Stimson think it would not entail the sending of troops today? The following is his own language:

> I do not think you could land any troops in Europe today.

Then alone for the reason that he believes we could not land troops in Europe today we should not intervene, but if only the means and the ways could be found to land troops there it might alter the situation considerably.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, Mr. Stimson's whole attitude has been that we should take steps which he, as a great international lawyer and a former Secretary of State, knows are not "acts short of war" but are acts of war.

Mr. NYE. Quite so.

Mr. WHEELER. The significant thing is that immediately after he makes the speech he is invited to become a member of the Cabinet. I am sure Mr. Stimson would not have taken a position in the Cabinet if he had felt that the President of the United States disagreed with his views; and certainly I cannot conceive of the President of the United States taking him into the Cabinet if the President did not agree with Mr. Stimson's views.

Ordinarily the President of the United States ought to be permitted to have in his Cabinet anyone he wishes. However, it seems to me that there is involved a question of policy in which the Congress of the United States is vitally interested and in which the people of the United States are particularly interested. I refer to the question of war or peace.

As a propagandist outside the Cabinet and outside official life, Mr. Stimson's voice probably would not carry very much weight; but as Secretary of War, a member of the Cabinet, a high-ranking Government official to whom the people should look up, he would be in a powerful position to try to mold public sentiment in favor of his views, namely, to intervene and to take steps which he knows are steps which mean war.

Under those circumstances, as I have said, I cannot bring myself to vote for the confirmation of Mr. Stimson's nomination. I am not voting against him because he is a Republican. I am not voting against him because he has criticized every social advance which has been made in the past few years. I am not voting against him because he is 73 years of age, even though his duties as Secretary of War would be more arduous than those of members of the Supreme Court. However, I believe that, regardless of party, Members of the Senate who believe that we should not get into war ought to vote against confirmation of the nomination of a man who has constantly advocated steps to get us into the war.

Some time ago I said in a radio address that it is all right to talk about acts "short of war," but if one gets his shirt tail caught in the wringer he cannot pull it out if someone continues to turn the wringer. Consequently, I shall vote against confirming the nomination of Mr. Stimson, and I shall vote against confirming the nomination of Mr. Knox for the same reasons.

In a speech before a bankers' convention in the city of Grand Rapids, Mich., Colonel Knox said we should do everything to "keep the battle going." The "we" must refer to the people of the United States and the Government of the United States. What does he mean by "keeping the battle going" in Europe? Do the American people want to keep the battle going between any two governments of the world? Instead of trying to keep the battle going, our Government ought to be trying to bring about peace between nations.

Mr. Knox's whole attitude in his newspaper columns has been for doing practically the same things which are advocated by Mr. Stimson, although he has not been as bold about it as has Mr. Stimson.

I shall not vote against the nomination of Mr. Knox because he has criticized every single thing the President has stood for. I shall not vote against him because he has ridiculed Jim Farley. I shall not vote against him because he has ridiculed Secretary Hull and said he was weak. I shall not vote against him because he has ridiculed Secretary Perkins. I shall not vote against him because he has ridiculed the Secretary of Agriculture and every other Secretary. I shall not vote against him because he was a defeated candidate on the Republican ticket, who criticized in the most bitter terms everything the administration has done. He has criticized the administration more bitterly than have any of those who were sought to be purged in the last campaign because they did not go along 100 percent with the administration.

Never has any man criticized the President of the United States in such bitter terms as has Colonel Knox. I shall not vote against him even for that reason, although I do not agree with his bitter criticism. I think the tone of his criticism indicates that he is not fitted to guide the Navy of the United States in times of hysteria. He has denounced every single social reform which has been made; and now we find the new dealers clasping him to their bosom, although a few weeks ago, if one of us did not agree 100 percent with every speech, every suggestion, and every act of the President of the United States, it was thought that we ought to be purged and run out of the Democratic Party. We should be denounced as reactionaries, as having sold out to Wall Street. Now the new dealers have taken Colonel Knox to their bosom, and they ask everyone else to do the same thing. They love him, and say he is all right, because he wants to get us into the war.

I say the time has come when Senators, regardless of party affiliation, ought to have the courage and backbone to stand up and be counted. So far as I am concerned, I intend to vote against the nominations of both these men. As I say, I do not agree with their political philosophy, but that fact would not influence me. I have not agreed with the political philosophy of a great many persons. However, my vote is not governed by such considerations. I shall vote against them because of their attitude toward war. Ninety-eight percent of the American people want to keep this country out of war; and it will not be reassuring to the American people, or create unity in this country, to put these men in the Cabinet at a time when we ought to be trying to unify sentiment wholeheartedly back of the country and to build up a peace program in which the people of the country will have confidence.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I am most happy to have yielded to the Senator to place in the RECORD a very clear statement of what ought to be the point around which we should rally to determine the merits of the pending appointment. In my mind there is absolutely no doubt about Mr. Stimson; and I believe the same thing is true of Mr. Knox. They are ready to stick out the American "neck" farther than it has already been stuck out in involvement in the European conflict. Such a policy might very readily result ultimately in what Clay prophesied—the utter extinction of liberty from the face of this earth if we do not stay at home and mind our own business, of which we have so very much to mind.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. In addition to the point suggested by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] there is a question in my mind from another point of view as to the advisability of the nomination of Colonel Stimson. Much has been said of late with reference to good will. In my opinion, this administration has done much in the past 7 years to bring about good will in this hemisphere. Our business is in the Western Hemisphere, and we should devote our time to it. Considering the racial characteristics of the people whose good will we seek, I am wondering whether or not the appointment of Mr. Stimson would promote the good will which we so much desire. Knowing the official history and action of Colonel Stimson, I am wondering whether or not the countries to the south of us would actually accept our professions of good will, for, after all, actions speak louder than words. Knowing the racial characteristics of the people south of the border, it seems to me they would say, "Yes; we believe in the goodwill efforts of the Roosevelt administration; but what are we to think now, when we investigate the actions of Mr. Stimson, who has been appointed to deal with matters affecting Latin America?" I am wondering about the possible effect on the conference to be held at Habana within the near future, when the Latin-American countries begin to think about the past actions of a member of the President's Cabinet. I hope the new Secretary of War will cooperate with the President and Secretary of State in creating good will with Latin America.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, the Senator makes an important point about the possible reaction in the Latin-American Republics, whose friendship we are so anxious to retain. In a few minutes I shall deal at greater length with that subject, particularly Mr. Stimson's record in Nicaragua.

Mr. Stimson very obviously does more than detest the very idea of trying to practice a neutrality that seeks to fortify our own country against being drawn into other people's wars. I do not need today to argue the theories which Mr. Stimson has enunciated on the question of neutrality. I am rather inclined to hew close to the line to which the President of the United States hewed so closely for so long a time when he defended the cause of isolation on the ground that isolation was nothing more than an effort to save ourselves, to isolate ourselves against war. But Mr. Stimson thinks that the question of going to war is, on certain occasions, a comparatively minor consideration and thus expressed himself in 1935.

The proceedings of the American Society of International Law at its conference in 1935 at page 121 reveal a portion of Mr. Stimson's speech. Obviously he did some editing of it after it was made and before it was printed, but, as it is printed, I quote from it to the Senate:

> In the first place, when the average man speaks of neutrality he often confuses it with impartiality. Of course, a greater mistake could hardly be made.
> When a serious war breaks out anywhere in the world we are likely to be gravely hurt whatever we do. Whether we shall allow ourselves to be drawn into the actual fighting or not, is then of comparatively minor importance. All we can do then is to consider whether the additional injury which will be done us by entering the war will offset the evils which will be done to us by some of the combatants if we do not step forward and defend ourselves against them. The theory that we can save ourselves entirely by isolation is today an economic fantasy, worthy of the ostrich who thinks he is hidden when he buries his head in the sand.

Those who heard this address tell me that this line was added, but it does not appear in the printed proceedings—

Fortunately he is so poised—

Meaning the isolationist—

Fortunately he is so poised that one can conveniently kick him in the appropriate place.

Mr. President, I submit that this and other evidence that has been laid before the Senate clearly reveal that here is a man utterly impatient with any cause that is contrary to an immediate readiness to step into foreign wars whenever someone may think that ultimately our own defense and our own liberty may be at stake.

Mr. Stimson has said that, as Secretary of War, he is not to be a policymaker. That will not matter the least to Mr. Stimson; he makes policy without authority. He has done it and done it handily before. At a time such as this when some men are espousing a foreign policy that finds them shaking their fists at every power upon the earth though they have nothing in their fists to fight back with if that shaking should invite a fight, it seems to me we ought to have in the Cabinet less of the kind of attitude which is so largely contributing to our increased need for more and ever more national defense. In an hour when we ought to be reaching out and inviting and winning good will, instead we are slapping and punching wherever a disliked nose may put itself in evidence. After all, however, little as we may like some portions of this earth and some peoples and some leaderships, we are going to have to get along with them, whether we like it or not. We have always had to do that, more or less, and we are going to have to continue to do it throughout the life of our Nation, I presume, and we will get along much better with this world if we will conduct ourselves along lines in keeping with a policy which calls upon us more largely to mind our own business.

Referring now to Mr. Stimson's ability to shape foreign policy without authority, I desire to read to the Senate an article by an author and lecturer, Mr. Lawrence Dennis, published by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate under date of July 7 this year. I should like to add that Mr. Lawrence Dennis was formerly in the United States Diplomatic Service in Nicaragua at a very interesting period, at a time when Mr. Stimson was moving without authority. I shall read the article in its entirety.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know whether the Senator was a Member of the Senate at that particular time, but I fought on the floor of the Senate for a considerable period of time to get the marines out of Nicaragua. Finally an election was held in Nicaragua, and I flew there shortly after the inauguration of Mr. Hoover in this country. I happened to be the first civilian who had flown there. We had always thought of the Nicaraguans as a great many others had, as being the same kind of people as we are and having the same high ideals. The real reason why we sent the marines into Nicaragua—and Mr. Dennis was in Nicaragua at the time—was that the financial interests in the city of New York wanted them there to protect them from the dictator who was in power.

I may say that after the new President and the new crowd, the so-called progressives and liberals, came into power, the element that had wanted to get the marines out of Nicaragua, the new President of Nicaragua said to me, "Senator, we want to keep the marines here." I said to him, "You and those associated with you have been fighting the marines and wanting them to get out." He said, "That is right, but now we have won, we want to keep the marines here, because if we do not the other crowd will overthrow us."

We will have to be careful and not to let the very same thing take place in other Central and South American countries. We like to think of the South American countries as being democracies like our own. That is not true, of course; there are dictators in many of those countries, and when something happens and an attempt is made to overthrow one of those dictators, he will probably come here and say to the United States Government, "For pity's sake send marines down here or send an army here and keep me in power." We want to be careful that we do not get into the position of trying to protect dictators in South America who may run over their people and persecute them. They may say, "The Japs are going to overthrow us, the Italians are going to overthrow us, the Russians are going to overthrow us, or the Nazis or the Fascists or someone else," and they may call upon us to go down and try to maintain them in power. Perhaps we ought to do that, but I say we are not going to make friends of South Americans by interfering too much in their affairs. I want to see nazi-ism, communism, and all the other "isms" kept out of there, but I do not want to have the United States take those countries over, because it would only involve us in difficulty and trouble; it would not bring any trade and would not do us any good from an economic standpoint, as our action in sending marines to Nicaragua, to Haiti, and other places has distinctly shown. Yet, if we follow the policy of Mr. Stimson, we will be sending marines there on the slightest provocation.

Mr. NYE. I thank the Senator, especially for his contribution as respects Mr. Dennis as an authority. This very article bears immediately upon the pending appointment, and I am going to read it in its entirety. It is as follows:

INTERVENTIONIST WITH A RECORD

(By Lawrence Dennis, author and lecturer; formerly United States Diplomatic Service)

A dogmatic man of 73 may be expected to run true to his record and convictions. Henry L. Stimson's major dogma through the years has been that the United States should not miss opportunities to intervene in foreign wars. And now he is Secretary for War.

The chief episodes in Mr. Stimson's interventionist record are Nicaragua in 1927 and Japan in 1931. In Nicaragua he had a success, in Japan a failure. His success in Nicaragua made him Secretary of State and cost the lives of 116 United States Marines and of some 3,000 Nicaraguans in a 4-year war which took an American expeditionary force of over 5,000 marines and bluejackets to fight. His failure to get Britain and the United States into a war with Japan in 1931 doubtless saved tens of thousands of American and British lives. American patriots, mothers, wives, and children should now be praying for the failure of "Wrong Horse Harry's" next design for American intervention in a foreign broil. Germany, Italy, and Japan will be tougher nuts than Nicaraguans for the American fighting man, though not for Stimson's legalistic mind and crusading (in a Washington desk chair) spirit.

Mr. Stimson as a legalist, a moralist, and a propagandist of commercial international interests, stands for all that has been most foolish and proved most disastrous in foreign relations for both America and Britain over the past quarter of a century. It was this ideology that prevented a realistic policy in Mexico after the overthrow of Diaz in 1910, with results costly to our relations there. It was this same ideology that got us into war in April 1917 and got Britain and France into war in September 1939.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it not a fact that when Colonel Stimson was Secretary of State, very precipitate and ill-advised actions of his with regard to a great republic in South America, namely, Brazil, earned him the soubriquet of "Wrong Horse Harry," which he still carries?

Mr. NYE. The Senator is quite right.

I return to a reading of Mr. Dennis' article:

Mr. Stimson was of no use in carrying out the military phases of the Nicaragua intervention. A tired old attorney who can work only with legal papers and only for a few hours at a time, he will now be of little use in connection with any purely military problems America may have to face as a result of his interventionist policy. But, for committing American soldiers to fighting on foreign shores without a congressional declaration of war, for tricking Congress and the American people into a war they don't want, and for making out a case for such intervention based on misrepresentation of facts and disregard for the plainest imperatives of the Constitution, no better legal mind or moral propagandist could have been mobilized by our war-minded President. Moreover, his powerful personal claque, carefully cultivated in each of the 48 States, has long been accustomed to indorse by phone, wire, cable, mail, and political pressure the plans of "Mr. Secretary."

This writer was United States chargé d'affaires in Nicaragua from August 1926 to the beginning of 1927. I am, therefore, qualified by the possession of much unpublished information to discuss both Mr. Stimson as a diplomat and Mr. Stimson's interventionist record in Nicaragua. In the 8 months of 1926–27, during which I was in charge of the American Legation in Managua, I carried out with full approval the instructions of our State Department to get Adolfo Diaz designated President of Nicaragua so Washington could recognize him; I presided over an unsuccessful peace conference held aboard an American warship between the Managua Government and the rebels, who called themselves the legal government; and I sent the inaccurate telegram, as instructed by Washington, saying that American marines were needed to protect American lives and property in Nicaragua.

On my return to Washington in early April 1927 I was at once rushed into the palsied presence of old Secretary Kellogg and his hard-boiled Under Secretary of State, R. E. Olds, both of whom complimented me on my handling of the Nicaraguan situation. But they said that the Nicaraguan developments had become so grave that it required the talents of the biggest man they could find. Accordingly, President Coolidge had drafted Mr. Stimson to go to Nicaragua as his personal representative to make peace—something Admiral Latimer with the Special Service Squadron and I with the Legation had failed to achieve. The admiral and I, when asked our opinions, had told Washington that our only alternatives were: (1) To let the Nicaraguans fight it out, with every probability that the rebels would win and oust our puppet President; or (2) to take over all Nicaragua with a force of 5,000 marines, which we said would probably involve a long-drawn-out war similar to our 4-year pacification of the Philippines after the Spanish-American War. Washington turned from its professional fighting men and diplomat to the high-priced Wall Street corporation lawyer who was supposed to possess a magic formula for making peace with legal words and legal contracts.

Stimson reached Nicaragua in early May 1927. Under a Marine-arranged truce, he entered at once into negotiations with President Diaz and Rebel General Moncada. The latter saw no reason to quit with victory in sight. Stimson told him that Washington, having recognized Diaz, could not allow our picked man to be ousted. Moncada quickly came to the point. If the honorable special emissary of the White House would put it in writing, so Moncada could prove to his generals that American armed forces would be used against the rebels to force compliance with the Stimson terms, he, Moncada, would lay down his arms and try to get his men to do likewise, fully realizing the futility of a little Nicaraguan Army defying the mighty United States.

Stimson, to avoid a return to Washington in failure, reluctantly put this threat in writing. When he advised Washington by cable in a code message that he was doing so, Secretary Kellogg shot back instructions not to do it. But Stimson had already proceeded and, going over Kellogg's head to President Coolidge, was upheld. Meanwhile, just after the ultimatum had been delivered, against Kellogg's instructions, the State Department permanent officials had publicly denied its delivery, assuming that Stimson had not exceeded his authority.

Once Moncada and his generals had signed on the Stimson dotted line, the Wall Street attorney wired back to a waiting America that he had brought peace to Nicaragua. Shortly thereafter, one of Moncada's generals, Sandino by name, refused to lay down his arms to Yankee imperialism, as he called it, with a resulting loss of the 3,000 Nicaraguan and 116 American lives. But this minor sequel, engaging over 5,000 American naval forces in the Nicaraguan jungle for several years, was not allowed to tarnish the luster of Stimson's peace. Sandino was merely labeled a bandit. Actually, he was an exalted, if foolish, patriot and no more a bandit than George Washington or Garibaldi.

Stimson had no legal authority and President Coolidge had not a shadow of constitutional right, without a congressional declaration of war or sanction, to authorize Stimson to pledge the armed forces of the United States to a war on Nicaraguans on Nicaraguan soil in enforcement of Stimson's ultimatum. Several Senators, including Borah, said publicly that the President of the United States was properly impeachable for this excess of authority. Stimson, as Secretary of State, made out a Philadelphia lawyer's case for his Presidential client. The difficulty was met largely by euphemisms and name calling. It was not a war but cooperation with the Nicaraguans to put down banditry. Sandino was not a rebel but a bandit.

With that precedent, how easy it would be now for Mr. Stimson to call an American expeditionary force to Europe a mere matter of cooperating with the British in stamping out the banditry of Hitler et al. Stimson will be no good for the military aspects of the enterprise, but his record proves him an expert at putting over a foreign war by the President without congressional authorization. He can put it over in a legal, propaganda, and moral way. The task of putting it over in a practical way, of course, will fall to younger fighting men and executives, the age limit even for generals being 64.

Mr. President, I submit that information of that nature, coming from such splendid authority, rather well portrays what we may expect from an administration of the Office of Secretary of War by Mr. Stimson, the kind of administration we may expect at a time when we ought to be praying for the directly opposite sort. This is an hour, we must agree, that commands of America her utmost in providing an adequate national defense. Not only is this call upon us by reason of what is alleged to be a backwardness on the part of Congress in affording defense through the years; the largest demand upon us today for national defense grows out of a conduct of foreign policy that has been insulting to every power upon the earth, and that might ultimately invite need for a larger defense than is ours.

This is a time to be asking for the filling of such places as there are in the President's official family by men who are avowedly determined that this country is not going to be drawn into other people's wars; certainly not by men of the caliber of Mr. Stimson, who has found so many fine reasons why we ought to go to war.

NILE SHAW AND EDGAR C. BARDIN

As in legislative session,

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2018) for the relief of Nile Shaw and Edgar C. Bardin, which were, on page 1, line 3, to strike out "is" and insert "be, and he is hereby"; in line 6, to strike out "$3,626.50" and insert "$2,000"; and in line 7, to strike out "$3,107.35" and insert "$2,000."

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

FACILITIES FOR ELEMENTARY-SCHOOL PURPOSES

As in legislative session,

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 29) to authorize the use of certain facilities of national parks and national monuments for elementary-school purposes, which were, in line 5, after the word "in", to insert "Indian reservations"; in line 10, after the word "such", to insert "Indian reservations"; and to amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize the use of certain facilities of Indian reservations, national parks, and national monuments for elementary-school purposes."

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

HENRY L. STIMSON

The Senate resumed the consideration of the nomination of Henry L. Stimson, of New York, to be Secretary of War.

Mr. BONE obtained the floor.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I feel that we should have a quorum present, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Andrews	Ellender	Lucas	Sheppard
Ashurst	Frazier	Lundeen	Shipstead
Austin	George	McCarran	Slattery
Bailey	Gerry	McKellar	Smathers
Barbour	Gibson	McNary	Smith
Barkley	Gillette	Maloney	Stewart
Bilbo	Green	Mead	Taft
Bone	Guffey	Miller	Thomas, Idaho
Bridges	Gurney	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Hale	Murray	Thomas, Utah
Burke	Harrison	Neely	Tobey
Byrd	Hatch	Norris	Townsend
Byrnes	Hayden	Nye	Tydings
Capper	Herring	O'Mahoney	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hill	Overton	Van Nuys
Chandler	Holman	Pepper	Wagner
Chavez	Holt	Pittman	Walsh
Clark, Idaho	Hughes	Radcliffe	Wheeler
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Calif.	Reed	White
Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Reynolds	Wiley
Danaher	King	Russell
Davis	La Follette	Schwartz

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, it is not an easy task to voice opposition to the confirmation of any citizen, certainly as distinguished a citizen as either of the gentlemen whose names are now before us. They have been selected by the President, and it is upon rare occasions that this body rejects such a nomination. Recently we have done it in the case of judicial appointments; therefore it is not a novel procedure in the United States Senate.

It is not an easy task, but rather a somewhat embarrassing one, to object, and therefore one must search his own conscience and his own attitude of mind to be sure that he finds a sound and legitimate reason for such an objection. I rise to voice my objection to confirmation of Colonel Knox, and I base it upon what I consider sound and tenable grounds. I have not reached this attitude of mind without mature reflection.

The Constitution of the United States imposes upon the Senate of the United States the duty, however unpleasant, of passing judgment upon men who are nominated by the President for appointment to various high public offices. Whether we like it or not we cannot, we may not, escape the performance of that duty. It being a constitutional duty, it has more significance than many people attach to it, because it actually makes the Senate a part of the appointing power. Brilliant and able men have long since reached that conclusion, and I think it is one which may not easily be challenged. If the Constitution does not mean that in practical effect, the language should be stricken from the Constitution as an utterly futile gesture.

Under our representative system, when a man is elected or appointed to an office, we elect or appoint his viewpoint. When a man elected or appointed to an office undertakes to discharge the duties of that office, he necessarily brings to bear upon the discharge of his duties his own judgment about what should be done or what should not be done in given circumstances.

So long as God Almighty makes men what they are, that utterly human personal element will of necessity enter into the picture. If a man has certain beliefs which he honestly cherishes he would be untrue to himself, and he would be a reproach to the man who appointed him, knowing those views, unless he attempted to carry them into execution.

It is ridiculous to suggest that a member of the Cabinet of the President of the United States has no influence. If that were true, the Cabinet ought to be abolished. I think it must have been in the minds and the hearts of the framers of our form of government, and in the hearts and minds of those who have perpetuated it, that the men whom the President names to his Cabinet should be something more than mere automatons. It has always been my sincere conviction that they were named by the President to be advisers; to sit with him in a confidential advisory capacity, and to bring to bear upon the problems of that terrifying office their own sound judgment; to try to steer the Presidency itself upon a course that would not either wreck that high office or injure the country. Believing that, I could not in good conscience as a Senator, as a Member of this body, vote for or against confirmation of a nominee without trying to understand his viewpoint, and if I did not share that viewpoint, and I believed that it was a dangerous viewpoint, I would be a recreant Senator if I did not express by my vote my own honest conviction upon that subject. If that is not true, then the vote itself is an idle gesture.

I confess myself much in the dark over some of the nuances and shadings of this particular picture.

I have read many editorial observations by Colonel Knox, and as a labor of love I have tried to follow the editorial policy of his great newspaper.

I have observed over recent years that Colonel Knox has repeatedly indicted the Democratic Party and its representatives as enemies of good government, in their legislative program; as having set out upon a course coldly, purposely calculated to undo most of the worthwhile things in this Republic. Personally I have felt that his criticisms were not as restrained as they should have been. Only time will prove to posterity whether his observations are right and his dire prophesies are to be realized. Perhaps we are too close to the picture to dare sit in judgment on the pattern of argument he has woven. But it is sufficient to say that he has indicted in language that sizzles practically every major objective of this administration. He has without restraint indicted it as a perversion of good government. Were we to accept that appraisal of our own acts we would have to admit that we were utterly wrong from the very beginning, and that the administration of which we are a part, is an enemy of the Republic. I am not prepared to do that, Mr. President.

When I voted for the utilities bill in 1935 I believed in it.

When I voted for other legislative proposals, I did so because I believed in them, and if I had not I would have voted the other way, even though I should have been the only Senator to have so voted.

Some very fine and purposeful party leaders have upon occasion rather sharply criticized certain votes of our brethren on this side of the aisle because those votes did not square with the current program of the New Deal. I am not going to amplify that statement, for everyone here understands precisely what I am talking about. I am not going to sit in judgment myself upon any of the votes or the acts of my fellow Senators. I am not sufficiently worthy to entitle me to do that. But every member of this body reserves unto himself the right to feel in his own heart that the vote of his brother was perhaps not exactly the right vote.

But some of the criticism has been sharp and pointed. Perhaps the erring brother merely forsook for the moment the straight and narrow pathway of party rectitude, for the purpose of dalliance with some sort of political faith the description of which would be forbidden on the floor.

But here we are confronted, all of us, with the necessity of taking into the innermost bosom of the party family a man who has indicted us, and even indicted our Republican brethren on the other side who strayed from the pathway of pure and undefiled republicanism, because they were misled by Democrats into voting for some of these New Deal propositions.

A number of Members of this body have, in a moment of weakness, been inclined to talk to me and tell me of their bewilderment, to tell me of their inability to understand why we should cheerfully, kindly, or otherwise, indict one of our own brothers for occasionally straying from the fold, but proceed without a moment's hesitation to accept as one of the pinnacle figures in the administration a man who has bitterly assailed everything we have done in language which I can in no wise employ because of my limited vocabulary. I should like to describe the colonel's perfervid editorials upon New Deal proposals, but I can find no words in my vocabulary, either singly or in combination, that by the grace of inflection or poetic license, can serve my purpose, and therefore I shall not undertake the task. Now Democrats will proceed to bless this bitter excoriation of themselves, if they vote to confirm their critic. No form of self-indictment could be stronger.

Let me repeat that I can have no objection to these two gentlemen on personal grounds, because I know nothing to the personal discredit of either of them. They are probably as fine and high type private citizens as you might find in the Republic. I content myself with repeating what I said in the beginning, that when they are appointed to this office you appoint their viewpoint, and therefore it becomes important to understand that viewpoint. If the viewpoint itself can lead them into the commission of some act, or lead them to advise the President of the United States to adopt a course which in itself might be disastrous, then it becomes vitally important to know what sort of an adviser sits at the elbow of the President. Obviously these nominees are not going to agree with anything that the President has in mind as a domestic program, and I cannot imagine, nor can I imagine that anyone else by the wildest flight of his imagination can possibly contemplate that the President had in mind an adviser on domestic problems when he appointed either Colonel Knox or General or Colonel Stimson.

Therefore the President must have had in mind some other purpose. What that is is locked within his breast, and is his own business, and I am not going to challenge it or indict it. As a co-partner in the constitutional process of appointment, I am concerned with what these men think about this international situation. What Colonel Knox thinks has been expressed in his statements, and as a man thinketh in his heart so is he. He would be a peculiar individual, he would not be worth the powder to blow him across the street unless he would translate his own honest impulses into action the moment he was in a position to do so.

Mr. President, above all things in this world right now I fear the impact of war upon this Republic. It is a deadly fear that gnaws at my vitals, because I believe and I know that if this country ever enters another great world war the impact of that war upon our social and economic system will be utterly disastrous. So I summon to my aid a few witnesses, who feel as I do.

I am doing this because I think the supreme question now before the American people is whether or not this country shall prepare fully to defend itself and to remain out of the war, because we cannot win a war any more. Total war drags down the alleged and so-called victor into the same indescribable ruin which overwhelms the vanquished.

David Lloyd George, who is soon to become a member of the British Cabinet, said only a short time ago:

> The nations of Europe are today feverishly engaged in preparing themselves for the final suicide of war—for that insensate carnage for which they are headed. No calm reasoning, no sane reflection, seems able to deflect them from the path of death.
> Statesmen of these countries are slipping helplessly and inevitably down the slope which will land their people in grim final disaster.

On May 15, 1938, Secretary of War Harry Woodring, who is now to be supplanted by one of the gentlemen whom I am discussing, had this to say before the Kansas Bankers' Association:

> For the world to continue to rely solely on a constant expansion of its military forces and a constant addition to its military might can lead only to one conclusion—war and social revolution.

I do not want anyone to assume that I am either adopting or rejecting these suggestions. I am merely putting them in the RECORD so that posterity—if none of us is sufficiently interested—may read what these authorities have to say regarding war.

Here is an editorial from the Washington Evening Star of December 26, 1936, written at a time when there was a little more calm and dispassionate contemplation of the possibilities pregnant in the present situation. The Star said this editorially:

> The world has struggled—indeed, it is still struggling—out of the morass of the last Great War. Another such conflict will wipe civilization, as it is known today, from the face of the earth.

When we were conducting the munitions investigation in this body, Eugene Grace, of the Bethlehem Steel Co., came before our committee. At that time I made it a practice to ask everyone situated somewhat as Mr. Grace is situated in the world of business what he thought would happen to this country if we should participate in another great world war. Mr. Grace had this to say in answer to that question—and let me say parenthetically that it was substantially the answer of J. Pierpont Morgan, former Secretary of War Pat Hurley, and a dozen other men, including some of the du Ponts who appeared before the committee.

On February 26, 1935, Mr. Grace said—

> It is unthinkable to me that we must subject civilization to another conflict similar to the one we had back in 1914 to 1918. Just an anticipation of it is too horrible to even think of.

On January 15, 1938, Herbert Hoover, in a public statement, warned that American democracy might not survive another war, and that we would emerge from such a struggle in despotism itself.

On August 4, 1937, William Dodd, American Ambassador to Germany, in a public statement said that another world war would probably destroy civilization.

On March 10, 1938, a little more than 2 years ago, Secretary of War Woodring, in an address to members of the Commercial Club in Chicago, stated that another world war would "prove universally disastrous—to victor, to vanquished, and to neutral," and that such a war would endanger civilization itself.

In an editorial on January 26, 1938, the Washington Post, referring to the disordered condition of the world, pointed out that the winds of disaster blow stronger and stronger and that if world chaos spreads, with its inevitable concomitant and increasing barbarism, no nation on earth and no people will be spared.

On September 8, 1936, Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, in an open statement, said that a new general war would set loose forces beyond control—forces which might easily bring about virtual destruction of modern political thought and all its achievements, and possibly a veritable shattering of civilization itself.

On March 22, 1939, Francis B. Sayre, Assistant Secretary of State, in a radio address, stated that a war to defend democracy, even though victorious, may end by crushing it.

On March 19, 1937, Secretary Cordell Hull, commenting on the armament programs then under way in various parts of the world, stated that in his judgment such programs would lead to an economic catastrophe in the near future unless they were abandoned.

Mr. President, I have trespassed upon the time of the Senate to read these things because I want the Senate to understand that the fear which I entertain in my own heart is not an illusory thing. It is a very real thing. It is very real, not only in the hearts and minds of the writers and statesmen whom I have quoted but in the hearts of millions of Americans who will be the inevitable victims of another war. Therefore, it becomes important to know whether or not there are any trends present which may in themselves lead to incidents or events which are a part and parcel of the easy pathway to war.

Five years ago in this body I took advantage of the good nature of the Senate to discuss at great length what is commonly called the doctrine of "freedom of the seas." We abandoned that doctrine in a statutory way in the past 5 years, and I think we did it because we were convinced that it is the most dangerous doctrine this Government could embrace in these troubled times. It is the doctrine which says that neutral nations—all nations—have access to all parts of the seas as public highways. It is a groundwork doctrine of international law. Every text writer on the subject has seen fit to expatiate at great length on this doctrine of freedom of the seas. It is the theory that any man may use the seas to ship anything he pleases to any country on earth, even though he might run the gantlet of a cordon of battleships, a submarine blockade, or, in these latter days, a blockade from the air. Upon this floor time after time in recent years we have heard able Senators say that the United States went to war in 1917 because Germany disregarded our rights as a neutral and sunk our vessels, many of them without warning, and that our neutral rights were thus horribly violated and outraged. That has repeatedly been asserted as the leading cause of our entrance into the war. Our ships in war zones were sunk, and in we went.

Do Senators doubt that that was the motivating cause? If so, we shall have to expunge from the records of the Senate speech after speech of its most able and distinguished Members; and I am not prepared to suggest that, because they were not deceiving the American people. They have properly given that cause as a justification for our entry into the war. In 1916 and 1917 the theory was that an American businessman had a right to send his vessel across the seas to neutral ports and to have free access to the seas without being blown out of the water by a German submarine. When Germany denied us the exercise of that right, that in itself was a justification for war, when the ships were sunk and American citizens went to a watery grave on ships which flew the American flag at their mastheads.

I do not think any Member of this body will take exception to that postulate. So when we calmly, coldly, objectively, and dispassionately surveyed the whole picture, after reading the innumerable books which have been written on the subject by men who have with microscopic accuracy examined the whole picture, we concluded that the doctrine of freedom of the seas was the most bloody and dangerous doctrine any nation ever attempted to espouse. Why? Because in modern times no nation under the sun has ever exhibited a shred of respect for international law when its back was to the wall and it was fighting for the preservation of its national life. If any Senator present knows of any modern nation which has ever evinced any respect for international law in time of war, I wish he would now rise and point it out to me; for I have searched the books with passionate earnestness to find a single case in which any great nation struggling for its life in a bloody war did anything other than utterly cast into outer darkness every shred, every jot, and every tittle of international law. So to say that we may safely rely on international law is to say that we can build a permanent foundation of national well-being on a thing as illusory and phantomlike as the vagrant winds of the heavens.

We protested to Great Britain. We protested to Germany. What did they do? For generations, international law had set up certain categories of materials which were considered noncontraband; but England promptly junked them, and put 300 items on her contraband list, and said, "If you ship any one of them, even to nearby neutrals, we will stop your vessels, impound them, put prize crews on them, and take them into our ports under convoy of cruisers." She did so. Germany was unable to do so because she was encircled with the iron band of England's Navy. She said, "We cannot do that, but we will stop them in another way. We will blow them out of the water."

It was a bloody game while it lasted, but such a ghastly performance could go only so far without inciting war. And war came because our rights as a neutral under international law were flouted and our property and the lives of our citizens destroyed. And all this under so-called international law.

That picture led us to forego certain rights in war zones, and we did this by passing the so-called neutrality law with its cash-and-carry provision. If any Senator has the desire further to pursue this particular phase of American history, I suggest that he read Senator McAdoo's book, Crowded Years, in which he describes what a glorious game blockade running came to be. It was like rum running or dope peddling. A man would obtain possession of some old hulk, some old "hooker" which had been lying in a harbor for years, with her hull rusted and her engines almost ready to drop through the bottom. He would give her a little dab of paint, put a little oil on the engines, and start out. The first trip across paid for her. Two or three trips across and he was a rich man. Why? Because tonnage rates zoomed up to stratospheric heights. Of course, no sane insurance company would write insurance on that kind of dangerous traffic, but good old Uncle Sam, who by that time had lost his shirt and was getting ready to lose all the rest of his raiment, rushed to the rescue of the boys in this dangerous traffic, and put on the statute books a law like that put on the books the other day, the War Risk Insurance Act of 1914, which said, "Uncle Sam will underwrite all losses in this business."

Let the boats be sunk; the Government Treasury is illimitable and will foot the bills. What happened? When ships went down and word came that Americans had gone to a watery grave, you know what happened. Millions of Americans, then not having before them the vast bloody panorama of history of the last 40 years, said, "We will stop it if we have to go to war; we will not longer tolerate this violation of our rights; we will not suffer having Americans 'sunk without trace' on the high seas." And to war we went.

We fought at least two great wars over this same doctrine of freedom of the seas. When we got through with those wars there was not a line in the treaties of peace resulting therefrom, which laid at rest this vexatious and dangerous issue, although it had been the real, fundamental cause of these two costly and bloody wars. That is how smart our diplomats were. That is the oblique fashion in which diplomats shape international law, which is, in part, made up of treaties, but which is as illusory as anything that can be imagined, with no substance and no reality. The only place it is real is on the pages of books written by men who have seen fit to describe its application, if ever it is applicable. It disappears in wartime, when it is most needed.

I want to go back and call attention to a published statement from the distinguished chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee on May 3 of this year:

> Chairman SOL BLOOM, of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, said today that the new neutrality act has kept America out of war, averted loss of American life and property, and maintained commerce.
> In a formal statement on the 6-month anniversary of President Roosevelt's signing of the revised act which lifted the arms embargo, Representative BLOOM said it also had permitted the United States to keep its national defense modernized without the necessity of spending huge sums for equipment—

And so forth.

* * * It was said—

> that the United States was unwise in withdrawing its ships from embattled areas. We were accused of abandoning the freedom of the seas. The wisdom of the act in this respect has been demonstrated. Other neutral nations have sent ships into the war zones and these ships have been sunk, with great loss of life. The United States has not lost a single ship. American citizens have not perished in attacks upon American ships. This fact alone vindicates the wisdom of the Neutrality Act.

If the Senate will bear with me I will go through the record. I call attention to what the President of the United States himself had to say about the doctrine of freedom of the seas. He said it indirectly through Secretary Hull. To a message of July 14, 1939, which the President sent to the Congress, he appended a statement on peace and neutrality by the Secretary of State, Cordell Hull. Among the statements of Secretary Hull, which the President endorsed, is the following:

> Furthermore, under the proposals that have been made American nationals would be divested of all right, title, and interest in these and other commodities before they leave our shores, and American citizens and ships would be kept out of danger zones.
> Controversies which would involve the United States are far more likely to arise from the entrance of American ships or American citizens in the danger zones, or through the sinking on the high seas of American vessels carrying commodities other than those covered by the arms embargo. In the recommendations formulated by the Executive as a substitute for the present legislation it was especially urged that provisions be adopted which would exclude American nationals and American ships from zones where real danger to their safety might exist, and which would divest goods of American ownership, thereby minimizing to the fullest extent the danger of American involvement.

That is plain enough, is it not? I desire to emphasize the last line and will repeat it:

> Thereby minimizing to the fullest extent the danger of American involvement.

Mr. President, the truth of that statement has been demonstrated, it seems to me, to the satisfaction of every thinking human being. It is because our ships did not go into war zones and because we did not rely on so-called international law, which in reality has no existence, that this country so far has been kept out of war.

Five years ago I stood on this floor for 3 or 4 hours and emphasized what international law would mean as a provoker of war. To rely on it would be to go back to the formula of freedom of the seas, a doctrine whose history is literally written in pages of blood. It is a doctrine that dragged America into war twice. I could name, if I had the time, many volumes written by the most brilliant minds in the western world pointing out that defense of the doctrine of the freedom of the seas dragged America into these wars. Listen to Admiral

Sims, who commanded our fleet during the World War. He was the man who went over to Britain and supervised and superintended our entire naval operations during that bloody conflict. He was speaking of the traffic that led men to insist upon this Government underwriting their ventures through Government insurance and encouraging them to engage in every way in a traffic wholly lawful under international law, which we abandoned to that extent by our neutrality law.

Once in a while we hear some publicist say that anti-war folk have suggested that munition makers dragged us into the World War. It was general traffic, whether it was munitions, wheat, cotton, or what not, that got us into that war. It was the destruction of American lives on ships flying the American flag and operating in war zones, that got America into the war. If that is not true, then, we will have to unwrite all the history of the World War. Referring to the situation confronting this country in 1916, Admiral Sims said:

> Thus the enormous pressure of the golden stream of war profits made us insist upon our right to make money out of the vital needs of nations fighting for their lives, and to insist upon being protected in this trade.

He added:

> The point of the whole business is this: We cannot keep out of war and at the same time enforce the freedom of the seas—and that is the right to make profits out of countries in a death struggle. If a war arises, we must therefore choose between two courses, between great profits with grave risks of war, on the one hand, or smaller profits and less risk, on the other.

He was talking at that time about American ships carrying this general commerce. The President of the United States, and the Congress, being realists, and thoroughly dry behind the ears, decided to hereafter keep American ships out of this sort of business so far as the war zones were concerned. Thus the so-called cash-and-carry idea was adopted which was the wisest and sanest provision which this body ever wrote into law, for it has so far been the great bulwark that has kept America from being plunged again into a bloody conflict, through loss of ships.

Last year in the Merry-Go-Round column, there appeared a story about Mr. O'CONNOR, a Representative from Montana, going down to see the President, and Mr. O'CONNOR is quoted as asking the President, "How can you reconcile repeal of the embargo with keeping this country out of war?"

I now read the brief quotation; it is very interesting. If it is not accurate, if it does not actually quote the President, it certainly "ties in" with his own statement which he sent to us, which adopted the statement of Secretary Hull and which he endorsed.

> "But, Mr. President," asked O'CONNOR, "how can you reconcile repeal of the embargo with keeping this country out of war?"
> The President's answer to this was another question. "Jim, what do you think got us into the last war?"
> "As I see it, two things were responsible. Entangling credit alliances and the sinking of our ships."
> "Very well," retorted Roosevelt. "The neutrality bill guards against the sinking of our ships by excluding them from combat areas, and the Senate has banned credits through an amendment."

I should hesitate to use that sort of a quotation unless it were verified by the President, except for the fact that the President himself has put the stamp of approval upon that doctrine by O. K.'ing the statement of Secretary Hull.

I now quote Mr. Raymond Clapper on May 7 of this year. I am only going to read a few lines of this article. He said, in one of his articles:

> When Germany tried to exclude our ships from the danger zone in the first World War, we went into the war. This time we voluntarily imposed an even more severe restriction upon ourselves in the belief that it would minimize the danger of our becoming involved.

Let me digress to say that that is precisely what the President says through Secretary Hull, to the effect that we have completely, and to the greatest extent possible, minimized the possibility of our getting into war.

Again quoting Mr. Clapper:

> Whatever may come to pass, the Neutrality Act would seem to have justified its purpose thus far. Shipping lines may have lost some profitable war business. Yet most of the displaced ships have gone into service on other runs. And up to now no American ship has been sunk. Why? Because the seas are safe for neutrals? No. Neutrals have had more ships sunk than the British, although not as much in tonnage. More than 200 neutral ships have been sunk. The reason none of them was an American ship was because our Neutrality Act kept American ships out of danger zones.
> Not only have American ships been spared. American lives have been spared. Except for the Athenia, sunk west-bound the night war was declared, Americans have been safe—largely because under the Neutrality Act we have not permitted Americans to travel on belligerent ships except by special permission.
> We may not continue to be so fortunate, yet that is the record up to now. And the war is 8 months old.
> Consider the situation when the first World War was just 9 months old.

Let me digress at this point to say that this war is, I think, now between 8 and 9 months old, so Mr. Clapper's application of facts is applicable.

To resume:

> Twenty-five years ago, on May 7, 1915, the Lusitania went down. Read Walter Millis in The Road To War. Of 159 American passengers aboard, 124 were lost. Besides munitions, destined for England, the Lusitania carried 129 children, of whom 94 went down. Americans included sightseers, passengers bound for Europe to see the fun.
> That tragedy set off American agitation for going into the war. Successive incidents increased the cry for war. The Wilson administration defended the right of American citizens to travel on belligerent ships. High officials here may have had a conviction that it was necessary for the United States to go into the first World War to save the British Empire. But the case for war gained its popular support through American indignation over the loss of American lives in submarine sinkings.
> Thanks to the Neutrality Act, the issue is being kept this time to the fundamental question. It is not complicated by mass fury over the loss of American lives in European waters.
> No nation should go into war except upon the clear ground of national self-interest. It may be more difficult to take this Nation into war without the aid of inflammatory incidents to arouse popular passion. But the absence of such incidents, thanks largely to the Neutrality Act, gives us time to think. If the case for intervention cannot stand on its own feet before the American people, well-informed and intelligent as they are, then it can scarcely be a sufficiently conclusive case to warrant the sacrifices that war requires.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BONE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. When the Senator mentions the Lusitania, it may be well to remember that when the war broke out the British liner Lusitania became a British auxiliary cruiser, on their naval list; yet she was permitted to carry passengers, including American passengers, though she was an auxiliary cruiser. It may be well to remember, too, that she was a British ship, though most of our fellow citizens seem to think the Lusitania was an American ship; and we find that impression in conversation on the streets today.

Mr. BONE. I realize that that is true. There was extant at that time a popular idea that the Lusitania was an American ship; and, of course, Americans were violently inflamed by the sinking of the Lusitania. I seriously doubt whether there is in this body a man who does not sincerely and honestly and wholeheartedly believe that the sinking of American ships would again be the one thing that would most quickly send us into the hell of war.

I am emphasizing this matter because I have a purpose in doing so. I am now going to examine the testimony of Colonel Knox and tell you what he thinks about this same doctrine of "freedom of the seas" and international law.

I should also like to quote at considerable length Mr. Charles Warren, former Assistant Attorney General of the United States; but out of a spirit of charity for my brethren I am not going to do it, because I do not want to take too much time in presenting my own viewpoint.

It is sufficient to say that Mr. Warren's conclusions agree with those I have expressed, that there is no such thing as international law in wartime, that it ceases to exist, and that any suggestion that it can be relied on is like trying to lay one's hands on a ghost. It is like a fire department which is notified of a fire, but merely says, "Well, we are sleeping at this moment. Let the fire burn. We will come out and squirt some water on it when the ashes are cold." Just how long would you tolerate that kind of a fire department? And who would be bold enough to say that that is the sort of a fire department he wants? Would you make him mayor of the city? Would you appoint him a member of the city counsel, when he insisted that he wanted to rely on a fire department that was useless when a fire was blazing?

The relevancy of this argument more clearly appears from the testimony of Colonel Knox, because when Colonel Knox was before the Committee on Naval Affairs, of which I am a member, I interrogated him at considerable length on his attitude toward this doctrine of freedom of the seas. I wanted to find out whether he believed in a fire department that actually put out fires, or whether he believed in a fire department that rowdies smashed up while a building was burning down. So I am going to read the record of the testimony, which is on the desk of every Senator.

We entered into a general colloquy about wartime traffic and the use of American-flag ships going into war zones, and that led to specific questions: Let me read some questions and the answers.

Senator BONE. That is precisely what would happen, Colonel, if you repealed that part of the Neutrality Act which forbids American vessels going into zones teeming with submarines.

We had been discussing this business of ships getting blown up.

Colonel KNOX. That would depend upon the attitude that the administration would take.

* * * * * * *

Senator BONE. Well, we fought two wars over this freedom of the seas business and it is not established now, is it?

Colonel KNOX. No.

Senator BONE. Was there a line in any one of the treaties, the Treaty of Ghent or the treaties that grew out of the World War, that established and laid at rest this question of the freedom of the seas?

Colonel KNOX. I don't know, sir.

Senator BONE. Well, I will tell you now that there was not, and so we fought two bloody wars over an issue that still remains unsettled.

Colonel KNOX. That is true.

Senator BONE. And I take it that your view is that we should again make the problem even more difficult by wiping out the one barrier to American vessels being sunk, which, as sure as you and I are in this room, Colonel, would lead to war; men going down to a watery grave, with the American flag at the masthead, would do more to inflame public opinion toward war than anything else.

Again coming back to this question:

Senator BONE. Under international law there is no barrier to a neutral vessel going into belligerent waters.

Go back to Admiral Sims' doctrine, and he said that if we were going to protect that doctrine it meant war, it meant that you would have to convoy those ships.

Colonel KNOX. That is an act of war.

Senator BONE. Precisely, and that is the only way they could get through.

And then we got off into a discussion of the rescue ships, some bearing Red Cross labels, and I suggested to Colonel Knox that they were not carrying munitions of war or contraband, and the Colonel said:

That is true.

I again interrogated him, as follows:

Are you aware that during the World War Great Britain and France put practically every known object of commerce on their list of contraband?

Colonel KNOX. Yes; I am aware of that.

Senator BONE. Well, there isn't anything known to mortal men that could be shipped over there today that wouldn't be contraband of war, and therefore every ship carrying that stuff would be immediately subjected to an attack by the vessels of the belligerent powers. Now, do you want us to run that risk?

Colonel KNOX. I want us to repeal the Neutrality Act for other reasons than that.

Senator BONE. But sinking our vessels is the thing that dragged us into the World War and you want to repeal the neutrality law for other reasons. Do you want to walk away entirely from the most highly provocative factor of all?

Colonel KNOX. No.

Senator BONE. I want to know your state of mind about that.

Colonel KNOX. I would assume that no administration would want to get us into war, and would prevent provocative acts.

Senator BONE. You recall that we had a campaign in 1916 about getting into the war, and nobody wants to go into a war, and when war was declared we were assured that we would merely send a token regiment over there, that we would not send troops.

Colonel KNOX. Yes.

Then he suggests that he is familiar with the fact that when war was declared there was a general impression that troops would not be sent to Europe, and he says that statements of that kind were made at the time.

Then, in attempting to defend his idea about repealing the Neutrality Act, which carries with it the repeal of the prohibition against American vessels going into the zones teeming with submarines of belligerent powers, we went back to the discussion. I said:

Senator BONE. If we went back to that, and ships were sunk, flying the American flag, would that, in your mind, be a justification for war?

Colonel KNOX. No.

Senator BONE. What would you do about it?

Then Colonel Knox referred to what he calls "vital American rights" which we have surrendered under the Neutrality Act, one of them being the right to freely traverse danger zones in belligerent waters. Then I interrogated him as follows:

Senator BONE. Don't you think that the people, during the World War, who went into zones knowing they were teeming with submarines must have fully understood they were taking a long risk?

Colonel KNOX. They did.

Senator BONE. And yet we made that the reason for entering war—the fundamental reason.

Colonel KNOX. That is why we amended the law this time so that wouldn't occur.

Senator BONE. But you suggest we junk all that and go back to the same old hazardous game?

That is to say, rely on international law.

Colonel Knox said, as appears on page 54:

I believe that it is unwise for us to abridge a liberty which we have enjoyed from the time our Government was organized in order to accomplish that. I think that can be accomplished without that legal infringement of our rights.

The "right" he refers to is the right of some fellow to send an American vessel into a war zone where it will be sunk. Even though you have no stake in it, your son has no stake in it, the sons of millions of Americans have no interest or stake in that vessel, yet they are to be drawn or sucked into a war to vindicate the private shipper's right, which Colonel Knox calls "a vital American right." An army of boys would have to vindicate that sort of a "right" and the exercise of that right with their lives and their blood. That is the honestly expressed viewpoint of Colonel Knox, who, if confirmed, will sit at the elbow of the President of the United States and advise him on international matters in these uncertain hours when a false move may mean war. Imagine the immediate possibility of "incidents" occuring—deadly and highly provocative incidents. Let our ships be blown up, and we are on the road to war, and nothing would stop us in such a course.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Do I understand the able Senator to say that Colonel Knox revealed his position to be that he wished us to go back to the situation in which we were when we entered the first World War?

Mr. BONE. Colonel Knox frankly says that he wants to junk every line of the Neutrality Act and go back to and rely upon international law, knowing full well that international law could not protect American vessels in a war zone; that they would be sunk one after another, and we would be in war as fast as we could get into it. America would again blaze with wrath.

I asked Colonel Knox this question:

Have you any reason to believe now that German submarines wouldn't sink the vessels now as they did in 1915 and 1916?

Colonel KNOX. They would.

I admire his candor. But think of a man urging that we now discard our cash-and-carry neutrality law which is the one thing which the President of the United States, which the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives, which the chairman of our own Foreign Relations Committee, assure us has protected us in all these 8 or 9 months of bloody warfare. He wants to cast it away like a worthless bubble. That he would urge such a course upon the President seems too clear for dispute. Colonel Knox is a man with firm convictions, or I misjudge his type.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Then perhaps the title or description I sometimes see about these two gentlemen, that they are interventionists, may be justified.

Mr. BONE. I do not know what their purpose is. I am confining this argument to the fact that Colonel Knox wants to throw away the fire hose when the building is burning. Either he is right or the President is right. They cannot both be right. The President says the thing that has kept this country out of war—speaking through the typewriter of Secretary Hull—the one thing that has so far kept us out of war is the fact that under our neutrality law American vessels are keeping out of war zones where they would surely be sunk. Colonel Knox says the President is dead wrong. If he says the President is dead wrong, certainly he could not object to a Senator questioning his judgment or the wisdom of his position, or fearing his influence in such a vital matter.

I asked Colonel Knox this question:

Do you believe that the American nature has changed since then, or is it still the same old American nature?

Colonel KNOX. It is still the same old American nature.

Senator BONE. And we could expect, in the normal course of events, precisely the same reaction from the 130,000,000 Americans—war, stop these fellows, they are interfering with a right which is a traditional right, a right recognized through the ages.

Now, one other thing. Do you know any belligerent power in the World War that respected international law?

Colonel KNOX. Not even ourselves.

Imagine that. Of course, he is not a lawyer, but what would be thought of a lawyer who insisted upon absolute reverence for and naive reliance upon a theory of law when he says in the same breath that even his own countrymen do not respect it and no belligerent power respects it? What sort of ducks and drakes are we making of this whole pattern of life in America, not to say legislative pattern, when a man who is to be the adviser of the highest officer of this Government tells us that we must hereafter rely upon a theory that no one respects or obeys. Fortunately, we have an example of a deadly, deadly danger. A few nights ago I was lying in my bedroom listening to the radio, and a flash came, "United States warship Barry sunk by a German submarine." The folks in my apartment house jumped up and said, "My God! That means war." Search your hearts and state whether you could find anything but a quiver of fear when you heard that news. I venture that every man in this body realized that here was a hideous threat against peace; that at last war was coming to America. Do you remember the Maine? Let a German submarine torpedo an American battleship and see how long we stay out of war. What more argument do we need? How shall we justly appraise the viewpoint of a man who would throw away a life preserver, who would cut a fire hose when a building is burning and little children are in the building? Shall we juggle with the lives of an army of men who will die if war comes?

I asked him:

Why do you want to rely on it (international law) when it is a frail reed?

Then I asked him if he was familiar with the quoted statement of Mr. SOL BLOOM, of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

The colonel also wants all "aid to the Allies short of war." That is another interesting aspect of the present situation, which we canvassed.

I do not know whether my colleagues have read his testimony. If they will take the trouble to read it they will find not only this theory advanced by Colonel Knox of relying upon something which has no existence, but they will also find him making a statement which should clarify the "aid to the Allies" picture for the American people more than any other statement made recently.

A few days ago I took the liberty of rising on this floor and saying that we should clarify this war picture for the American people in order to allay and still some of the fear that was being generated by speeches and radio and press commentators. In hundreds of publications in this country, including that of Colonel Knox, there has been the cry of "all aid to the Allies short of war." Some of the editorial comment has been so unfortunately phrased as to leave in the public mind the idea that we were somehow holding back and not giving the Allies all aid short of war. I wanted to put the matter to rest, and to whom might I better ask the question than the man who is to be the Secretary of the Navy? Colonel Knox is an able editor. He should know. So I asked Colonel Knox to describe to the committee this process of giving aid to the Allies and to tell us where it had fallen down. I shall read just a little of the testimony. I think the American press would do this country and all of its citizens a great service if they would reprint this portion of Colonel Knox's testimony. It is very brief.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator has referred to the slogan we have heard about "aid to the Allies." Which ally?

Mr. BONE. Colonel Knox answers about the whole thing.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Which ally? The Allies are fighting each other now, so which ally are we to aid?

Mr. BONE. I will admit that the present picture is so kaleidoscopic, so weird, that it defies description. Allies have become enemies.

One does not have to go to the gallery of the Louvre, or wander through Paris or old France, to realize what a peculiar pattern of life has been woven in that unhappy country; and the same may be said as to almost every European country. I am a great lover of history. I have read the story of France written by Thomas Watson years ago. I have read Carlyle's French Revolution. I have a sizable library of French history, and I still find interest in the story of Charles Martel, the Hammer of Tours, of Charles the Bold, Condé Vauban, Turrene, and Louis Le Grand, and all the glories and the depths of iniquity of the French court. The same conditions prevailed in all the other courts of Europe. For 2,000 years, since the day when Varus took his Roman legions into the dark, gloomy forests of what is now modern Germany, and there saw them consumed in the withering fire of the Army of Arminius, that segment of Europe has been a bloody cockpit.

I took the liberty of asking Colonel Knox if he knew of any period in European history, in all that sweep of time, twenty centuries, when Europe was in repose for any length of time, and he admitted that he knew of no period when there was any repose there. The nationalistic, racial, and religious differences have made Europe one living and breathing human hell for 2,000 years, and it is worse now, because there are so many more people in Europe than there have ever been before. Problems multiply with the increase of population.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMATHERS in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. A short time ago I ran across the Minerva survey of wars, conflicts, rebellions, and armed clashes of one kind or another which had occurred in Europe and concerning Europe and its colonies. The number of conflicts given in that survey was 450 in the last 448 years, 2 more conflicts than 1 a year since Christopher Columbus discovered America. If we are going to save Europe by war, we had better build stone barracks over there and stay there permanently. Europe's troubles are Europe's, not America's. Let them settle their own quarrels, real-estate titles, and boundary disputes. I am not concerned about Europe, Asia, and Africa; I am concerned about America and American interests—nothing more than that and nothing less than that.

Mr. BONE. Of course, I doubt if any student of European history can be found bold enough to say that we should undertake to recast the European picture. The present situation is one which would melt a heart of stone. I have great compassion in my heart for the people of Europe. They have the misfortune to be born on a wretched continent, but I do not want to see my own country destroyed in an attempt to resurrect Europe from the slough of despond into which it has fallen. I emphasize this fact because I know war will destroy our country. Everyone within the sound of my voice knows that the moment war begins certain laws will go on the statute books. What those statutes will be was brought out in the hearings before the Munitions Committee. Those proposed statutes will set up a dictatorship in America.

If we fight totalitarianism by force, the first price we shall pay is the destruction of our own democracy. If any Senators have any doubt of that statement let them read the bills to which I referred. We go to the rescue of some other nation and we sacrifice everything that we tell the world we are fighting for. Shall we destroy the thing we love? There is not a Senator here who does not know that this country will be a dictatorship the moment war starts, and yet we rise day after day and damn and execrate the whole theory of dictatorial government. Yet modern total war requires that sort of government. That is why I fear it.

Let us now see what Colonel Knox has in mind about "aid to the Allies short of war." Let us examine Colonel Knox:

Senator BONE. Colonel Knox, you have stated that the aid short of war, which you envision would be necessary, was the aid that our private manufacturers could give France and England; am I correct?
Colonel KNOX. Yes; that is correct.

I hope the American press will quote Colonel Knox on this matter of aid to the Allies.

Senator BONE. Now, so that the chronological order may be properly presented, you recall that that part of the Neutrality Act which forbade the sale of munitions of war to belligerents was promptly repealed right after the declaration of war; that is correct, is it not?
Colonel KNOX. Yes.
Senator BONE. Do you know now, as a publisher, any bar, legal or otherwise, that has stood in the way of a free and unlimited sale of munitions of war by private manufacturers in this country to England and France?
Colonel KNOX. I do not know that there is any.
Senator BONE. The aid short of war to which you made reference has been freely extended, so far as American private facilities permit?
Colonel KNOX. I think you are correct.
Senator BONE. There has been no single barrier interposed?
Colonel KNOX. That is true.
Senator BONE. For some reason, I do not know what reason, there has been an impression left in the minds of the public by certain publishers that there was some, to the public invisible, barrier to the free sale of munitions of war to the Allies.
Colonel KNOX. No.
Senator BONE. Will you state, for the purpose of the record, that no such thing has existed since the beginning of war?
Colonel KNOX. That is correct.
Senator BONE. That is your understanding?
Colonel KNOX. It is.
Senator BONE. Everybody in Congress understands it, but there is a gross misconception in the public mind. That fact has been obscured in the press of the country. As a Member of the Senate, I know of no barrier that has existed in the free and unlimited sale of every kind of munitions of war to France and England practically since the outbreak of the war.

Let me add that no barrier has existed to the sale of any sort of commodities to the Allies. After war started they, of course, had to ship such freight, including war munitions, in their own vessels.

Before the outbreak of the war there was no barrier there on the sale of food or munitions or anything else, so that England and France have always had access to everything we marketed, and could produce, at any time stretching back over the years.

I continue to read:

Senator BONE. Therefore, if there has been any delay, it has been due to the inability of American manufacturers to supply the demands of both France and England.
Colonel KNOX. And partially, I suspect, because of mechanical difficulties.
Senator BONE. Well, mechanical difficulties of tooling up factories.
Colonel KNOX. Yes.

Then the colonel goes on to add:

Then I think there was a lot of delay incurred in getting adequate supplies to the Allies through their own methods of purchase, which were very slow and very costly. I am talking wholly from what has been told me by plane manufacturers. One of the difficulties included the purchasing commission that has been here from England and France.

I referred to the fact that some of our mail seems to carry the suggestion that there has been some sort of a barrier somewhere against the sale of food and clothing and munitions of war. Colonel Knox suggested immediately that he knew of no such barrier, and that it has no existence in fact.

Now, that ought to be sufficient to lay at rest any question about this matter, but I probed the colonel's mind a little further, and I said this:

Senator BONE. Are you prepared to say to us now that you think that the private interests of this country, whom you have defined as the agencies through which the "short of war" help should be given, have defaulted in any way in this program?
Colonel KNOX. I don't know, sir; I don't know.
Senator BONE. Well, you have been writing editorials about this "short of war" aid, and I wondered just how you would define any course of conduct beyond what has been already accomplished in that field?
Colonel KNOX. There is nothing that I can suggest that hasn't been done, except this. Let me make this qualification, and this is more or less on hearsay evidence. I have talked with a number of munitions and airplane manufacturers, and they lay a large portion of the blame for failure to get more supplies to the Allies before this crisis arose upon the Allies' shoulders.

* * * * * * *

Senator BONE. Then, there can be no blame attaching to either this country in a governmental way or the business interests?
Colonel KNOX. That is right.
Senator BONE. If there be blame, it must rest upon the shoulders of those who failed properly to handle the situation on the other side of the Atlantic?
Colonel KNOX. That is right.

I am not going to read any more of it. Sufficient to say that Colonel Knox said that if England and France did not get all they wanted in the way of aid, it was their own fault.

That only clarifies that one particular part of the picture. The real danger in this thing is that Colonel Knox, now to be a confidential adviser of the President, says we must throw away the one thing which the President and our own brethren here in the Senate solemnly assert has kept us out of war. He would restore the "vital right" of American vessels to enter war zones for trade. He would swing wide open the gates of opportunity for a few men, bent on profits, to incontinently thrust 130,000,000 of us into war in an attempt to vindicate such a right—a "vital right" is his characterization.

The President repels such an idea. The chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, Representative SOL BLOOM, has repudiated this dangerous doctrine. The chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the able Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] shares their views, because he said repeatedly on the floor of this body that the thing which has kept us out of war was the fact that our ships did not go into the war zone, and that our action in this regard is sound and salutary. Yet we are urged by our own vote on Colonel Knox to repudiate what we have done. We voted this cash-and-carry provision on the statute books. Why in the name of Heaven should we vote it off again, by a process of indirection? Let us be consistent. If you were hiring a man you would not hire one who fundamentally disagreed with your theory of running your business. What the President approves is the very thing that Mr. Knox decries as wholly bad.

Mr. President, I have said those things which are in my heart, and that is the reason I cannot vote for the confirmation of Mr. Knox. Though he were my own father I could not vote for him. I have nothing in the world against him personally. Probably were I privileged to know him as an individual I would care deeply for him, because I have learned to have a great affection for people with whom I have been so frequently in disagreement, but I could not vote for him for such a post of adviser in these terrible times, when he entertains that sort of view. This war business is more important than anything else. I would surrender every other view I have if that were the price of keeping my country out of war. I would not want to carry to my grave the last thought that I had done something that might have remotely contributed to plunging my country into war. When we realize that war would destroy us, why should we vote for a man whose every impulse is to remove the most vital safeguard that stands in the way? Senators do not have to take my word about this safeguard. The President said as much. Senators have heard it stated a hundred times on the floor of the Senate.

I shall not challenge the wisdom or judgment of the President in appointing Mr. Knox. The challenge is to us. We are also part of the appointing power. Senators do not have to consent to the appointment of a man if they honestly disagree with his views on public policy. If it is wrong for me to vote "nay" on this question, then that part of the Constitution concerning "advice and consent" should be stricken out and I should not have to face the necessity of voting "yea" or "nay" on the nomination of a man with whose views I am in such thorough disagreement.

I cannot escape the responsibility resting on my own soul. I cannot put the stamp of approval on the viewpoint entertained by Colonel Knox. Were he my warmest friend I might cherish his friendship as something beautiful and lovely, but I do not have to approve his viewpoint. I have stood here for 5 years saying that above everything else I would fight to preserve the one thing which so far has kept us out of this war. Yet I might vote to destroy what I cherish by voting for a man who wants to remove the last barrier, which our President says is the best insurance against our entry into war. Let me read the final sentence from the message of the President. I say the message of the President. It was Secretary Hull, who would be a fellow Cabinet member of Colonel Knox, who said this, but the President said:

I am in hearty agreement with it.

The Hull statement—

I am appending a statement from the Secretary of State which has my full approval.

Speaking of the "cash and carry" provisions of the neutrality law, which have kept American vessels out of war zones, Secretary Hull, with the blessing and approval of our President, says this provision has minimized "to the fullest extent the danger of American involvement."

This is the insurance we are asked to discard by Colonel Knox.

Secretary Hull approves keeping American ships out of war zones, where they would surely go, under international law, and he says that this is a policy which minimizes to the fullest extent the danger of American involvement. That is all I need to justify my vote. That is the statement of my own President, whom I supported ardently. He believed it when he said it. I believe it now. Therefore I shall vote "nay" on the confirmation of the nominations of these men with whose views I disagree, not because of any feelings toward them, but because of a deep, passionate, and abiding love of my own country, and the terrifying fear in my own heart that this country may be involved in war if we make a mistake now. I would do anything in reason to keep my country out of war. If I have to choose between some other country and my own country, I will not be like the infidel who denies the faith. I will choose my own country. I will not surrender it for any country on earth.

When we took on the protection of one-half the known world, the whole Western Hemisphere, we took on a terrifying engagement for any nation of 130,000,000 people. When we build 85 battleships and a vast number of cruisers and submarines, and pay the bill, we shall know what it means to protect half the world. We shall not have to be in war to understand its implications. We ought to get down on our knees and pray to Almighty God that the Republic be fortified to stand the financial shock of taking care of that sort of a problem.

Mr. President, I should not have taken the time of the Senate to express these views except that I feel so passionately about this war business. I think it transcends in importance every other issue before the American people. The views I express are well known to the people of my State and I merely reassert them here.

We owe a duty to posterity. We came into a beautiful world, but we can leave our part of it a broken and battered thing. If we make the deadly mistake of letting our country get into war, we shall make our very names a by-word for hissing and a sign of reproach to the boys and girls coming on, because we shall destroy the thing which has been built from widows' sighs and orphans' tears. Every boy who laid down his life on the battlefield to preserve the Republic will have made the sacrifice in vain. The spirit of every boy whose life's blood drained out on the battlefield to preserve government of the people, by the people, and for the people would rise to rebuke unworthy descendants who allowed this sort of thing to happen. Government of the people, by the people, and for the people will perish if we are so stupid as to allow ourselves to be dragged in. If we should allow a dictatorship to arise in America, how many Senators think that the Republic would come back in their time? It would mean street barricades, liquidations, and generations of misery and suffering. That is the price of war; and yet some men talk glibly of rushing into that sort of hell.

Mr. President, I apologize for taking this time, but tempus fugit. I may not have the opportunity to stand here and protest very long. We are now going down the primrose pathway of dalliance with international evils so rapidly that it makes us dizzy to contemplate our course. So while there is yet time, while a Member of Congress may stand in his place and speak a word of protest, I rise to do so, for it will be too late when war comes along with dictatorship. I have always supported our program of national defense and I went beyond that program in demanding even more, because for several years the danger signals have been flying. If war comes, let it not be an avoidable war, but one in defense of our own legitimate sphere of activities and one in defense of our own homeland. By my vote I would discourage any other viewpoint, and this is said with no animus in my heart and with the utmost charity toward those who differ with me.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, it is a matter of sincere regret to me that I feel compelled to vote against confirmation of the nomination of Hon. Henry L. Stimson to be Secretary of War. This is the first time I have been obliged to vote against a nomination for President Roosevelt's Cabinet.

Mr. Stimson's patriotism, personal integrity, and abilities are above reproach. I have the sincerest respect and admiration for Mr. Stimson; but his appointment and confirmation to the post of Secretary of War raise a question of public policy which transcends any personal or political considerations.

I feel that my vote on confirmation either approves or disapproves Mr. Stimson's declarations urging immediate intervention in the present European war. I can place no other interpretation upon the statements made by Mr. Stimson in his radio broadcast within 48 hours before his appointment as Secretary of War by the President.

In that broadcast, among other statements, he declared that the United States should "immediately throw open all our ports to British and French naval and merchant marine for repairs and refueling and other services." In my judgment, that would come close—very close—to being an act of war.

In the same broadcast Mr. Stimson declared that the United States should send planes and other munitions to Britain and France, "if necessary in our own ships and under convoy." United States warships convoying unconditional contraband to a belligerent would clearly invite—almost insure—attack by the opposing belligerent.

It would be difficult to conceive a policy more certain to lead to an attack upon the Navy of the United States—an attack which would leave no practical alternative for Congress except to declare war when subsequently asked by the Executive to do so. What Mr. Stimson proposed in his broadcast are not steps short of war, but steps into war.

It is highly significant that within a few hours after the broadcast calling for intervention was made, the President, to use plain language, "fired" the then Secretary of War, Harry H. Woodring, of my native State of Kansas, and named Mr. Stimson in his place. It is common knowledge that Mr. Woodring was opposed to intervention in the European war. Mr. Stimson's broadcast plainly labels him as in favor of intervention.

That view is held by a great many citizens of my State of Kansas.

I have received many letters and telegrams from farm groups, businessmen, and others protesting against the nomination now before us. Here is one which is typical of many:

McPHERSON, KANS., June 29, 1940.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: I do not approve President Roosevelt's dismissal of former Secretary of War Harry Woodring for he is a capable man for any position.

The appointment of Frank Knox and Henry L. Stimson as Secretary of Navy and Secretary of War, respectively, is a smart move to put the blame on both parties for the President's actions—a move toward entanglement in the European war. The people of Kansas and these United States disapprove that action. Therefore, the people do not approve their confirmation by the Senate.

I remain,
Very truly yours.

PAUL A. RAMSEY.

Mr. President, if I should vote to confirm the nomination of Mr. Stimson under these circumstances, I should be approving his proposal that the United States Navy convoy United States vessels carrying planes and munitions to a belligerent European nation. I should be approving what I regard as an act of war which inevitably would result in our going to war, either declared or undeclared.

Mr. President, I cannot and will not cast that vote. With deepest regret I must vote against confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Stimson to be Secretary of War.

Mr. GILLETTE obtained the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GILLETTE. Not for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum. I shall speak for only a very short time, and I do not wish to impose on my colleages.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I was about to suggest the absence of a quorum. Under the circumstances I think a quorum should be present.

Mr. GILLETTE. I thank the Senator for his courtesy, but I prefer not to yield for that purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I do not know what the Senator is about to say; but it was reported continuously and officially that in the Naval Affairs Committee there was a vote of 9 to 5 in favor of confirmation of the nomination of Colonel Knox. I desire to suggest the absence of a quorum in order that the whole Senate may see, if it be necessary, that possibly the vote was 9 to 6, or perhaps 9 to 7. That is my reason for desiring to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I reiterate that I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator and the purpose he has just announced. Had I been present, I should have voted in the Naval Affairs Committee against a favorable report on the nomination referred to. I wish the Senator would not ask for a quorum at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Very well. I shall defer to the wishes of the Senator.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, it is not my intention to detain the Senate by covering ground which has been covered again and again in the course of this discussion by my distinguished colleagues, who are far more able to present the matter than I am.

It is not my desire to question any action of the Chief Executive of the United States. Neither do I conceive it to be my function as a Member of this body to question this particular action of the Chief Executive. In my opinion, however, there is considerable misconception as to the exact question which is before the Senate for decision. It appears in the public press; it appears in editorial columns; it has appeared from time to time in discussion on this floor, spoken, I think, carelessly. The question before the Senate is not whether the Senate shall confirm the appointment of Henry L. Stimson and the appointment of Frank Knox. No power can appoint either of these men to a position in the Cabinet of the President of the United States except through the machinery laid down in the Constitution. By that instrument the Chief Executive is clothed with the sole power of nominating men for considered appointments. The President has sent to the Senate the nomination of Henry L. Stimson and the nomination of Col. Frank Knox. There is no power in the governmental machinery of the United States that can deprive the President of the right to submit those nominations. If the nominations do not reach the appointment stage, the President may send other nominations, and still other nominations, and yet other nominations, without end.

The Constitution clothes the Senate, and clothes me as a Member of the Senate, with a particular duty in this regard. The Constitution says that the President may nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate may appoint his Cabinet and other officers. The President has taken the action it is his to take. It is not for me or any other Member of the Senate to question that right; it is his right under the Constitution to nominate any man he sees fit to nominate, send the nomination to the Senate for our consideration, and ask us to advise and consent to it. If we do, then he may make the appointment, but he cannot make the appointment until we have acted.

I am not standing on this floor to question, in any way, the right of the President to nominate, but, as a Senator from the State of Iowa, I have a duty on my mind, I have a duty on my heart, I have a duty on my conscience, as to whether or not I will consent and advise to the appointment of either of these gentlemen to the Cabinet positions to which they have been nominated.

A little over a year and a half ago I stood right where I now stand when there was before the Senate the nomination of Mr. Harry Hopkins to the position of Secretary of Commerce. I had had some personal relations with Mr. Hopkins which were somewhat less than pleasant, but I stood on this floor and advocated that we should give the President our advice and our consent to the appointment of Secretary Hopkins to the portfolio of Commerce. Why? As I said then, and repeat now, I have opposed with all the power that the Almighty has given me any attempt on the part of the legislative branch or the executive branch to infringe on the duties and functions of the judicial branch, for I firmly believe that the coordinate action of the separate branches of our Government as created by the founding fathers is essential. I oppose now, as I opposed then, any attempt by the legislative to infringe or interfere with the rights of the Chief Executive to act in the matters which concern him. If there is any power that ought to rest in the President, it is the power to nominate for place in his official family men in whom he has confidence, who are in accord with his purposes, his policies, his goal, his efforts, his administration; he ought to have that right, and I would be the last person on earth to interfere with it.

Why, then, did the constitutional fathers impose on the Members of the Senate the power that is given us under that provision of the Constitution to which I have referred? It was given us for a purpose. I have been at some pains to read, as voluminously as I have had the time and opportunity to do, the discussion of learned commentators along this line. They uniformly present two matters: One is that the power given to the Senate might act as a deterrent or might prevent a Chief Executive making a nomination that would be unpopular or unjustified. That particular factor is not pertinent to the question now before the Senate; whatever deterrent element there may be is beside the point, because the nomination is here.

The other consideration which has been discussed over and over again, is that the power to prevent an appointment being made until the Senate has advised and consented to it would operate, should operate, and must operate so that the Chief Executive could not run away with the nominating power and take action which, in the opinion of the majority of the Members of the United States Senate, would not be consonant with the national welfare and security.

That, Mr. President, is the situation that faces us today. The President has sent to the Senate two nominations. Now action is dependent on us, as he cannot make the appointments without our action. Do not let anybody say that we refused to confirm or that we overrode him. He has not appointed and he cannot appoint until we give him our advice and our consent; and that is the question that will be presented here this afternoon.

In my position as a Senator from the State of Iowa and a Member of this body am I going to vote to give my consent and my advice to the appointment of these two men to the Cabinet. I go back to the proposition I made a few moments ago, that the President has a right, and should have a right, to have surrounding him in appointive office men who are in sympathy with him and in accord with him in the functions, the powers, the responsibilities and the duties that are his. I would not interfere with that right in any way in the world. It is not a question of whether the selection is one which I would make; it is a question of the selection of men with whom the President wants to work. In this particular case is that the situation? In the Senate, Mr. President, there have been read many quotations from the men whose nominations are before us, which show that they are not only not in accord with the policies of the President of the United States, his purposes, his goal, and his endeavors, but that they have opposed them in season and out of season, week in and week out, year in and year out, from the public platform, in the public press, and in editorial columns. He certainly did not select them for that reason.

For what purpose were they selected? Is there anyone who thinks that the President selected them for a political purpose, as has been suggested in some of the newspaper columns? I do not think so meanly of the President of the United States. I do not think there is any man in official life who would be so despicable as to play a game of pussy wants a corner with the national security or a game of partisan squat tag with the interests and welfare of the American Nation. I do not believe it. Then, why did he send the nominations to the Senate? Why did he go outside the 100,000, yea, the 500,000 able, keen Democrats, members of his party who are in accord with all he stands for, and select two men who are known all over the United States and internationally as the outstanding interventionists of the Republican Party? Other Senators have a right to ask themselves why, and I have a right to ask myself why. I shall not go over the too familiar ground of the manner in which these men have expressed themselves except to call attention to two statements that appear in the evidence. One is in the testimony of Henry L. Stimson in which he refers to the need for the use of the element of time:

> Today the time which we will have for our rearmament is very largely dependent upon the continuance of Great Britain's control of the North Atlantic. Under these conditions any assistance which we can safely give toward the continuance of that sea power in the North Atlantic is a step most important and vital to our own interest in preparation.

I quote from Mr Knox:

> It is for us to put at the disposal of the British all of the munitions and supplies needed to keep the battle going.

A contest of ideologies? Support for the democracies? No; but keep the battle going; keep them fighting. Not to win—neither of these men ever expressed any interest in seeing them win—but keep the battle going as a measure of defense for ourselves.

Mr. President, I promised the eminent Senator who now graces the chair [Mr. SMATHERS in the chair] that I would not talk longer than 10 minutes. I have used 9 minutes of that time. I desire to state in closing that there is not a man, woman, or child in the United States who does not believe that he or she knows the purpose of the selection of these men for nomination to the Cabinet of the President of the United States. Are they mistaken? I do not believe they are mistaken; but, even granting that they are mistaken, there is the situation as it will be construed all over the world. That is the situation which is in the minds and hearts of the people.

I recently returned from a visit to the State of Iowa. I talked over the fences with the farmers there. I went into the business places of my constituents. I find that every one of them is disturbed to the core of his being over the fact that Europe is on the bloody butcher block right at this minute, and is wondering what action we will take.

What action will you take? What action will I take? Will we question the President's right to nominate? No; but you as United States Senators, and I as a United States Senator, have a duty to the public to see that no action is taken that has only one plausible, only one reasonable, only one fair deduction as to its purpose. That duty is not to take the further step that will permit the appointment. We do not propose to override the President; no. We cannot override the President. He has done his duty, and no one but the President had power to submit the nomination; but the appointment cannot be made unless we consent to it, unless we advise it. I as a Member of the Senate, I as a representative of my State of Iowa, will never sit in the Senate and give my consent and my advice that will permit an appointment that will be construed and must be construed, in America and abroad, as a step toward our involvement in war.

Mr. TYDINGS obtained the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. TYDINGS. There is a pretty good attendance now.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Andrews	Ellender	Lucas	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, when a Senator proposes to vote against the confirmation of two outstanding Americans as members of the Cabinet of a President, when under ordinary conditions he would be happy to vote for their confirmation, it becomes necessary to state the reasons why such a course is wise.

Neither Colonel Stimson nor Colonel Knox needs any words of mine to prove his capacities, his Americanism, his patriotism, his integrity, or to show that he possesses the attributes which make up good citizenship. Those things are not involved in this case. What is involved in this case is a definite point of view toward the future which might possibly have dire consequences for this Government and for its people if pursued to its logical conclusion.

Today in America, in the face of wars in Europe and Asia, there are evolving two schools of thought. One school of thought feels that it would be wise for the United States to join with the democracies which are still in existence and fight the totalitarian or aggressor nations. There is much to commend this point of view from the standpoint of argument. It is pointed out by those who hold to this theory that if America stays out now, the time will come when the totalitarian or aggressor nations will combine; and then, bereft of all possible aid from other nations, we may be called upon to bear the brunt of a combined attack by these adversaries. Of course, that is mere speculation. No one knows how long the totalitarian nations will be together, nor how soon they will fall apart, nor when conquest may divide them.

It seems to me that in many cases those who advocate this course are not quite as candid as are those who feel that it would be unwise for this country at the present time to become involved in the war either in Asia or in Europe. Many of them belong to a group advocating what is known as aid to the Allies short of war. Certainly as a government, as differentiated from a free people, aid to the Allies short of war is not neutrality. When you are neutral, you do not aid any one who is engaged in a controversy or a conflict. I take it, therefore, that aid to the Allies short of war means not that the Government should aid, but that our citizens are free to aid, in that they may sell to the belligerent powers anything the belligerent powers desire to buy from us so long as they pay cash for it, and so long as they take it home in their own ships.

Therefore we do not need a committee to do that, for that is already permissible under the existing laws of the United States. There is no possible aid which our people can give to the belligerent nations, if they are able to purchase goods and take them home in their own ships, which is not being given now by the producers, the farmers, and the manufacturers of goods in the United States. So it seems to me that we cannot escape the conclusion that aid to the Allies short of war quite ofen means not private aid by businesses or by individuals, but aid by government, either direct or indirect.

The method of securing aid up to the present has been indirect, through the medium of having our Government take articles designed for its Army or Navy and turn them in to some private manufacturer, because they are obsolete or outmoded or not modern, and, on the promise that they will be replaced with new and modern equipment, the manufacturer then resells the articles to the Allies, and in that way the Allies are aided. Indeed, from personal conversation, as well as from letters, I know that many members of the Committee to Aid the Allies Short of War—not all of them, but many—favor taking all the planes and all the ships which in their own words can "reasonably be taken," whatever that may mean, and, through the intermediary of a private corporation, using them to aid the Allies in this struggle. That, briefly, is the position of those who advocate either intervention or aid to the Allies in one form or another.

The other school of thought realizes that there is a great deal in some of the arguments made by the opposition. They realize that we do not live in a safe world; that even if we do not intervene now war may come to our shores; that it may come to South America; that Canada may be lost in the game at the peace table, or before the peace; and that, whether we will it or not, the conflict may come to us anyway. However, the fact that there is an ocean on our east and an ocean on our west makes us feel that perhaps even then we might stay out of the struggle. But even if we should stay out of the European war for the present there is the possibility that eventually it may come to our shores. Thus we have the cleavage between those who feel certain it will come, and therefore urge that we should join in the struggle while we have yet someone to fight by our side, and those who feel that, even if it shall come, if we remain here and prepare we will be in a better position to safeguard the interests of our people and our governmental institutions by remaining out now and preparing and waiting for the war to reach us. That, briefly, represents as I see it the two conflicting general points of view.

Colonel Stimson and Colonel Knox both believe in the first point of view. They may differ in degree; they may differ as to methods; but both of them favor aiding the Allies now.

These conclusions bring us face to face with the question, Suppose we should intervene now, suppose we should embrace the view of the interventionists, those who advocate joining the struggle now, while England is still holding off the totalitarian or aggressor nations; what would happen if we were to intervene? Would we be a decisive factor? Would we win the war for the cause of democracy? Could we by any imaginable chain of events throw enough into the scales in time to bring victory to the democracies? Let us examine that picture first, and see whether it would be wise for us to go down that roadway.

In the last World War we declared war on April 6, 1917. The war in Europe had been proceding for more than 2 years when we got into it. As a matter of fact, it was closer to 3 years than 2. We had all that time to see the European war developing. Many munitions, many arms, were being manufactured in this country; indeed, the Allies used the United States as a great producing agency to supply their military forces with the vital necessities with which only war can be made. Yet, after the war had gone on for nearly 3 years, by April 6, 1918, 12 months after we finally entered it as a belligerent, how much were we able to achieve? We had only 300,000 men on the other side in a year, and those 300,000 men were to a large extent not fighting troops, but S. O. S., Service of Supply, and other incidental forces, who were being organized behind the line so that when the fighting men came over the supplies would go to the front where the men would be engaged. The point is that in 1 year, when we were not threatened at all, when we had a free hand to prepare, we were able to transport only 300,000 men across the water by April 6, 1918.

It was not until the summer of 1918, from 15 to 16 months after we entered the war, that fighting men in great numbers were transported to European battlefields. Even when they got over there, 15 months after we entered the struggle, in many cases they had neither the arms nor the munitions with which to fight, except as they were obtained from either English or French sources. The artillery of many American divisions was supplied to them by the French Government. The machine guns of most all the American divisions, including my own, were supplied to the American troops by the British Government. So I might go on with the picture.

As for airplanes, there used to be a standing joke in the American Army about our air force. Whenever a single airplane was in view in the sky, the men at the front would look up at it and say, "Look! our whole air force is attacking Germany this afternoon." We had no airplanes, in fact, until the war was over, insofar as American manufacture was concerned.

These are things we remember; they are facts; these brief little pictures of what actually happened in 1917 and 1918. There are men on this floor who served overseas or in the Army in this country, and they know that what I have said is true. That was the picture 1 year after war was declared. That was the picture 16 months after war was declared. It was not until September 1918 that the volume of arms and munitions and men was sufficient so that the last great drive was made which resulted in victory for the Allies.

What is the picture today? Could we do better now if we were to intervene either directly or indirectly, gradually, step by step, than we did 22 years ago? Let us look at that picture.

A few days ago General Marshall, the Chief of Staff, appeared before the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. He asked for the appropriation of some $34,000,000, as I recall. He wanted that money so as to build plants in which to make powder for the shot and shell which might be used by the American Army if we should become involved in the struggle. The money was provided quickly; the bill passed this body and is now the law, and perhaps the plants are now in the course of construction.

This question was asked General Marshall:

How long will it be, General, before these plants, by all the speed-up system you can evolve and evoke, turn out the powder in sufficient quantities to be of use should we get into war?

The General answered:

It will be 14 months from today—

And this is only a month ago—

before all of these forces, private and public, can turn out sufficient powder to serve 1,000,000 soldiers in combat.

It would therefore be 13 months from today, July 9, 1940, which would make it August 9, 1941, roughly, before we would have enough powder to supply a million troops in war. There is nothing secret about that, for I asked General Marshall, "Do foreign governments know about this, General?" To which he replied, "No doubt they do; for we do business in a democratic atmosphere. They know how much money we appropriate and what it is appropriated for." So I feel no compunction in telling this incident to the Senate and to the country.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I believe we have been informed that we have been selling powder——

Mr. TYDINGS. I would rather not discuss the powder situation now. It is a long story. It is worth discussing, but I do not want to be led away from my train of thought, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I simply wanted to check up on the information I had received.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator's information is incorrect. In a word, let me say to the Senator that after the war we had no powder plants at all, public or private, equipping the Army with ammunition. One of the big powder manufacturers in the United States wanted to close down his plant, but officers of the Ordnance Department begged him to keep his plant open. They tried to get him some South American and Central American orders with which he could keep his plant running. In response to the appeal from the Ordnance Department in heaven's name to keep his plant operating, this powder manufacturer kept his plant in operation at a loss of $300,000 for 1 year in order that his machinery would not be idle and his personnel would not be dispersed. At any rate it would take 13 months before we would have enough powder with which to supply a million soldiers, and who in the name of common sense wants to go to war short of 13 months if the Army is not to have enough powder with which to fight.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator discussed the question of powder on the theory that it would take 13 months to supply a million men with the powder necessary. Is the Senator now talking about powder we supply for both the Army and the Navy?

Mr. TYDINGS. I am glad the Senator from Illinois raised that question. Powder used by the Navy is a different kind of powder, to begin with, than that used by the Army. Furthermore, the Navy does not use a great quantity of powder compared with the amount used by the Army. The Navy has ample powder. It has a special powder plant of its own at Indianhead, Md., and because it uses it only rarely, the Navy is equipped with powder. I thank the Senator from Illinois for raising that point.

I am dealing now only with the Army, and I do not suggest these facts in criticism of anyone, because there was no effort made in the country, there was no effort made in the Congress, or in any other place, to appropriate public moneys to enlarge private powder plants until the present emergency arose. I am simply stating the situation so as to get the picture before the country, and not in a spirit of criticism at all, for certainly no one, from the humblest citizen to the most exalted, would escape criticism if it were sought to be made. The situation was due to a state of thought; it was due to a state of mind in this country. The country was not interested in developing powder in private plants until this emergency arose. I hope, therefore, that no one will suppose that I am trying to be partisan or political in this discussion, because that is far from my mind.

That is the situation with respect to powder. What is the situation with respect to arms, what is the situation with respect to planes, what is the situation with respect to pilots, what is the situation with respect to tanks and with respect to engineer equipment, and what is the situation with respect to Signal Corps equipment? I might go down the whole list and discuss the situation with respect to each item. I shall shortly read a statement of the situation affecting some of these categories. But simply to illustrate, let me say that if we were to go to war tomorrow morning on land, as differentiated from on sea, we would have very little in the way of a land force with which to go to war, in comparison with the modern armies of belligerent nations today.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MEAD in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I do not want to divert the Senator from Maryland from his train of thought, if he wants to address himself more directly to the pending nomination. However, he has raised a very interesting question with respect to powder and munitions and matériel which we must have, which brings to mind the thought that when we provide the hundreds of millions of dollars and even billions of dollars which the Government must appropriate to provide these things, it ought to be done in such a way that when the emergency is over we will have the plants, we will have the factories, so that they can remain in a stand-by condition and be ready in any future emergency.

Of course, the Senator knows that in the case of a powder plant which is privately built and owned, perhaps with the aid of money borrowed from the Government, when the emergency is over, when there are no longer orders from the United States Government, the private concern will hardly be in a position to keep the plant in a stand-by condition. I think the Government ought to build such plants, and then lease them, if need be, for a dollar a year, to private operating companies.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not want to be diverted from the subject I was discussing.

Mr. HILL. I do not want to divert the Senator, but it is a very important matter.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will say to the Senator that a few days ago I was speaking in the Naval Affairs Committee to a representative of Mr. Knudsen's committee, who said they are attempting now, wherever they can do so, to build plants in the manner suggested by the Senator. They cannot do it in every case, but where it is possible and will not result in too long a delay, that is the plan now being followed.

I have gone into the situation with respect to powder. I do not need to go into the situation with respect to airplanes or pilots, because I think that those who serve on the Military Affairs Committee and the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate know from what they have heard there, and from information in the press, that a considerable time will elapse before we can approach a state of preparedness in the air and on the ground supporting the air, which will be comparable to that of the belligerent nations now engaged in war.

Let me for a few moments refer to manpower. Our standing Army a short while ago was approximately 200,000 men. We gradually have increased its size, so that now it is authorized to have a strength of 375,000 men. An enlistment campaign has been put on by the Navy, by the Marine Corps, and by the Army to get the number of men authorized by Congress. Have the recruits come? Is the Army up to the figure of 400,000 and the Navy up to its authorized strength? No. In spite of the most intensive campaigns, by means of moving pictures, by means of radio, and through the press, by letters to high-school graduates, by means of booklets, the Navy and the Army and the Marine Corps are having tremendous difficulty in getting even the moderate increase in recruiting necessary in order to fill the very modest program laid out, in view of present world conditions.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. On the Fourth of July at the World's Fair in New York I made a statement similar to that which the Senator from Maryland is now making, and my statement was published so that it came to the notice of The Adjutant General of the Army. This morning I was called by him and advised that I had been misinformed; that the figures were inaccurate. He asked where I obtained them, and I told him I had obtained them in the hearing of the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate recently. He then told me that the voluntary enlistments during the first 6 months of this year had been completely satisfactory.

Mr. TYDINGS. Did he give the Senator the figures?

Mr. AUSTIN. He did. My memory of figures is so poor that I state the number with reservation. My recollection is that he stated that one-hundred-and-fifty-four-thousand-three-hundred-and-some-odd enlistments had occurred during 6 months, which is very much more than I had previously stated, in view of what had occurred in the Military Affairs Committee. Thereupon I asked if he would please furnish me in writing both figures, the gross increase and the net increase, and in what units. That information will, I presume, be forthcoming tomorrow. But according to his statement the enlistments to fill the quota under the voluntary plan in the first 6 months have proved to be satisfactory.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator from Vermont for his observation. However, even if he is quoting from memory correctly, let me say that that picture is not at all a comforting one, if it takes 6 months to get a mere 150,000 men into the Army, when armies today should be numbered by the millions. The German Army numbers four, five, or six million. The army of Great Britain numbers at least 2,000,000 or more; and the army of France numbered four or five million. Even when we get 50,000 more in 6 month's enlistments we will only have 400,000, half of whom will be comparatively new troops. The point I wish to make is that even in 6 months we have been able to obtain only 150,000 recruits in the Army, if the Senator's figures as he recalls them from memory are accurate. It is said that time is an important element. I believe it is, and so does every Senator, and every other citizen in this country. If time is important—and we are always hearing that we are racing against time—certainly 300,000 voluntary enlistments a year, strung out from January to December, are not keeping up with time very well.

I know the Senator would like to see enlistments come more rapidly than they have been coming. The point is that such enlistments are not preparedness. Even if we get 200,000 new men, what can we do with 400,000 men, half of whom are new, and for many of whom we have not the equipment, and cannot possibly obtain it for some time? What will they avail, scattered as they are all over the Philippines, Hawaii, Alaska, the Panama Canal Zone, Puerto Rico, and other places? What will those 400,000 men avail against the seasoned, disciplined, trained armies of Europe, against which we would have to contend?

Let me read a few further facts about national defense, to paint the background before arriving at the conclusion which I think is inescapable from the facts.

The United States anticipates the need of 3,922 antiaircraft guns of various types in times of emergency.

But—

It has a total, old and new, of only 1,477.
None of these is the new and efficient 90-mm. gun.
The Army needs 1,423 of the 37-mm. antiaircraft guns. It has 15; won't get any more for at least 6 months.

That is a little sidelight.

Here is another one:

"There are three things necessary for air defense," said Gen. George C. Marshall, United States Army, Chief of Staff, "pursuit planes, antiaircraft guns, and the warning devices or detectors which will give notice to pursuit aviators and to gun crews so that they will be prepared to meet the approaching hostile aircraft."

* * * * * * *

For the initial defense only, the Army declares it must have immediately available 1,350 of these devices.

But—

It has an aggregate of 404.
It requires 273 directors, but has only 168.
It wants 276 height finders, but can muster but 142.
It says 801 sound locators are needed, but can only mobilize 194.
At the present rate of manufacture it may be 2 years before these instruments can be put in service.

Here is another one:

"The Signal Corps," says a United States Army circular, "keeps the different units of the Army in constant touch, during battle and campaign, through radio, telegraph, telephone, messengers, and other communications means."

Although it still must be supplemented by other means, radio, of course, has become the vital link of liaison between various units of the field and their supporting troops. In any engagement, a series of networks—to the Artillery, to the Air Corps, between divisions and small units, to general headquarters—are set up by the Signal Corps.

Army technicians have developed a number of distinctive types of 2-way radios. They think that in three particular classifications there always should be 4,388 installations on hand and ready for use.

But—

The Army has a total of 1,225 of all of these classifications.
It is 3,163 short.

It will take a considerable length of time to supply that defect.

I have a statement on clothing. We shall require 5,000,000 yards of clothing to take care of the troops. We have no surplus on order. It will take a long while to manufacture the cloth. That is just a side light.

An army fights on its stomach; and when we get these men we must have field kitchens so that they may eat if they are to march and fight; but the Army has on hand only 756 of these. It needs 4,244 more. Considerable time would be required to obtain them.

Another statement says:

The famous French "75," modernized, is the basic gun of the Field Artillery. The War Department calculates it needs 1,439 of them, in shape for immediate use, to resist any sudden invasion of the continental United States.

Last year it had 141 modernized guns.

It has, all told, something like 700 guns, including the unimproved type which can only fire 3° to the right or left of center without changing position.

My recollection is that 2 years would be required to supply that deficiency.

Another statement says:

The United States Army figures that its Regulars require 28,850 motor vehicles at peacetime strength. It lacks approximately 1,850 vehicles.

There are very few for the National Guard. We need such vehicles. Many of them are armored cars, which are different from automobiles, and would require considerable time to build.

I shall not read all these items. I have statements on almost every line of Army endeavor. The time required to supply the deficiency is usually from 1 year to 2 years.

We cannot go into a war and stay out of a war at one and the same time. We cannot stay out of the war with one foot and at the same time go into the war with the other foot. If we feel that we ought to save democracy by joining the Allies while they are still fighting; if that is the thing for us to do; if time is precious; if we must fight while England is there to fight with us, then let us declare war and go the "whole hog."

But if, on the other hand, we consider that in our best interests, the best way to safeguard the Nation, preserve peace, and take care of our Government and its people is to stay out of the war, then let us quit moving two or three steps ahead, one step back, two steps ahead, and one step backward again, always inching, step by step, little by little, voluntarily and involuntarily, closer, closer, and closer to war. If this country is to go into war, let it decide to go into war, and not be dragged down the roadway of war against its will, step by step, until it can no longer retreat, retire, or retrace its steps.

That is what is involved in these 2 nominations, and nothing else. Not very long ago those who advocated aiding the Allies "short of war" were in hearty approval of stripping the Navy of its best planes, and the Army of some of its planes, and turning them over to the Allies. More than that, they wanted to take the mosquito fleet of some 23 boats, brand new, most modern, the finest in the world, necessary for our own defense, and turn them over to the Allies.

If those 500 or 600 Army and Navy planes and 23 mosquito boats would enable England to defeat Hitler and save us from the great catastrophe which threatens us, that is one thing; but is there a man in his right senses who believes that 400, 500, or 600 antiquated planes and 22 boats 50 feet long represent the balance of power in the struggle which is now taking place on the English Channel? That is silly.

Some of my good friends tell me that moral support will win the day. We must give the Allies spiritual and moral support. My God! The widows, women, old men, and children of 10 countries fall to their knees every night and pray to Almighty God for deliverance from the holocaust and the destruction and misery which are all around them. Spiritual support? Of course; but wars are the most unspiritual things in which men ever engage. When two men get together, each with a cannon or a gun, they do not even think about religion. They think about self-preservation. "Destroy the other man before he can destroy you."

So of what avail would it be to take a few planes from our Navy and our Army, and 23 boats no longer than this room is wide, and send them to the Allies, and say that that is aid to the Allies? If it were determinative, if it were decisive, if by any reasonable stretch of the imagination it could turn the tide, then perhaps on some grounds it might be justified; but to have our Government strip our own defenses of the best planes it has in some cases, planes which will not be replaced for 6 or 8 or 10 months or a year, leaving in many cases planes inferior to those which are being taken away and sent to Europe, is another thing.

There are those who predict that if Hitler defeats England we shall then have to take him on over in this hemisphere; but they are not willing to advocate a declaration of war now, as the logic of their position demands. None of them is advocating going to war. They are advocating so-called aids short of war, a term which is a misnomer. If we must face Hitler, as has been said, then in God's name let us keep what we need, our first line of defense, the best things we have, and add to them as rapidly as possible to face the dire threat which it is said is sure to be a part of our future.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HOLMAN. In support of the Senator's charge of inconsistency in the Government moving two or three steps forward and one step backward, let me call attention to a heading in tonight's newspaper, "Japs demand United States apology."

Mr. TYDINGS. I am about to come to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. At the same time, I wish to call attention to a statement in a letter I have received from Portland, Oreg., that ships are still loading scrap iron for Japan, as they have been loading scrap iron for the last several years. Here in a newspaper item is a list of the ships in a Columbia River harbor now loading scrap iron for Japan with which the Japanese will make battleships to enforce the demand for an apology from us. Without trespassing upon the Senator's time further, I should like this little news item printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SHIPS SLATED TO LOAD HERE—WHEAT CARGOES TO BE TAKEN

The motorship Clevedon and steamer Kentucky will both be back in Portland late this month to load cargoes of wheat for Shanghai, China, under the direction of States Steamship Co., operator of the Clevedon and owner of the Kentucky, according to Friday announcement.

Both ships are en route home from oriental voyages, the former having just delivered a cargo of salt from San Francisco to Moji, and the latter having taken flour and general freight to Tsingtao. The Clevedon is expected to load at Kerr, Gifford elevator, and the Kentucky at Vancouver.

Other ships scheduled to load bulk cargoes here soon are the Greek steamer Penelopi, due in port next Monday from Vladivostok; the Japanese motorship Kozui Maru, due in the river in mid-July; the Spanish steamer Maria del Carmen, due at Longview next Wednesday, and one or more of three vessels chartered this week for scrap-iron cargoes from the Pacific coast to Japan.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. President, whether one is a so-called isolationist or an interventionist or believes in neutrality or "aid short of war," or whatever his view may be, he must realize that today the main thing for the country to do is to prepare, to prepare, to to prepare, to prepare, not as we are preparing in the more or less leisurely, democratic way of ours, but intensively. We ought to have three shifts in every navy yard, we ought to have three shifts on every shipway, we ought to have three shifts in every school where mechanics are being trained. If the danger is one-tenth so great as most people think it is, and as some of our experts say it is, then we are certainly making preparation in a most lackadaisical way. Are we going to repeat the mistakes of 1917 and 1918? This time there will be no French to supply us with artillery; there will be no English, perhaps, to furnish us machine guns; this time we have got to provide them for ourselves.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Can the Senator explain the state of mind of a large number of our people who apparently want us to go into the war, according to their statements, and yet at the same time object to the Senator and to me on the floor of the Senate stating what the real condition of our national defense is? How does the Senator explain it? Is it that they are so completely disregardful of the protection of the youth of this country that they would have us go into a European war unprepared?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will answer the Senator, because he suggests a very interesting point. My opinion is that today the average American citizen has no conception whatsoever of the requirements necessary to develop an army, a navy, and an air force with which to fight a modern war.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me finish the sentence. Today the average American citizen has the feeling that if we were to declare war tomorrow, in about 60 days we would be all ready to do the job. It would more likely be 16 months or two years and a half before we would be in the condition in which he thinks we would be within 60 days. When injustices are done to small nations, when cruelties are perpetrated, when oppression takes place, the natural instinct of our citizens is to fight wrong, to fight injustice, to hate force, to sympathize with misery, and to deplore the killing of women and children. That instinct expresses itself in the feeling that we ought to go in and stop such crimes and outrages, when it is not realized by our people that it would be 13 months from this hour before we could even make the powder with which to supply a mere million men.

I now yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. I do not mean to detract from Congress or the sincerity of Congress, but, out of fairness to the people, it has been my humble observation that the people have been a little more aroused and a little more alert about this whole situation than the Congress has been.

Mr. TYDINGS. I cannot agree with the Senator completely as to that. Let me say that I could read a long list of things which we must have for our Army and Navy and air force but which we have not; and I am satisfied the average person does not realize that to be so. I feel embarrassed in rising on the floor and referring to the defects in our national defense, and only the knowledge that other governments, through their military and naval attachés, are aware of the situation, that there is nothing secret about it, and that much of the information is in public hearings enables me to overcome my reluctance to pointing out some of the defects in our defense and to stating that, in spite of all we can do, in spite of all the money we can appropriate, it will be 13 months from the 10th of July 1940 before we, with all the private and public plants we can build, can manufacture enough powder to supply an army of a million men. That is a sobering thought. Then, when we realize that we will not have airplane ammunition and antiaircraft ammunition for another 6 months, and we will not have the antitank guns or an adequate supply of artillery for 2 years, we begin to understand that an American soldier cannot meet a well-trained and equipped German soldier and with his bare fists hope to overcome him.

The magnificent French Army, four and a half million men, with the Maginot line on the east flank, a line built through the years, but lacking in planes, lacking in tanks, but, in spite of the reports, not lacking in valor, has laid down its arms. I do not believe half the stories that the French Army was "rotten," that it was weak, that it was of no account. I believe it was outmatched with the equipment with which wars are won, and after trying with their hearts and their brawn and their bodies to stop the gigantic German onslaught for days and weeks at a time, the morale and spirit of the French soldiers were broken when they realized that their Government, in the time of preparation, had failed to provide them with the things which alone can win a war.

Take Mr. Reynaud, the last French Premier before the German victory. Mr. Reynaud, as shown by the records of the French Senate, time and time again in days of peace begged France for mechanized divisions, begged France for more airplanes, asked the Senate for larger appropriations, and, thanks to his tireless and unceasing energy, the French did have a few mechanized divisions.

Winston Churchill, in the House of Parliament on at least 20 occasions, and outside Parliament in books and on the public platform, begged the English people over and over again to prepare for the rearming Germany, but all to no avail. The week ends went on just the same; the regular 6- or 8-hour day continued; the lackadaisical way of doing things, the leisure, which is such a charming part of the normal English life, continued. What is the price they are paying today? The possibility that the British Empire may be divided and dismembered, as now the French Empire lies in ruin. That is the picture. If France could not stop Germany, if England could not stop Germany, both of which at least prepared for years, what could be done by our little Army, fine though it be, but poorly equipped—200,000 men, now increased by 150,000 new troops—without adequate equipment, as I have in part shown? If we should intervene, what kind of intervention would it be; and what consequences would it bring to the United States of America if in that pitiable condition we were to intervene?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will yield to the Senator in a moment or two.

Do not misunderstand me. I am not unsympathetic toward the democracies; I have no cold heart to turn toward England and France; on the contrary, they have my sympathy and, indeed, some little atom of the worries and despair of their own people has been translated to my own being as the weeks have unrolled. I realize what kind of a world we may live in if certain events should transpire, but all my wishing to change them will not change them. The only thing that will change them will be a determined democracy here ready to make sacrifice, ready to train a sufficient number of men, to build up its Army and its air force. We can do nothing else in the immediate future but remain neutral; we can do nothing else certainly before the end of this year, and by that time the indications over in Europe will be clear. If all the other democracies lose, if the struggle is to come over here, and if we need to do all we can to preserve ourselves, then we certainly are not going about it very intensively. Wars cannot be fought with guns that have merely been ordered, or with men who have not been trained. That simply cannot be done; and all the spiritual support and all the moral support in the world is not worth a single bullet to the man who is actually at the front and has not that bullet.

I now yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I was interested in the observation made a moment ago by the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], in which he said that in his opinion public sentiment was in advance of the Congress upon the preparedness program. I think perhaps in certain sections of the country that observation is correct; but I want to say that it is easy enough to change public sentiment overnight, as we have seen public sentiment change in this country from the time Mr. Hitler and his legions ruthlessly invaded Holland and other lowland countries of Europe. At the same time, changing public sentiment does not meet the conditions about which the Senator from Maryland has been talking.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is exactly right about that.

Mr. LUCAS. Furthermore, I should like to ask the Senator, What would the people of this country have done 1 year ago if the Congress had sought to appropriate five, six, seven, or eight billion dollars for national defense?

Mr. TYDINGS. In my opinion, if that course had been advocated a year ago, unless it had been preceded by a campaign of information such as I have outlined in part here, most of it, if not all of it, would have been overwhelmingly defeated not only by the people but by the Representatives of the people in Congress, because up until a year ago I do not think there was a man in Congress—certainly if there had been he would have been something of a seer—who could remotely visualize that Germany would conquer Holland and Belgium and France all within a period of about 5 weeks.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator agree with me that if the Congress of the United States in 1938, just prior to the primary and the general election, had adopted a program of appropriating five, six, seven, or eight billion dollars for national defense, not a single man would have been returned to Congress who advocated such a program?

Mr. TYDINGS. I should not like to prophesy, but I think the inference of the Senator's question will speak for itself.

Mr. President, what have I been attempting to do on the floor? I have been attempting to show what will happen to this country if by any means, by direct intervention or by indirect intervention superinduced by persons in a position to superinduce it, this country should be drawn into a war against the wishes of those in a position to know its real state of preparedness. What would that mean? It would mean that we could contribute no real help to either Great Britain or France or anybody else, except by the Navy, for a period of from 1 to 2 years from this date. There is nothing of a material nature that we could throw into the scales; and if in the meantime Great Britain should be defeated, as she conceivably might be, we should then be in the war without the aid of Great Britain, and find ourselves then in the position that Great Britain is in today, when France has been taken from her side as an ally.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Not until I finish this thought. Then I will yield.

There is one thing more that I should like to say in this debate, without any reflection on any foreign government, that ought to be a part of the thinking of every American today when he considers what course his country is going to take.

A few years ago Russia and Germany were looked upon as having clashing ideologies or philosophies of government. The Russians were looked upon as the "reds" or the extreme Communists.

The Germans were looked on as somewhat of a new institution to take care of property. That was the common American conception of those two governments. They were looked upon as natural antagonists, and the thought was that they would inevitably clash in war. They are both one-man governments. What happened? Instead of clashing in war, those two so-called divergent philosophies joined together in advance and divided up Poland. But 2 years ago it looked as if Germany and Russia would be sure to clash. Indeed, Hitler said, "Drang nach Osten," the "march to the east," did he not?—and he openly intimated from the platform that Germany's destiny was to the east. But, instead of going to the east in conflict with Russia, we saw Germany and Russia divide up Poland, which, incidentally, Germany conquered in 17 days from the day of invasion.

That was a strange thing. We knew that Italy was an ally of Germany, did we not? But Italy was not in the picture then. At the appropriate time, however, Italy was drawn into the picture; and now, while there are plenty of grounds for disagreement, while there is a conflict of interest, we see Russia and Germany and Italy with a kind of an understanding and plan that so far has not conflicted, while each reaches out and takes in more and more territory.

Here of late there has been a new force creeping into the scene in the Far East. Realizing that the moment looks propitious, we find that another great nation, Japan, is beginning to coordinate her program of China and French Indo-China and the Dutch East Indies with that of Germany and Russia and Italy. It is said—I do not know whether or not it is authentic—that there are consultations back and forth between these governments, and that there is a general agreement, and so long as each stems out in a direction which does not basically conflict with the direction taken by the other there is not much room for conflict. Perhaps in the end some of them may fall out and start a war among themselves; but for the moment all four of them are working together, and all four of them are evolving into pretty much the same general type of government. Keep that fact in mind.

Suppose we were to intervene, where would we send our fleet—over to aid Great Britain? What would happen in the Far East while our fleet was over in North Atlantic waters?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will yield in a moment. And if something did happen in the Far East while our fleet was over aiding the British, what would we do? Leave our fleet over there or bring it home again—scuttle and run and leave the British and have the British cursing us for coming home and taking care of our own interests rather than joining in the war with them?

I now yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator from Maryland that the nominee now under discussion, Colonel Stimson, in his New Haven speech answered the Senator's question as to what should be done with the United States Fleet by saying that it should be used to convoy munitions to Great Britain.

Mr. TYDINGS. Well, even stronger than that, in a letter in the New York Times published on March 6, 1939, Colonel Stimson said—it is a short sentence:

> The defense against such joint action in Europe and Asia by the Fascist powers can only be securely accomplished by the common action of the naval power of the three large democracies, including the United States.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator challenge the truthfulness and the accuracy of that statement?

Mr. TYDINGS. Well, I have been talking here for an hour trying to challenge it. I do not know whether or not I have made any headway. [Laughter and applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MEAD in the chair). The occupants of the galleries are not permitted by the rules of the Senate to indulge in any demonstrations.

Mr. TYDINGS. Understand that I do not mean to say that Colonel Stimson is doing anything unpatriotic, or doing anything he has not a right to do. He thinks that is the best course for his country. I tried to show by these facts about our national defense that we would not be in a position to intervene effectively, even if that course were wise; and it is quite possible that our Allies might be defeated before we could come to their aid, and then certainly we would draw the attack of the totalitarian nations.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. So, if I understand the argument of the able Senator, it is that because we are weak we must not aid the British Fleet, which is the only possibility of our being strong enough to defend ourselves.

Mr. TYDINGS. Because we are weak we ought not to aid the British Fleet? As I recall, the French were trying to aid the British Fleet about a month ago; and, as I recall, the British were not trying to aid the French Fleet about a week ago. So in that action, when the English, and perhaps justifiably, sent the French Fleet to the bottom, the real truth comes out, that nations in time of war, like individuals, consider self-preservation the first law of nature. If the English could do that with their French ally, I am going into any war along with Great Britain in the light of realities, and with my eyes wide open. I do not say whether the English did right or wrong; that is for them to judge. We have no part in that war. I am not here to denounce them. I sympathize with them. I say there appears to be a measure of justification. I feel sorry for the French. But we know that the primary job of Great Britain is to take care of Great Britain, of France to take care of France, of Japan to take care of Japan, of Germany to take care of Germany, and of Russia to take care of Russia, and I am going to be a realist so long as I am walking around in a realistic world.

If we were to intervene, and the British were not able, even with our naval help, to repulse an attack by the totalitarian powers, then surely we would be at war. Britain would perhaps be forced to do the same thing France has been forced to do; she might be required to turn over her fleet. The Senator from Florida and I do not believe she would. I believe her ships would go down with their guns blazing, or that the ships would come to Canada. But in war we cannot believe, we have to know. When we send men out to fight a foe, we have to know how strong he is, how he will fight, the arms with which he is equipped, and we have to have as much determination to drive him backward as he has to keep us in our place. We cannot know those things 3,000 miles away, because any country put in the position in which Great Britain is today would naturally clutch at any aid very tenaciously and very strongly if she thought it would be a means of saving her from the disaster which might be in store.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. How does the able Senator distinguish the advice he is now giving his country from the advice the statesmanship of every country which has collapsed gave, with the result which the world has seen?

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me ask the Senator a question. Is he in favor of declaring war on Germany now?

Mr. PEPPER. I answer as I have reiterated heretofore—no.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then, what would the Senator have us do that is not already being done?

Mr. PEPPER. For one thing, I would have the Congress pass a law which would authorize somebody speaking for the United States Government to make Mr. Henry Ford, or anybody else, make airplanes for Britain or for anybody else the Government said they should be made for.

Mr. TYDINGS. It would be going quite far afield to have the Congress of the United States pass a law compelling an American manufacturer to make arms for a foreign country. I certainly feel that if we should go that far, we might as well declare war and take the whole cake at one bite, because we would very soon be eating the last bite, anyway.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Does not the Senator think that the best chance Great Britain has to win this war is to have air superiority over Germany?

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not worried about Great Britain winning the war. I hope she will win it. What I am worried about is the United States of America. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I insist that the Chair enforce the rule against demonstrations in the galleries. If the rule cannot be enforced, a motion will be made that the galleries be cleared. Occupants of the galleries know the rules of the Senate. They know that it is a violation of the rules to engage in demonstrations of any sort, and I insist that the rule shall be observed.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask the Senator to desist for a moment. The Chair admonishes the occupants of the galleries, realizing that they fully appreciate the fact that they are the guests of the Senate; that they must observe the rules; that they must remain in order. If they do not, the Chair will order the galleries cleared. The doorkeepers are admonished to enforce the rules.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, for the sake of the RECORD, I do not want to appear quite as callous as my remarks understandably might make me appear. Of course, I care for the preservation of democracy in Britain, and I wish the Britons well, and I hope they will resist invasion. What I wanted to say was that in this body our primary concern should be to determine how we can shape our course so that no matter what may happen, come hell or high water, this country and its people may be placed in the most advantageous position we can possibly place them in.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I want to say that I do not share in the admonition to the occupants of the galleries. Let them manifest any enthusiasm or disapproval they may care to express, so far as I am concerned, because we are all in a goldfish bowl anyway, and we like to be observed.

What I wanted to ask the Senator in my second question was, Does he think that if Great Britain should win the war, the United States would be in any danger?

Mr. TYDINGS. No.

Mr. PEPPER. Then why is not that the first question?

Mr. TYDINGS. It is the first question.

Mr. PEPPER. If air superiority were given to the British, the Senator would no doubt admit that they would win the war. Then the Senator is applauded for saying that we are not interested in England winning the war.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator's question brings to my mind an illustration. There is a gangster loose, we will say for want of a location, with no reflection on the place, in Chicago, Ill. [Laughter.] We will assume that he is devastating that locality.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I mean no reflection on Chicago. It is a great city. Let us say, a city as large as Chicago, but not Chicago.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator might take Baltimore. [Laughter.]

Mr. TYDINGS. I cannot use that city, because I live in the State of Maryland, and it would spoil my illustration. We will assume a gangster is loose in Chicago, Ill., or let us assume he does not live in that State but has come there to operate. Let us assume the Senator says to me, "Do you know the police are hunting that gangster in Chicago, Ill.? Why don't you go out there and help them hunt, because, if they do not succeed in catching him, he might conceivably take a train and go to Havre de Grace, Md., and make trouble for you there?" I say, "First of all, I am not in Chicago and cannot arrange to spend my time in Chicago"—any more than we can arrange to send our Army to Europe when it is not equipped and prepared. "Further than that, because I am afraid the police may not get the gangster, I shall buy firearms and do all I can to put my family in a position of safety in the event the gangster should kill all the policemen in Chicago. Knowing I cannot do anything about it, cannot give any aid because of one circumstance or another, I shall get all the firearms I can and teach my family how to take care of themselves in the event the gangster comes to Havre de Grace." That is the analogy.

Mr. PEPPER. In spite of the fact that the Senator has already told the Senate that it would be 13 months before we could possibly get ready to defend ourselves.

Mr. TYDINGS. And I think it will be 13 months before Mr. Hitler can get ready to come over here.

Mr. PEPPER. If Britain should be crushed in a month, does the Senator think it would be 13 months before the issue would become acute for the United States?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if England should not be crushed for 2 years, if finally the totalitarian powers should predominate on this globe, it is perfectly inevitable, even if we were not drawn into the war, that there would be not only a trade war but a war of ideas and of philosophies to which in the end we would be bound to be a party.

The difference between the Senator and me is not a fundamental one. He and I both want to preserve democracy. Our sympathies are with the Allied form of government and way of life, rather than with the totalitarian powers. The difference between the Senator and me is that while he says he does not want to declare war now, but that he wants to make Henry Ford make automobiles for the English——

Mr. PEPPER. Airplanes, for Great Britain.

Mr. TYDINGS. If I felt as the Senator does about this situation I would rather declare war now. I would rather go over with what I have, if I felt as blue about the situation as the Senator does, and aid the Allies and fight it out. Merely because we could not do that even if it were wise is one of the reasons why I cannot go along with the Senator. Even if we had the equipment, I am not saying I would then go along, but so long as we have not the equipment, I do not have to make the choice.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator think that so long as the British Fleet and the American Fleet remain intact there is any danger of either Japan or Hitler or anybody else invading the Western Hemisphere?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes, I do; and when we got off on this subject, if the Senator will recall, I had just pictured that Russia and Germany had joined and divided up Poland. Then I had pictured that Italy had joined in that action, and it appeared that Japan was working in concert with them. If they should run out of territory to conquer or to satisfy their appetite, it is possible that those foreign nations, through a chain of circumstances which we ourselves might inadvertently set in motion, might altogether take the United States of America. That is not beyond the realm of possibility at all.

Mr. PEPPER. The possibility I surmised was that with the fleets of Great Britain and the United States standing together, I do not know of any naval force in the world that could invade this hemisphere.

Mr. TYDINGS. The trouble with the Senator's argument—and I believe he will agree with me—is, how do we know that Great Britain is going to withstand invasion by the Germans?

Mr. PEPPER. I am supposing that Britain will not lose the war.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is just the point; if Great Britain does not lose the war, then what we do with the fleet will not amount to anything anyway.

Mr. PEPPER. Because they will be ready to aid us.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. PEPPER. So then our safety is tied in with the maintenance of the British Fleet and the British Government.

Mr. TYDINGS. Oh, the Senator from Florida has made a loophole for himself and is trying to get out before I can get hold of him. The Senator said "if Britain won the war." He was assuming that our fleet, together with the English Fleet, could resist all other nations.

Mr. PEPPER. That is what I said.

Mr. TYDINGS. Very well. But I say suppose Britain should not win the war.

Mr. PEPPER. If Britain should not win the war, we could not in 5 years build a fleet that would give us half safety against the existing naval and military forces of the world, and the Senator knows it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then, if the Senator's premise is sound, if Britain should win the war, we would be in no danger. We agree on that point, do we not?

Mr. PEPPER. Quite.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator says he would not declare war on Germany to help Britain win it. Am I right on that point?

Mr. PEPPER. I did say that at the present time I would not declare war on Germany.

Mr. TYDINGS. Very well. What can we do then?

Mr. PEPPER. There are a great many things we can do. One of them—to go back to that point—is that we can turn every automobile-manufacturing plant in the United States of America that is not engaged in making airplanes to building airplanes, and we can say to General Motors and Chrysler and Ford and all the rest of them, "You are going to build airplanes and sell them to Great Britain," because if Britain has air superiority Germany cannot win this war. If the British Fleet is maintained intact, Germany cannot jeopardize the safety of our continent.

Mr. TYDINGS. If, if, if!

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, let me finish. The safety of this continent depends upon the maintenance of the British Fleet. The amount of money the American taxpayer must spend for armament in America is partly determined by whether Britain's air force and fleet are maintained or collapse.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the French had only had so many more mechanical tanks; if the French had only had 10,000 airplanes; if the British had only had 10,000 airplanes; if the French had not gone forward from the little Maginot line to the support of Belgium and Holland; if there had not been any break through in Holland; if the French had not given up; if the French had not turned over their fleet to the Germans, when the French had solemnly agreed with the English that that would not be done; if the English had not destroyed part of the French Fleet at Oran; if the British had not destroyed the battle cruiser Richelieu this afternoon; if Japan was not moving in the Pacific; and if the English hold out against Germany—and if after that their fleet still is intact—oh, what a great bridge of "ifs" over which to carry the safety of 130,000,000 Americans!

Mr. PEPPER. Are we jeopardizing the defense of America, are we in any way impairing our own facilities by doing that which I have suggested, by making and selling airplanes to Britain? What sacrifice are we making by doing that?

Mr. TYDINGS. No one is objecting to that.

Mr. PEPPER. Then, the Senator from Maryland agrees that that would be a good thing?

Mr. TYDINGS. We are doing it already.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Ford is not making them, is he?

Mr. TYDINGS. I should not want to compel Mr. Ford to make them.

Mr. PEPPER. I see.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. Ford may do whatever he wants to do. I may not agree with what he thinks, perhaps. I do not agree with many people, and many people may not agree with me. But if we are to compel manufacturers to make only certain things, then let us go the whole hog and out-Hitler Hitler.

Mr. PEPPER. If, in order to defend America, it is necessary to compel people to do certain things, is the Senator agreeable to doing that?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, we are going far afield. I should rather discuss naval and military strategy.

Mr. PEPPER. One more question. The Senator from Maryland has been bemoaning the feeble effort of this Government to do things. What supreme proposals, what dynamic proposals does the Senator from Maryland make that would speed up the whole procedure and accelerate it? I should like to hear what the Senator would do.

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall be delighted to tell the Senator. If I had authority today I would cut every bit of red tape that surrounds the preparedness program.

Mr. PEPPER. What does the Senator mean by that? Let us be specific with respect to that program.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not think the Senator wants me to do that.

Mr. PEPPER. I asked the Senator the question. I want to know what the Senator proposes the Congress shall do to defend America the way he thinks it ought to be done. I will vote for it if the Senator will propose such a thing.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I shall refer again to the Naval Affairs Committee, of which my friend the Senator from Massachusetts, who was present a moment ago, is chairman. Only 3 or 4 months ago in that committee I proposed a 25-percent increase in the Navy. Think of it. Three or four months ago I made that proposal. My colleagues on that committee will recollect that. I see several of them here. The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is one, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is another. They know that in the committee I tried to get an authorization for a 25-percent increase in the Navy. Why did we not put that increase through then? Because those who came from the Navy Department in effect said that they were under injunction not to ask for more than 11-percent increase. And lo and behold, after 4 months had gone by we put through the other 14-percent increase, and lost 4 months in construction of naval vessels, which are going to be our first line of defense.

That is one way I tried to act to cut down the delay, the unconscionable delay. I agree with the Senator from Florida that the situation is serious. I do not want to be hypercritical and make broad sweeping statements, but I say that I believe that the time is rapidly coming, in fact, I believe it arrived several weeks ago, when we must expedite in every way we can, and far beyond what we have done up to the present time, the entire armament program. We must expedite enlistments. If we cannot get enough men by enlistment, if we cannot get more than 150,000 men a year, and we want an army of 400,000, we have to find ways and means to get the personnel.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator support universal service?

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, I will support it if there is no other way to get the troops necessary to protect this country.

Mr. PEPPER. How long is the Senator willing to wait until we see whether we get enough troops by voluntary enlistment?

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not the President of the United States. I am only one individual Senator. If I were President of the United States, I would not wait at all. Does that answer the Senator's question? Does not the Senator know that such a proposal could not be put through without the aid of this administration being thrown in the balance? What is the use of fooling ourselves?

Mr. PEPPER. If the administration recommends it, will the Senator from Maryland vote for it?

Mr. TYDINGS. I thought I answered that question a moment ago.

Mr. PEPPER. That is one thing the Senator from Maryland would do?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. What else would the Senator do to accelerate our preparedness effort?

Mr. TYDINGS. I would not talk so much about meddling in foreign affairs, and talk more about home defense.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is having a little difficulty in being specific. Before he finishes I wish he would give the Congress a program so we can do something about it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, that is childish argument, it seems to me. I tried here on the Senate floor only a month ago to get a tax bill written that would raise the money to help pay for this program, did I not? I did not hear the Senator from Florida support me in that effort.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from Texas offered a bill, and did the Senator from Maryland hear the statement of the Senator from Florida after the conference report on that bill was adopted?

Mr. TYDINGS. There was not a word said about taxes on the floor here then. I have been making talks every Monday morning about it, and put up charts so Senators could see them, and finally my good friend the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] was kind enough to say—perhaps he was flattering me, but he said casually one day:

> Millard, I think those talks of yours are beginning to bear some fruit. There is a movement now to have a tax bill designed to raise $600,000,000 or $700,000,000.

Who else advocated taxes here on the floor, besides members of the Committee on Finance?

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. TYDINGS. Who else? The Senator from Texas is on the Committee on Finance, is he not? The Senator did help. Other Senators have different means. Does the Senator call that cutting red tape? I would have had the tax bill on the books now.

Mr. PEPPER. The defense program is not being held up for lack of money, is it?

Mr. TYDINGS. I would quit political action and raise the money.

Mr. PEPPER. There are no bills being unpaid, are there?

Mr. TYDINGS. Everyone is scared to death about a German invasion. There is no program brought here that Congress does not put through in a week. There has been absolutely no dissenting vote here; everything that has been sent up has been approved. It is not my duty to evolve the policies for this Government. The Senator realizes that my program would not get very far. I tried to build up the Navy 25 percent some 4 months ago, and the administration was not in favor of it then. Now, 4 months later, the administration is in favor of it. I tried to get a tax bill written 2 months ago, and the administration was not in favor of it. A week later it was in favor of some increased taxation, and 2 weeks later it was in favor of a billion dollars more. The bill went to conference, and we got word finally, after 4 months had gone by, that we would finally have a tax bill.

Before the Senator asks me any more questions, let me ask him what has he done to effectuate the program the Senator from Maryland has suggested? Let us come into court with clean hands.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I will not yield now. This is a two-way street here, and I want to have this matter out. I will take care of myself, and let the Senator from Florida take care of himself.

Mr. PEPPER. I certainly would not want the virtue of the issues that we are discussing to be determined by the relative merits of the Senator from Maryland and the junior Senator from Florida.

The question is not what either of us has done that is so laudable. The question is what the country and the Congress can do to effectuate a preparedness program.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is just what I have been talking about.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from Florida stood on this floor and advocated a seven-point program which was more vigorous and would assure a more effective preparedness program than anything the Senator from Florida has yet heard from the Senator from Maryland. I challenge him to lay his program alongside that of the Senator from Florida and let the Congress and the country determine which one would get action first and best.

Mr. TYDINGS. The only point about the Senator's program is that he has got nowhere with any of his seven points, and I have got 100 percent with both my points.

Mr. President, I believe in preparedness; but the seven-point program reminds me of what the old politicians used to say: "You can always believe in three things and be elected to office: One, large appropriations; two, no taxes; and three, the American flag. They can never lick you on those."

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. I would rather not yield, because I do not wish to prolong this debate by useless questions. However, I do not wish to be discourteous to the Senator. I will yield again.

Mr. PEPPER. This will be the last inquiry. If the Senator will examine those seven points, I think perhaps he will not repeat the accusation he has just implied, that they are glittering generalities.

Mr. TYDINGS. What points have been accomplished?

Mr. PEPPER. The first point was to give the President full wartime power to prepare to defend America.

Mr. TYDINGS. The President has had full wartime power for 7 years.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator knows that that is not so.

Mr. TYDINGS. Very well. What is the second point?

Mr. PEPPER. Another phase of that program was to authorize the President to take into custody and confine any alien in this country whose freedom would, in his opinion, jeopardize the defense program. Is that a glittering generality?

Mr. TYDINGS. How many aliens has the President taken into personal custody since that power was conferred on him?

Mr. PEPPER. The President has not had such power, because Congress has never passed such a law.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then the Senator is not really putting his program over, as I put mine over.

Mr. PEPPER. I thought the Senator was going to discuss the specific nature of the program. If the Senator will remember the attitude he took when the seven-point program was offered, it was that it would confer dictatorial power and authority on the President.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I remember it well.

Mr. PEPPER. And the Senator was not in favor of such a step. So he does not want to defend America in that way, and he does not offer any program of his own to speed up the program now in progress.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not wish to continue this personal controversy with the Senator. The Senator is a good representative of his State. He is a man of his own opinion. He does the best he can, and so do I; and I do not want to reflect on him.

The Senator says we have accomplished nothing. We have a 25-percent increase in the Navy, have we not?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; and in accordance with the recommendation of the administration a 70-percent increase is in progress.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Maryland was first in this body to advocate such an increase. We have a tax bill of $1,000,000,000 to pay for it, have we not? We also have a new tax bill written.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator refer to the tax bill of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]? To what bill does the Senator refer?

Mr. TYDINGS. I am saying that we have a tax bill. It is not my tax bill, but I think I can say without conceit that I believe I had some little part in helping to get a tax bill started in this body and in the other body. So I can show some little constructive efforts which have borne fruit.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator had much to do with the tax bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I wish to conclude. I will ask the Senator to be brief.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to cooperate with the Senator in concluding. I hope we may get away from the tax bill, conscription, and all the side issues, and return to the question before the Senate, so that we may obtain a vote on the nomination of Mr. Stimson. The Senator from Maryland has delivered a very interesting address——

Mr. TYDINGS. And he proposes to talk for as long as he desires. I ask the Senator from Kentucky please to take his seat so that I may conclude with all possible dispatch.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not wish to irritate the Senator——

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall be the judge of when I speak and how long I shall speak.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that. I was hoping——

Mr. TYDINGS. This debate has been prolonged because I have wanted to be kind and tolerant. I have gone far afield, and I do not feel that I am now called upon further to yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I merely wished to say to the Senator that if I can cooperate with him in courteously yielding or refusing to yield to the distinguished Senator from Florida, to whom he has been extremely courteous, I wish to offer my services in that connection. I did not mean in any way to irritate the Senator from Maryland by suggesting that we get back to the question before the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is very tolerant and kindly. If occasionally I exhibit a little heat, he knows that it is not from lack of affection or regard for him, because I have both in quantity.

Mr. President, I have painted the picture. All the byroads up which we have gone in this debate in response to the questions of the Senator from Florida have nothing to do with the essential facts in the case. The naked truth is that on land we are woefully unprepared. First, I should say that on sea we are splendidly prepared. With the exception of a modern air force, more modern planes, our Navy is the finest afloat. Its personnel and its morale are of the very best; but on land we are pitifully unprepared. Part of that has been due to our traditional policy to have a small Army, relying on our Navy; but the point is that if we were to go into the war now, we probably could not throw any decisive factor into the balance. If we were to go into the war we might find that Great Britain, as much as the Senator from Florida and I would like to see her survive, would go down, and we might even see the British Fleet in the same position in which the French Fleet now is. If that should happen, we should be left alone, with no allies.

So I cannot believe that at this juncture, in our present state of unpreparedness, we ought to induct into the Cabinet men whose definite philosophy is one of intervention.

On the first day of the hearings I thought that Colonel Knox was pretty much of an interventionist in the light of facts which an able committee brought out; and, in answer to specific questions, he gradually restricted his intervention aspirations and ideas until on the last day I did not think there was much difference between Colonel Knox and myself on that point. However, I feel that basically, emotionally, and inspirationally the colonel would like to go to the aid of the Allies; and inasmuch as it is proposed to place him at the head of a Department which has recently to some extent been stripped of some of its necessary equipment, I do not believe, much as I like him, much as I admire him, much as I respect him, that the thing should be judged on the general lines upon which nominations are usually judged.

I want to see to it that this country shall not be driven inch by inch into war. So far as my vote is concerned, I intend to cast it to keep America out of war, certainly so long as it is unprepared.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I prefer not to yield.

Finally, if we are drawn into this war, the picture of the totalitarian nations banded together, as well they might be, putting us in a position in which we should invite their attack, is one which we ought to avoid if we can.

For all these reasons, without reflecting on either of the nominees in the slightest degree, and even though I admire and like Colonel Knox, I shall cast my vote against confirmation of the nominations of both these men.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 283) authorizing Col. Donald H. Connolly to hold the office of Administrator of Civil Aeronautics in the Department of Commerce.

BERT W. HELMER—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 253)

As is legislative session,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MEAD in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, S. 1009, "granting a pension to Bert W. Helmer."

It is the purpose of the bill to authorize and direct the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Bert W. Helmer, late of the United States Coast Guard, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

This veteran filed an application in August 1934 for pension on account of tuberculosis alleged to have resulted from his service in the United States Coast Guard. He is not entitled to pension for the reason that the disability was incurred prior to the approval of the act of July 2, 1930, "An act to apply the pension laws to the Coast Guard."

Aside from any question of merit in this or other similar cases, approval of this bill is objectionable for the following reasons: First, it would give preferential treatment to this claimant over others whose claims are equally meritorious; second, it would arbitrarily fix a rate of pension without the usual administrative investigation and appraisal of the degree of disability and service connection; and, third, it would perpetuate, without change, a rate of pension which would not take cognizance of any change in the disability status of the veteran.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 9, 1940.

HENRY L. STIMSON

The Senate resumed the consideration of the nomination of Henry L. Stimson, of New York, to be Secretary of War.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, within a few hours after the nominations of Colonel Stimson and Colonel Knox were sent to the Senate, I stated upon this floor that it was my intention to vote against the confirmation of both of them, not because I had any doubt as to the patriotism of either, not because I doubted the high character of either, not because either was a Republican, and not because they were both reactionaries along political lines.

I do not desire to detain the Senate unnecessarily by restating what I stated on that occasion. I desire only to say that the testimony before the Military Affairs Committee in the case of Colonel Stimson, and before the Naval Affairs Committee in the case of Colonel Knox, has abundantly justified the statement which I made on that occasion, that Colonel Stimson and Colonel Knox are both interventionists.

Mr. President, as I read the record before both committees, there has been no dispute as to the facts going to make up the record of Colonel Stimson and of Colonel Knox. They admit the facts. They admit the theory. They admit the positions which they have maintained in the past, and which they are now maintaining. They only quibble about the use of the term "interventionist."

I insist that the testimony of Colonel Stimson before the Military Affairs Committee, and of Colonel Knox before the Naval Affairs Committee, is in each case a perfect portrait drawn by the skillful hand of an interventionist—in each case by his own hand. They may deny that the policies which they have advocated, and which neither has recanted except to a very minor extent in the case of Colonel Knox, constitute intervention.

Mr. President, when it is said that Colonel Stimson recommends the use of the United States Navy in convoying munitions to a belligerent; when it is said that Colonel Stimson recommends turning over United States naval vessels to belligerents, he may deny as much as he pleases the applicability of the term "interventionist." The fact still remains that he is in favor of committing the United States to a course of war—war not next year, not war 2 years from now, but war the very moment his recommendations are carried into effect.

The poet said:

> You may break, you may shatter the vase if you will,
> But the scent of the roses will hang round it still.

And Colonel Stimson and Colonel Knox may deny as much as they please the use of the term "interventionist," but the fact remains that the policies which they have recommended and still recommend constitute intervention, and constitute a course designed to take the United States into war.

Mr. President, the suggestion has been made here by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the chairman of the committee, for whom I have very great respect and affection, that the purpose of the appointment of Colonel Stimson and Colonel Knox is to present an appearance of national solidarity. The suggestion has been made that it is a coalition Cabinet. It is no such thing. The opposition to Colonel Stimson and Colonel Knox does not come because they are Republicans. Heaven knows, during the past 7 years we have confirmed enough persons in the Cabinet who were not Democrats. [Laughter.] On the first day of the first special session, on the day the President was sworn into office on the 4th of March 1933, we confirmed Secretary Ickes, Secretary Wallace, and Secretary Perkins, none of whom had ever claimed to be a Democrat. It was done without a dissenting voice, without the slightest semblance of dispute or debate; and so far as Colonel Knox and Colonel Stimson being Republicans is concerned, there would not be a single dissenting voice on the floor of the Senate today as to their confirmation.

It is said that these nominations are in the interest of national solidarity, a coalition Cabinet. Mr. President, let us see what a coalition Cabinet is. Under a government employing the ministerial system—which we do not have—a coalition Cabinet is one bringing together the various parties, at least two or more of the various parties in the country, for a common purpose. The idea of a coalition Cabinet presupposes that the representatives coming to the Cabinet shall be the representatives by authority of the parties which they are supposed to represent.

In the last war we all recall that when the British formed a coalition Cabinet, before Mr. Bonar Law, the leader of the opposition, entered the coalition Cabinet there was a meeting of the conservative members of the House of Commons, who authorized and directed Mr. Law as their representative to enter the coalition Cabinet. He and other members of the various parties, as the representatives and by the authority of their parties, laid aside party lines and entered the Cabinet and pursued a common purpose. At the end of the war, when the Conservative Party instructed Mr. Bonar Law to withdraw from the coalition Cabinet, from the Lloyd George Cabinet, Mr. Bonar Law withdrew, and the Cabinet fell. In the present war, Mr. Atlee, leader of the Labor Party, only entered a coalition Cabinet by authority of the great party, which he led. In other words, a coalition Cabinet presupposes a responsible representation.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the distinguished Senator from Missouri advise me who has said that this is a coalition Cabinet?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It has been repeatedly said on this floor and off this floor. It has been put out by the ballyhooers in favor of the confirmation of Colonel Knox and Colonel Stimson.

Mr. LUCAS. I am in favor of the confirmation of the nominees, though I have not been one of the ballyhooers; but I have never understood in the slightest sense that this is a coalition Cabinet, if I understand what the term "coalition Cabinet" means; and certainly Colonel Knox does not understand that it is a coalition Cabinet, because he explained that very thoroughly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator from Illinois heard the distinguished chairman of the committee——

Mr. LUCAS. I did not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. He stated that these appointments were in the interest of national solidarity. I am coming to that in just a minute, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, that does not mean a political coalition.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, that was the implication. If the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Texas will permit me, I will come to that point in just a moment.

Mr. President, the purpose, the only purpose of the appointment of these two gentlemen—who, so far as any party ties are concerned, apparently do not represent anybody except themselves—is not a coalition Cabinet, not a Cabinet in the interest of national solidarity, but a war Cabinet. Why else should two distinguished gentlemen be selected, the two outstanding advocates in the whole Republican Party, and possibly in the whole United States of intervention, of measures inevitably and directly leading to war, except to set up a Cabinet which would be known as being willing to carry out such policies? Why should Colonel Stimson, the leading interventionist of the country, succeed Harry Woodring, known to all men to be the leading noninterventionist member of the Cabinet for the past several years, except for the purpose of establishing the very policies which Colonel Knox and Colonel Stimson have advocated and made their own?

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. HOLT. I wish to advise the Senator from Missouri that Colonel Knox's own newspaper, the Chicago Daily News, had in large, black type clear across the front page this headline:

> Coalition for United States.
> Knox, Stimson, nominated for Cabinet posts.
> Roosevelt chooses two Republicans in action without precedent.

That is the headline on the front page of Colonel Knox's own newspaper.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, it is for this reason that with very great regret I find myself unable to vote for the confirmation of either Colonel Stimson or Colonel Knox. As I said the other day, I have known Colonel Knox for a great many years, and have the very highest respect for his character, his ability, and his patriotism; and I am happy to say that for many years I have enjoyed his friendship. I am not acquainted with Colonel Stimson, but I have a high regard for his patriotism and his ability and standing. But for the reason that the confirmation of the nominations of these two gentlemen will inevitably be taken, as their nominations already have been taken, abroad and in this country, as the constitution of a war Cabinet, one geared for intervention, I find myself completely unable to vote for the confirmation of either one.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, on account of the lateness of the hour I shall not take the time of the Senate to discuss at any length, from my point of view, the issue raised by the nomination which is now before the Senate. It is quite apparent that the issue is clearly drawn. We have advanced very far into interfering in foreign affairs.

I do not question the patriotism of any man who disagrees with some of us who deplore the intervention we have already taken. We have not been neutral. We admit that we are not neutral. We say that we are going to go as far as we can without going to war; that we will do everything short of war. Applying that to men as to nations means the same to me as if we would say to a man, "I will kick you in the shins, I will spit in your face, but I will not fight."

Americans have a reputation far different from that. I do not think America is afraid to fight when there is occasion for it, but I cannot help remembering, having read history, how well we did in 150 years, starting with a little strip along the Atlantic and becoming the most powerful nation in the world, and the envy of the world, by minding our own affairs. Our people came here to escape the religious persecutions and the political prejudices and upheavals and wars of Europe. They came here to find sanctuary, and they were protected here under our Constitution. We became great because we were true to our confession of faith, until we began to go back to the things from which our people from the beginning escaped, and started to experiment again, to go back to the political travesties of Europe.

I question the point of view but not the patriotism or the honesty of Mr. Stimson or Mr. Knox. Honest men may differ. Those of us who are called isolationists have been maligned because we have stuck to the old fundamental doctrine which we have followed so long in foreign policy, which has made the United States what it is today, because we believe that the place to defend American institutions is on American soil, where they first found life on this earth. Those who want to go back and intervene in the politics and the wars of Europe I have no doubt are as patriotic as we are. I do not want to malign them, but I cannot agree with them.

I have never had bad neighbors, but if I did I would not go out in front of their houses and call them names. I notice that a man who goes around among his neighbors and tells them how to run their business, and finds fault with the way in which they run their business, always neglects his own. A man's first duty is to attend to his own business, and to take care of his own family. Our first duty is to take care of the United States and its people, to protect ourselves and to protect them, by military force if necessary, and by our lives if necessary, against the shambles ruining and degrading Europe, the result of centuries of religious and political conflicts.

Doctrines and problems from which our people from the very beginning, from the descendants of those who came over on the Mayflower, came here to escape, we will avoid so long as we keep from meddling. The last experiment we made has not yet been paid for nor its malignant results appraised. We were told we were going over in a holy crusade, a holy crusade to make a new world, to save democracy. In that experiment we went to the aid of the Czar of Russia, with his imperial government, and of the Emperor of Japan, fighting for democracy. When we had finished, we first found out what the game was about when the secret treaties came out, which showed how the other powers had under the table dealt the cards to divide the world among themselves. Then we knew they were not fighting for democracy at all, but, as Woodrow Wilson said after the war was over in a speech at St. Louis, he discovered that the World War was fought for trade, and commerce, and land, and oil fields.

Two or three years ago we discovered the secret treaties had been in the State Department since 1917, yet President Wilson, who led us into that crusade, when he came back from his first trip to Paris, said to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that he did not know anything about the treaties until his first trip to Paris; but they had been here for more than 2 years, placed in the State Department by Mr. Balfour.

Now here we are, the sons of every race in Europe, the descendants of people who came here to escape the persecutions of Europe and the troubles of Europe. This country has been a refuge, so far, for the poverty-stricken and the persecuted races and peoples of every country. They have been protected here. They could come with their own language, with their children, and build their homes, and they could become citizens. They could sing the songs they sang in the old country, and no one interfered with them. They could worship God according to the dictates of their conscience, in the kind of a church in which they worshipped in the old country. It did not make any difference what creed or what race they came from, they all had the same protection from our courts and our Constitution. There have been waves of religious and political prejudice here, but they made no headway, because, no matter who the people were, they were protected in their right to the pursuit of happiness, to freedom of speech, freedom of assembly, freedom of worship. Have American institutions cost the recent generations so little that they consider them cheap? Their fathers paid a heavy price in toil, thrift, self-denial to build our country and foster, encourage, and preserve them.

Mr. President, it seems to me that we are on dangerous ground when we forget our glorious past, that we are on safe ground when we follow the road of keeping out of the coils of Europe, under the advice of our first President, George Washington, and of Jefferson, Monroe, Andrew Jackson, and Grover Cleveland. We followed that advice from the time we were small until we became great. I sometimes think that now we are worthy of being great. Can we so remain? We can remain great, by being true to our confession of faith, our national political confession of faith, which our founders wrote in the Declaration of Independence, and later the Constitution.

A nation which remains true to its confession of faith—like a man—cannot go far wrong. But we have been importuned since the last World War, propagandized with the idea of the inevitablity, as we are told, of getting into the next world war, which is now upon us. The propaganda has been very well organized, and has been persistent, to instill into the minds of our people the idea that whenever there is a war in any part of the world we must necessarily go in. That is a new doctrine. That is the internationalist doctrine. That is not the doctrine of one who pays first attention to the salvation and the safety of his own country. Of course, we abhor these dictatorial forms of government which mean political slavery. People who do not know history, do not know that old forms have been resurrected from the political garbage dump heaps of the past, and painted up and given new names, and sold to the gullible as new methods and processes for economic and political salvation for the human race.

The question is: Are we, with what little defense means we have, to venture upon another experiment, to do missionary work with bomb and bayonet all over the world, when, as I believe, we have plenty to do to look after our own affairs and to protect our own shores? We have 20,000,000 people on relief who we should put back to work. They are in that condition as a result of our experiment in the last war. The cost of that experiment has not been calculated to this day. It cost the Federal Government $5,000,000,000 to fight the so-called Civil War for 4 years, and for the 3 years of reconstruction. We know now that the last World War experiment has cost us $50,000,000,000 up to date, and I do not know how much it will cost us in the future by reason of the depression that was caused by the collapse of our national economy, which is still with us. Then we have the expenses of pensions, and the costs of operating hospitals all over the country, hospitals filled with ruined victims, thousands with mutilated bodies, many insane.

If we could save Europe that would be one thing. Europe is going to pieces. Europe is conducting its wars on paper money, and is rapidly ruining its credit and its currencies. Last winter there were millions of hungry men and women in Europe, and next winter there will be ten times as many.

What can we do to save Europe? Europe must save itself. The United States must save itself. I cannot agree with those who want to interfere with war in Europe on the assumption that we are the richest Nation in the world, and that we can save the world simply by spending money. The strength of a nation depends upon the moral character of its citizenship, upon its production, upon its courage and willingness to labor and toil, and not to waste. We are a wasteful Nation. We waste almost as much in times of peace as other people do in times of war.

We speak of going to war to save democracy. War does not save democracy. Mechanized war destroys democracy. War is the greatest enemy of democracy in these modern days, because it brings national bankruptcy, and national bankruptcy brings hunger, unemployment and famine and suffering, and that is the best soil in which to grow disorder, discontent, and revolution. Instead of saving democracy I am afraid the World War will end all democracy that is left in Europe.

I do not believe the democratic form of governments of Europe or the constitutional form of government, such as ours, can be maintained and sustained, defended and preserved on a bankrupt national economy.

I do not question the honesty or the patriotism of those who ever since the last World War have been prepared to get us into the World War that is now in progress. But have they every stopped to think that if we get into this world war, and we may prolong the war for 5 years, it may destroy whatever democracy is left? Are they perfectly sure that no matter who wins in this war there will be any democracy left?

We told the boys we sent into the last World-War experiment that they were going on a great crusade to make an entirely new order of society. Cannot the statesmen who in good faith are now trying to get us into the world war be a little bit more honest with the boys who would be sent overseas in the event we enter the war? Are you absolutely sure that there will be a better order in Europe? Are you absolutely sure that it will restore to the world a more idealistic democratic society? Did you ever stop to think that it may ruin whatever democracy and civilization is left, including our own?

I do not know whether he was correctly quoted or not, but at least some years ago Mr. Churchill, of England, was quoted as saying that because the United States entered into the last World War the war was prolonged for a year longer than it would have otherwise lasted, and resulted in a worse treaty of peace than would have been made had a negotiated treaty been entered into.

The people of England are fighting for their lives in good faith, and I agree with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] when he said that every nation, no matter how good its people, no matter what its form of government, when it is fighting in a war fights for its own salvation, and it will do whatever it finds necessary to do to save its life, and I do not blame it. I cannot agree with the interventionists, who evidently want to drive us into this world war, although they have not had the courage to come out openly and say it to this day. The writing, however, is on the wall as plainly as though it were written there by the hand of God Almighty Himself, that that is what they mean. I cannot agree with them.

Mr. President, I say I cannot vote for the confirmation of Mr. Stimson. I do not question his patriotism or his honesty, or his ability.

Much is said about unity. There cannot be unity among 130,000,000 people on a question so vital as that, studying it in the light of the history of the past, and we have no light to guide our future except the light of the past.

I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in connection with my remarks an editorial from the newspaper called The Wanderer, of St. Paul, Minn.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the St. Paul Wanderer of June 27, 1940]

FEAR OF INVASION

In his address before the House of Commons on June 18, Prime Minister Churchill briefly stated the facts of the colossal military disaster which overtook France. He then estimated the chances of invasion of England, both from the sea and from the air. If his words were reassuring to the people of the British Isles they certainly ought to be reassuring to the people of this country. Americans are now being bombarded with the fear that when Hitler has finished off France and England he will marshall his forces to conquer South and North America. Many Americans are succumbing to this fear. A panic of fear is running through the country. President Roosevelt unfortunately is feeding its flames. The fear hysteria is giving him another opportunity to spend some five to ten billions of dollars prior to the November elections.

With regard to an invasion from the sea, Prime Minister Churchill said: "Now we must remember that even 5 divisions, even lightly equipped, would require 200 to 250 ships, and with modern air reconnaissance and photography, it would not be easy to collect such an armada and marshall it across the seas with any powerful naval force to escort it with any possibility that it would not be intercepted long before it reached the coast and the men all drowned in the sea, or at the worst, blown to pieces with their equipment when they were trying to land."

Americans ought to ponder these words. They come from a man who is an expert in naval affairs. If such are the difficulties an invading force would face in trying to span less than a hundred miles of sea, what would be the difficulties in trying to reach American shores over 3,000 miles of water? The men of the Navy at Washington are not giving the American people the full facts as to the difficulties that would be incurred by a foreign invading armed force. They see a chance now to get billions of dollars to spend which under normal conditions of mind they would not get.

Prime Minister Churchill then touched on the chances of invasion from the air. While not underrating the power and number of the German air forces, he showed what difficulties would be encountered by an invasion from the air, and concluded: "It seems quite clear that no invasion on a scale beyond the capacity of our ground forces to crush speedily is likely to take place from the air until our air force has been definitely overpowered." In proportion as the distance from air bases to enemy military objectives increases the difficulties of invasion by air increase. Even Hitler knew this, and hence against all rights and treaties invaded the Netherlands and Belgium in order to have air bases from which to operate closer to England.

Sinister forces are at work in order to draw the American people into a war which is not of their making and with which they have nothing to do. The American people want peace. To have it, it is necessary to keep cool and rational.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in my opinion there is a sharp distinction between the case of Mr. Stimson, nominee for Secretary of War, and that of Colonel Knox, nominee for Secretary of the Navy. Both of the nominees are able and patriotic citizens; and I am willing to pass over their somewhat extreme views, frequently expressed, in reference to the extent to which governmental aid should be given to the Allies.

I am unwilling, however, to advise the President to put at the head of the War Department a citizen who advocates policies that, in my judgment, would invite, if not actually precipitate, our entry into the European war. The country is opposed to war, the President has declared himself against war, yet Mr. Stimson on his own statements is one of the strongest interventionists in the Nation, and has been boldly outspoken in developing the war spirit in America.

Mr. Stimson's public declaration before his nomination as Secretary of War, and which he does not deny, precludes my giving my consent and advice to his confirmation. Two days before his nomination Mr. Stimson recommended that this country should immediately throw open all its ports to the British and French naval and merchant marines for all repairs, refueling, and other services. Mr. Stimson himself admits that this is an unneutral act. In my opinion, it is an act of war, an invitation to bring the European war to our own ports.

In contrast with this statement of Mr. Stimson is the statement of Colonel Knox before the Committee on Naval Affairs. I quote:

I should think we would have to intern every belligerent warship that comes into our ports.

Mr. Stimson also said, two days before his nomination, that we should send planes and other munitions (admittedly contrabands of war) to Britain and France, if necessary in our own ships and under convoy. Such a course of action would, in my opinion, permit American ships filled with munitions to go into foreign combat zones, where our own laws now prohibit them from going. He would even go further, and permit them to be convoyed by the American Navy, which, of course, would be making our naval vessels subject to immediate attack, and we would be participating immediately in the European war. Other statements made by Mr. Stimson indicate his conviction that we should have entered the war some time ago.

In view of the evidence in these two cases, and my own strong opposition to any action by our Government that would tend to involve us in the European war, I cannot consent and advise the President to place Mr. Stimson in the important post of Secretary of War.

As to Colonel Knox, I shall vote for his confirmation, for he has denied entertaining any such war-provocating sentiments and his views with respect to speeding up our naval-vessel and aircraft-building program, so as to provide our country with an impregnable defense are in accord with the sentiments of the country.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I had intended to make some brief observations, as I thought it my duty to do, concerning the nomination now pending before the Senate. I had purposed to do so largely because most of the addresses—in fact, all of them except the address delivered by the able Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD]—have been made in opposition to the nominations of Mr. Stimson and Colonel Knox. However, it is very desirable that we conclude the consideration of this nomination and vote before we adjourn for the day. Therefore I shall not detain the Senate with any extended remarks on the subject.

It seems that the bulk of the opposition to Colonel Stimson grows out of the fact that on the 18th of June he made a speech in which he expressed certain views, among them being the view that he would repeal the neutrality law now on the statute books. I do not recognize any fundamental difference between the views of a man who would repeal a law now on the statute books and the views of those who voted against putting it in the statutes in the original situation. So I do not think his nomination should be rejected because if he were a member of the legislative body he would vote to repeal the Neutrality Act.

In his address on the 18th of June he conveyed the opinion that it would be in the interest of the United States and our defense to open up our ports to the repair and refueling of British ships. As I have read the testimony of Colonel Stimson, his entire speech, and his attitude in the speech on the 18th, were based upon his conception of the defense and the best interests of the United States. Many men of honest judgment and views differ as to the best way of defending the United States.

In his speech he also suggested that we might convoy munitions to the belligerent nations of Europe. I myself certainly disagree with that view. No matter how strongly Colonel Stimson entertains it, he could not execute it as Secretary of War. Nobody could execute it as Secretary of War. Nobody could execute it as Secretary of the Navy unless the Congress itself should pass legislation authorizing and directing that that course be pursued.

In a world of chaos and confusion, such as that in which we are living today, it is perfectly natural for honest and patriotic men to disagree about the best course to pursue in defending our own rights and our own country; and yet it is hardly fair to say that because men disagree as to the best method of defending our own country and guarding against future dangers they are to be denied the opportunity of service to our country. Such disagreements cut through all strata of our society. They cut through political lines. They cut through religious differences. They cut through all grades of our society and our population. On any street corner in America heated arguments may be found in progress—probably at this very hour—over what is the best course to be pursued by the United States in protecting our interests.

It has been my feeling, and it is now my feeling, that we ought not to be swept off our feet by emotion. We have our emotions and our prejudices. We have our deep-rooted conceptions of the rights of men and of liberty; yet we cannot afford, as Members of the Senate and as responsible officers of the Government, to allow ourselves to be swept aside from the performance of our duty merely by emotion. We must mix judgment and discretion with emotion.

Thirty years ago Colonel Stimson was Secretary of War under President Taft. He was an able Secretary of War, and he has maintained his familiarity with the War Department from that time until this. He was Secretary of State under Mr. Hoover. He was an able, conscientious, and, I may say, outstanding Secretary of State. I have heretofore said—and I believe it will bear repetition—that if some of his recommendations and views had been carried out by other nations during his incumbency as Secretary of State, the world might not be found in its present tragic situation.

Whatever Mr. Stimson's views may have been as a private citizen, no doubt without any contemplation that he would be again called into public service, as he says in his testimony, I have faith to believe that in the discharge of his duties as head of the War Department he will have single-mindedness of purpose in undertaking to build up our defenses to guard our Nation and our hemisphere in the protection of all the rights which Americans regard as sacred.

Whether or not there should be a coalition Cabinet is immaterial. Whatever may be our views as to the merits of the European war, they seem to me to be immaterial and beside the point. Nobody disputes or doubts Mr. Stimson's ability, his integrity, or his patriotism. If, because of their differences of opinion, we are to deny to outstanding Americans the opportunity to serve their country we might even say that that distinction ought to be carried even to the voters, and that they should not be allowed to vote for or against men who are candidates for public office because their opinions do not happen to agree.

Mr. President, I hope the nomination of Colonel Stimson will be confirmed by the Senate in the interest of American unity, not because there are not thousands of Democrats in the country who are qualified to be Secretary of War, but because in these days our defense program is not partisan. It is neither Democratic nor Republican. If war should overtake us—which God forbid it should ever do—it would be neither a Democratic nor a Republican war, but an American conflict in defense of our rights and our institutions.

If such be our hope and aspiration, certainly it seems to me that we do not endanger our safety, our peace, or our defense by inviting into the Cabinet of a Democratic President an outstanding Republican who has spent most of his life in the interest of peace, advocating peace, and working for peace, not only in our country but throughout all the nations of the world.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the confirmation of Mr. Stimson's nomination.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Andrews	Downey	Lucas	Sheppard
Ashurst	Ellender	Lundeen	Shipstead
Austin	Gerry	McCarran	Slattery
Bailey	Gibson	McKellar	Smith
Barbour	Gillette	McNary	Stewart
Barkley	Green	Maloney	Taft
Bilbo	Guffey	Mead	Thomas, Idaho
Bone	Gurney	Miller	Thomas, Okla.
Bridges	Hale	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Harrison	Murray	Tobey
Burke	Hatch	Neely	Townsend
Byrd	Hayden	Norris	Tydings
Byrnes	Herring	Nye	Vandenberg
Capper	Hill	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys
Caraway	Holman	Overton	Walsh
Chandler	Holt	Pepper	Wheeler
Chavez	Hughes	Pittman	White
Clark, Idaho	Johnson, Calif.	Radcliffe	Wiley
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Colo.	Reed
Connally	King	Reynolds
Danaher	La Follette	Schwartz

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Henry L. Stimson to be Secretary of War? On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. NYE (when Mr. FRAZIER's name was called). My colleage [Mr. FRAZIER] is paired on this question with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. If the Senator from Alabama were present, I am advised that he would vote "yea." If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. KING (when Mr. GEORGE's name was called). The senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] was compelled to leave the Chamber because of a previous engagement which he could not avoid. He authorized me to state that if present he would vote "yea." He also authorized me to state that his colleague the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma (when Mr. LEE's name was called). My colleague the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] is absent on public business. Were he present he would vote "yea."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am informed that if present he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay." I withhold my vote.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri (when Mr. TRUMAN's name was called). My colleague the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] is unavoidably detained on important public business. I am not advised how he would vote if present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. WAGNER's name was called). The present occupant of the chair announces the unavoidable absence of his colleague the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HILL. My colleague the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is absent on important public business.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] are both unavoidably detained from the Senate. If present, they would both vote "yea." The Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY] is necessarily absent.

Mr. BYRD. My colleague the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is necessarily detained. If present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 56, nays 28, as follows:

YEAS—56

NOT VOTING—12

Bankhead	Frazier	Lee	Smathers
Brown	George	Russell	Truman
Donahey	Glass	Shipstead	Wagner

So the nomination of Henry L. Stimson to be Secretary of War was confirmed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified immediately of the action of the Senate in confirming the nomination of Mr. Stimson to be Secretary of War.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

Mr. BARKLEY. In view of the lateness of the hour we shall not attempt to take up the nomination of Colonel Knox to be Secretary of the Navy until tomorrow, but I ask that the remaining nominations on the executive calendar be acted on at this time.

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION

Mr. McCARRAN. I report favorably from the Committee on the District of Columbia the nomination of Mr. Riley E. Elgen to be a member of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia. In view of the fact that Mr. Elgen is out of office, and that the Commission is without a chairman, and that a majority of the Committee on the District of Columbia recommended the confirmation of Mr. Elgen, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Elgen's nomination be considered at this time.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, has the committee reported favorably on the nomination?

Mr. McCARRAN. The committee reported favorably on the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination? The Chair hears none, and without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. McCARRAN. I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

IN THE NAVY

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, I report favorably sundry nominations of persons for promotion in the Navy, which were made by the President today. These nominations are entirely of routine character and total several hundred, and because of the large amount of printing involved, I ask unanimous consent for present consideration and confirmation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nominations? The Chair hears none, and the nominations are confirmed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be at once advised of the confirmations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be immediately notified.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for promotion, and citizens for appointment as second lieutenants in the Marine Corps.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, reported favorably the nomination of Mrs. Evelyn Adams Whyte, of California, to be recorder of the General Land Office [reappointment].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the next nomination on the Executive Calendar.

FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK BOARD

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William H. Husband to be a member of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed. That concludes the calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JULY 9, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O sacred Head, with grief and shame weighed down, look upon us with Thy favor and vouchsafe to us Thy grace. Dissolve our hearts in thankfulness and may we rejoice in the sinner's dying Friend. We pray that each succeeding day may bring us in closer relationship with Thy truth, for in Thee our hope finds satisfaction and battles on through the contradictions of life. We thank Thee, dear Lord, for the cup of mercy which Thou hast forever filled. Bless us with the sense of pardon, with its sweet peace and joy; bless the altars of our homes with that love which will not let us go. When the splendor of the west is lingering in the summer sky, help us to see beyond the farther distances flowing into the sunset which is the dawn and the milestones of earth are past forever. In Christ Jesus, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3929) entitled "An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Memphis, Tenn," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. BAILEY, Mr. SHEPPARD, and Mr. MCNARY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 2289. An act for the relief of the Leesburg Welding & Garage Co.;

S. 2717. An act for the relief of Edward J. Broggi; and

S. 3676. An act to withdraw certain portions of land within the Hawaii National Park and to transfer the same to the jurisdiction and control of the Secretary of War for military purposes.

INFORMATION ON DESTROYERS, TORPEDO BOATS, AND OTHER VESSELS SOLD TO ANY BELLIGERENT NATION

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I present a privileged report and ask that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

House Resolution 536

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the House of Representatives how many destroyers, torpedo boats, and other war vessels of the United States Navy have been sold directly or indirectly to any belligerent nation, and by what authority.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

ADVERSE REPORT (TO ACCOMPANY H. RES. 536)

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the resolution (H. Res. 536), that the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the House of Representatives how many destroyers, torpedo boats, and other war vessels of the United States Navy have been sold directly or indirectly to any belligerent nation, and by what authority, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House and recommend that the resolution do not pass.

The action of the committee is based upon the following letter to the chairman of the committee from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, which letter contains the information requested in the resolution.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the letter be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 5, 1940.

The CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Further reference is made to your letter dated June 20, 1940, transmitting House Resolution 536, requesting the President of the United States to inform the House of Representatives concerning the sale of certain vessels of war to belligerent nations.

No destroyers, torpedo boats, or other war vessels of the United States Navy have been sold directly or indirectly to any belligerent nation.

Sincerely yours,

C. W. NIMITZ,
Acting Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the letter contains the information called for in the resolution, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the Gaelic American on the subject, Is United States a British Protectorate?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter by myself and reply by the Acting Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

WARNING TO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, at my request, there is being sent to each Member of the House through the post office a little pamphlet written by a man in my district, Mr. Fred Fletcher, a lawyer, a scholar, and a student. It is a warning to the United States. This is an analysis of Hitler's Mein Kampf. I ask those of you who have not had the patience nor the time to read that German bible to give this pamphlet a few minutes of study, because Mr. Fletcher does set forth the philosophy of that amazing and terrible man—Hitler. His book, which my constituent has analyzed, tells what he planned to do and is doing.

I do not agree with all the conclusions of my friend Fletcher as to the action our Nation should take to combat the menace, but I think his pamphlet will inform those who have not clearly grasped the import of the philosophy back of Hitler's frightfulness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include as a part thereof an editorial from the Umatilla County Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a resolution adopted by certain members of the faculty of Ohio Wesleyan University.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCGREGOR]?

There was no objection.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a radio address delivered by me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address by my colleague the gentleman from Connecticut, the Honorable THOMAS RAYMOND BALL, at Natchaug Grange, Chaplin, Conn., on July 5, 1940.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. AUSTIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech on the Monroe Doctrine by Kenneth Cock, of Glenwood, Iowa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an address by my colleague the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. STEARNS].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAWKS]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I called attention to the fact that we went in the red at the rate of $7,118 a minute last year. This year since July 1 we have increased the rate of going in the red to $42,693 a minute, according to the statement of Mr. Morgenthau on July 2. This is horrible.

Let me call your attention to the platform of the Democratic Party in 1932. And I quote:

We favor maintenance of the national credit by a Federal Budget annually balanced.

Since this administration has been in power, since that platform was written, they have not balanced the Budget once. It has been out of balance every year anywhere from $1,500,000,000 to $4,000,000,000. No woodpecker ever put more holes in a tree than the Democratic Party has put in that plank of the platform of 1932. If you do not get out and kill the woodpeckers in the New Deal Democratic Party, we are going to have so many holes in this Nation we will not be able to float any longer. [Applause.]

NARRAGANSETT BAY CRUISE

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

[Mr. KEEFE addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short editorial from Social Justice on the action of the University of Michigan in regard to expelling Communists.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and I also ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein some editorials.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

[Mr. GIFFORD addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the New York Journal-American.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article by General Rivers, retired, of the Army.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOODWIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a radio address.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, on June 17 I asked in the House, "Why risk our involvement in war by maintaining American cruisers and destroyers at Lisbon, Portugal, in the midst of the war zone? Suppose a German or Italian submarine takes a potshot, mistaking them for Allied warships?"

The war hysteria engendered by the fake radio report on Sunday that the American destroyer Barry had been sunk is indicative of what would happen if one of our warships should be mistakenly attacked and sunk by warring powers.

I protested against such a policy 3 weeks ago, and I now emphasize and reiterate that protest.

This hoax brought home to the American people the tremendous risk to which the administration is submitting America by this policy of maintaining our warships in war zones with no American flags painted on their sides, no spotlights being used on the flag at night, or without any other clear identifications except the flag to distinguish them from British destroyers while in European waters.

There should be a thorough investigation by the administration or the Congress of this false S O S, as prior to that we had three fake radio reports of attacks by German submarines on belligerent vessels in American waters. It is time that this kind of alarmist propaganda should be exposed and stopped. [Applause.]

WATER-POLLUTION CONTROL

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged motion, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MANSFIELD moves that the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill S. 685 be, and they are hereby, instructed to discontinue their insistence upon the retention in the House amendment of subsections (d) (1) and (d) (2) of section 2, reading as follows:

"(d) (1) After date of enactment of this act, no new sources of pollution, either by sewage or industrial waste, shall be permitted to be discharged into the navigable waters of the United States and streams tributary thereto until and unless approved by the Division; and

"(2) The discharge of new sources of water pollution without review and approval of the Division as required under the foregoing provisions is hereby declared to be against the public policy of the United States and to be a public and common nuisance. An action to prevent or abate any such nuisance may be brought in the name of the United States by any United States attorney, and it shall be the duty of such attorney to bring such an action when requested to do so by the Division, the Surgeon General, and any duly constituted interstate agency dealing with control of water pollution, any State agency dealing with control of water pollution, any "State health authority," or any incorporated municipality. Such action shall be brought as an action in equity and may be brought in any court of the United States having jurisdiction to hear and determine equity cases."

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, for the past 4 years or longer the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, as well as the Congress, has been confronted with the problem of trying to work out a stream-pollution bill. What is known as the Barkley bill, S. 685, was passed by the Senate a little over a year ago. Four months ago the bill was passed by the House, but very materially amended.

The Senate bill provided for loans and grants to municipalities and to industries to put in works for the abatement of pollution in all the cities and all the industries that were discharging pollution into the streams of the United States. In the House everything was stricken out after the enacting clause and the House bill substituted, in which no grants were allowed but loans were provided for at a low rate of interest, to be made through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. On the floor of the House, as I am advised—I was not here, being in the hospital at the time—what is known as the Mundt amendment was accepted and made a part of the bill. That is the portion you have just heard read in the motion I presented a moment ago.

The conferees have had several meetings on this bill. The Senate conferees have declined up to this time to accept this Mundt amendment. The public health service of practically all, if not all, of the States are opposed to it; industry generally is opposed to it; the Walton League and other associations of a like nature are all favoring it.

I think it extremely doubtful that the Senate conferees will accept the amendment. I also think it extremely doubtful that the Senate would accept it if the conferees did. However, that is neither here nor there. I do not believe we can reach an agreement. The question now is, Will the House want to instruct its conferees to not insist upon it further, or do they want the matter to stand as it is, with the probability that the bill will go dead on the calendar at the expiration of the term?

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DONDERO. Under the rules of the House, in the consideration of the pending motion, how much time is granted?

The SPEAKER. One hour is granted for the consideration of the conference report and the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO], a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, when this matter was before the House on the 1st day of March of this year, I took occasion to point out to the House that in the course of some 20 years 65 different bills had been presented to the Congress on stream pollution, and not a single bill had been passed, with the exception of 1 which had to do with the pollution of coastal waters by oceangoing liners or oil-burning ships; not a single piece of legislation has been enacted to affect the inland waters of the United States or her territorial possessions.

The question of stream pollution is not new to the United States. For nearly 50 years we have discussed stream pollution, and that is all we have done about it. We have never passed any legislation to enforce the object of keeping the waters of the United States pure and clean; we have just talked about it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. We passed a bill with respect to oil pollution.

Mr. DONDERO. I have mentioned that. It was in 1921 or 1924 that such a bill was passed.

So, on the 1st day of March of this year, we did pass a stream-pollution bill, which seems to me to be a very reasonable and a very sensible approach to this very troublesome problem. This is not a minor matter. Stream pollution in the United States is one of the major inland problems of this country, and unless something is done about it very soon we may have an epidemic in this country of very large proportions; but it is a hopeful sign to know that the question of sewage treatment, both industrial and domestic, has been advanced in this land from a point in 1904 when only 3 percent of our sewage was treated to the point where 30 percent had been treated up to 1930, and from 1938 to the present time we find that 60 percent of the sewage, both industrial and domestic, is now being treated in this country.

Until very recently, and without any legislation of a drastic nature, we find that in the Ohio River Valley, where stream pollution undoubtedly is at its worst stage because of large industrial plants, and density of the population is very great, 428 cities, towns, and other political units have corrected their stream-pollution problem by cooperation between Federal and State Governments. I say this is a very hopeful and encouraging sign.

We come now to the problem before the House and the question that we must decide. The question is whether or not we are going to accept this bill as we passed it on the 1st day of March or whether we are going to recede by eliminating the so-called Mundt amendment in order to preserve the rest of the bill as passed by the House, which also provides for loans to municipalities and political subdivisions through the R. F. C. at a very low rate of interest.

What is the Mundt amendment; what does it do, and how drastic is it? Let me read two or three lines of it to refresh your memory. The Mundt amendment was adopted by a very sizable majority in the committee when it was under consideration in this House before. This is what it provides:

> No new sources of pollution, either by sewage or industrial waste, shall be permitted to be discharged into the navigable waters of the United States and streams tributary thereto until and unless approved by the Division.

The Division refers to the Division set up in this bill to handle stream-pollution problems. Now, what is the sense of trying to abate a nuisance on a river, now established, and then permit new pollution to be started on the same stream? It seems to me it is neither common sense nor reasonable. It is the height of inconsistency.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. Yes.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I am not familiar with the use of the word "new" as it is used there. Does the bill as written provide only for existing conditions and not for the future? Is that why it is necessary to speak of "new" pollution?

Mr. DONDERO. The Mundt amendment is directed particularly to preventing new sources of pollution of our waters. That means new factories, new industries, villages, towns, and cities, as I understand it and interpret it.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I do not know enough about the terms of the bill, but would not the bill cover existing and future conditions? Does the bill relate only to the existing status?

Mr. DONDERO. I think it relates to the existing status, and the Mundt amendment is aimed at future sources of pollution. This is to prevent new sources of pollution, without the approval of the Division which is set up in the bill. If that Board says that a new industry or political unit may pollute a stream, it can do it even under the provisions of the Mundt amendment, but it means that new problems or new pollution which are presented to the Nation of stream pollution shall first be approved or passed on by this Board.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Does the phrase "new sources" apply to enlarged factories; that is, where a factory already in existence makes an addition to its plant?

Mr. DONDERO. I think it may be broad enough to include that, and I think it should include it, because there would be no sense or reason and neither would there be consistency in spending money and making loans to abate established nuisances and permit new nuisances to nullify or counteract the very thing that you have done by spending money to correct. It does not seem reasonable to me. It is not even common sense.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. Yes.

Mr. HOPE. Do I understand that if the Mundt amendment is not continued in the bill that there will be no way under this legislation of meeting the problem of new sources of pollution?

Mr. DONDERO. That is exactly the problem.

Mr. HOPE. And there is nothing in the present bill that will enable any agency to deal with new sources of pollution?

Mr. DONDERO. I believe the gentleman is correct. It gives this Board which is set up in this Division the right to deal with new sources of pollution.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. Yes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. If the Mundt amendment is not adopted new pollution will be treated exactly as existing pollution is under the bill.

Mr. HOPE. That is the purpose of my inquiry—to see if there is any way of dealing with new pollution without the Mundt amendment.

Mr. DONDERO. Yes; you can treat new pollution as existing pollution, but you do nothing to stop it. Not only is the pollution of our streams involved, but it seems to me that wildlife, fish life, sanitation, and public health are all involved and bound up in this problem.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. Yes.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Do I understand that there is no power in the State courts to enjoin pollution as a common nuisance at the present time? The gentleman says that if this Mundt amendment does not prevail nothing can be done about new pollution. I would think that a State court could enjoin it as a nuisance.

Mr. DONDERO. I question that very much, if the pollution is of a navigable stream over which the Federal Government has exclusive jurisdiction.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. In a world where there is so much pollution and where pollution has its rights, why discriminate against new pollution in differentiation from old?

Mr. DONDERO. Old pollution, of course, is being eradicated or corrected as fast as possible by cooperation on the part of the State and the States under compact with the Federal Government. The purpose of the Mundt amendment is to stop new pollution and to augment what we are trying to do under present and existing laws.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Does it mean dealing more drastically with the dynamic than it does with the old?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ELSTON].

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I believe this is a very critical hour for the millions of persons who are the victims of contaminated streams. Although we vote today upon the instructions that we are to give to our conferees, actually we are voting upon the question of whether or not we are to have any legislation at all on this very important subject.

The fundamental principles of this bill are not in dispute between the House and the Senate.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Why does the gentleman say we are voting on whether we will have any legislation at all?

Mr. ELSTON. I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] gave the reason. He stated he did not believe that if the bill were considered again in the Senate it would pass with the Mundt amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. Well, let us let them vote on it and see.

Mr. ELSTON. I think too much is at stake for us to take a chance on the Senate doing that.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. I think the House would be interested in knowing what is the objection to the Mundt amendment.

Mr. ELSTON. I want to say to the gentleman from Michigan that while the Mundt amendment does not appear on its face to be objectionable, it is unnecessary, and if insisted upon may be the means of preventing the passage of legislation which is of vital importance. I do not feel that we can afford to insist upon the Mundt amendment. If we do, and this bill goes back to the Senate, and the Senate votes it down because it will not accept the amendment, we will have no legislation whatever on the subject of stream pollution. Conditions have reached such a stage in this country, particularly in the Ohio Valley, that it is absolutely essential that we have some legislation on this important subject. I do not believe that the Mundt amendment is essential. I say that for this reason: The Mundt amendment only seeks to enjoin future pollution. It is within the power of the State courts now to enjoin not only future pollution but to enjoin present pollution.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ELSTON. I am sorry. I do not have time.

We not only have the power within the States to enjoin the nuisance of water pollution, but we have criminal statutes in most States which make it an offense to pollute a stream. It is within the power of our States to correct the situation without giving further power to the Federal Government. Therefore we do not need the Mundt amendment.

I think both the friends and opponents of this amendment are attaching entirely too much significance to its importance. If we leave it out entirely we will get some legislation which is very much needed. If later on we find that we are not able to cope with the situation with existing law we can then pass more drastic enforcement legislation.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] stated a few moments ago that he thought it would not be possible to obtain injunctions in the State courts, because the Federal Government only has jurisdiction over navigable streams. I am sorry that I cannot agree that this is correct. Incidentally, his suggestion reminds us that there is a very serious question as to the constitutionality of the Mundt amendment. It is my impression that the Constitution provides that the Federal Government has jurisdiction over a navigable stream only so far as navigation is concerned. It does not have jurisdiction so far as stream pollution is concerned unless we want to stretch our imaginations so far that we can say that the pollution of a stream interferes with navigation. Under these circumstances there is a grave question about the constitutionality of this amendment. Aside from the constitutional question we are face to face today with the fact that if we insist upon the Mundt amendment we are not going to receive any legislation at all, and I do not believe we can take that much of a chance with the lives and health of millions of people.

I was very much interested in the statement that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] made about conditions in the Ohio Valley. I would like to take just a moment to further elaborate on that point.

The drainage basin of the Ohio Valley includes about 200,000 square miles. It comprises parts of 14 States. The population of that basin is about 17,000,000 people. Raw, untreated sewage from localities containing about 6,000,000 people flows into the Ohio River and its tributaries every day. In addition thereto, there is treated sewage from areas containing two and one-half million additional persons. More than 6,000,000 persons are supplied with water from the Ohio River and its tributaries. The Ohio River now is not like it used to be. The time was when the natural flow of the river would, to a certain extent, purify the water. Now it is a series of navigation dams.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. ELSTON. There are more than 50 of those dams at the present time. At times the pools formed by these dams are nothing more nor less than cess pools. The Public Health Service has found that it is safe to chemically treat drinking water containing 5,000 colon bacteria per cubic centimeters. To go beyond that is dangerous. In the city of Cincinnati for example, in 1935 the average rose to 10,330. In August 1930 it was raised to 28,840, more than 5 times the number considered by the medical profession to be safe. The average for the entire year was 10,580, indicating the extreme danger of permitting our streams to remain contaminated.

The friends of the Mundt amendment seem to consist largely of those who belong to sportsmen's organizations, such as the Izaak Walton League. I have no quarrel with the objectives of that league or of any other sportsmen's organizations, but it seems to me that sportsmen should be sportsmen enough to consider the health and the safety of human beings rather than the interests of men who fish or hunt ducks a few days in the year. As a matter of fact, the Ohio is becoming so contaminated that even the ducks avoid it, although they used to stop there on their way north and south.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I suggest to the gentleman that the intake for the waterworks of his home city is now located 15 miles above the city and on the Kentucky side in order to try to avoid pollution.

Mr. ELSTON. Yes; and I may say that the city of Cincinnati has spent millions of dollars to provide pure drinking water for its citizens but there is a limit to which even the most expensive treatment plants may go. Just across the river from Cincinnati in the district represented by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] I am informed they have not been able to spend the money that Cincinnati has yet they are compelled to obtain their drinking water from that part of the Ohio River into which the sewers of Cincinnati empty. They are therefore suffering even more than those who live in Cincinnati.

I hope we will not insist that the Mundt amendment remain in this bill. Let us get some legislation that will at least begin to curb the most serious menace to life and health existing in the Nation today. Later on if we need to amend the legislation by the Mundt amendment perhaps then will be the time to consider it. [Applause.] I hope the Members of the House will not be actuated in their votes by the pleas of sportsmen's organizations, such as the Izaak Walton League, that we insist upon the Mundt amendment or no legislation at all. Obviously, the Izaak Walton League is interested only in those who can take a few days off a year for fishing or for hunting ducks. We must consider the interest of those who are forced to drink contaminated water 365 days in the year. In his testimony before the Rivers and Harbors Committee the general manager of this league, when asked as to its membership, stated, "We have about 25,000 members in good standing. We have about 100,000 who call themselves members of the Izaak Walton League, but they are just a little slow in paying their dues." Many of the members of this organization do not depend for their water supply upon polluted streams, nor does the protest of this organization necessarily reflect the views of the entire membership. Even if it did its entire paying and nonpaying membership is only 20 percent of the population of a city the size of Cincinnati, and Cincinnati is only one of many cities seriously affected by water contamination.

Some legislation is imperative if we are to begin the correction of the greatest menace to life and health existing in America today. The bill which we have passed is the result of 28 years of study by the United States Public Health Service. It is similar in many respects to a bill passed by the Seventy-fifth Congress and vetoed for a technicality with respect to administration which has now been corrected. It is admitted on all sides that it is a good bill. The only appreciable difference of opinion is on the Mundt amendment. Sportsmen's organizations want the Mundt amendment because they feel it will help to purify polluted streams. The millions of persons who reside in polluted areas want the bill because they believe it will rid our waterways of pollution. Consequently, they all are seeking the same thing. Persons whose health and lives are in jeopardy are pleading that the House not insist upon the Mundt amendment, knowing full well that our insistence will kill all legislation for perhaps a long period of time and allow pollution to continue unabated.

It follows as a matter of logic that if steps are taken to protect human life, and they can be under this bill without the Mundt amendment, the lives of the fish in the streams will likewise be protected. I need not argue to the Members of this House that it is of infinitely greater importance to protect human life than to accede to the demands of those who are thinking only of wildlife. It is not contended by those interested in the preservation of wildlife that this bill without the Mundt amendment will be injurious to such life. Their contention is that with the Mundt amendment the enforcement provisions of the law in the hands of Federal agencies will bring about greater protection. I doubt this, but is that not beside the point today? We are face to face now with the sole question—shall there be any legislation upon the subject at this session?

It is rather illogical to argue that States and cities will take advantage of the provisions of this bill and will make loans from the Federal Government to construct sewage disposal plants and then permit industries to contaminate the waterways from which such cities must derive their water supply. Persistent violators can and undoubtedly will be prosecuted. If it should develop, after the law has been in operation, that the States are unable to cope with those who may continue to pollute our streams, I am confident that there would be no hesitation on the part of Congress to enact such provisions as are contained in the Mundt amendment. I am sure you realize that if cities and industries make loans, they are not going to tolerate persistent violations on the part of a few. The zeal with which the States have entered into the interstate compact agreements which have been authorized by Congress in order that legislation of this type might be put into effect, is a clear indication that the States, individually and collectively, are anxious to cooperate with the Federal Government in order to make more effective laws which are designed to eliminate water pollution.

I hope the House will not adopt a "dog in the manger" attitude on a matter of such vital importance. I can readily appreciate that some of the friends of the Mundt amendment will say "why is it not just as much the responsibility of the Senate? Why cannot the same result be obtained if the Senate will agree to the Mundt amendment?" With this philosophy I have no quarrel, but this attitude will be of little consolation to those who suffer in the event the Senate does not agree with us. As matters now stand, if we insist upon the Mundt amendment and the Senate does not concur, there may be no legislation. If we now concur with the Senate conferees we know we will have on our statute books legislation adequate to deal with a serious problem. Let us take the only certain course. We cannot afford to gamble human lives upon the uncertainty of favorable Senate action.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, let me make just one observation about this bill. It occurs to me that in the last 100 years the fight to stop the defiling and polluting of American streams has been a rear-guard action. There has not been any place where they could take a position and say, "From this point on we can evolve a program of restoration in the country and restore some of the natural resources and the wildlife." Pollution is one of these progressive things that continues year in and year out. Being a rear-guard action neither the State nor the Federal Government has ever accomplished much in that field. There is only one sensible and logical way to go about it, and that is to freeze the so-called pollution condition in the country and say, "This far and no farther." We set up a stop sign. Having dealt with the question of new pollution we can ultimately address ourselves to the question of restoring clean streams, outdoor life, and the natural resources that were once one of the great values of this country.

I think the Mundt amendment is predicated on common sense, for there is absolutely no logic, no sense at all about a program that seeks first of all to lend money out of the Federal Treasury to meet existing pollution with the right hand and then condone new pollution with the left hand.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? I will yield him an additional minute.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. MANSFIELD. What is the view of the gentleman with regard to the great preparedness program we are undertaking? We are encouraging industries, practically every industry in the United States, to double and quadruple their present output. That will bring new pollution, because they are all polluting the streams to a certain extent. What effect will it have on the national-defense program?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would say that only by the thinnest and most tenuous kind of logic can you ever hook up this proposition of national defense with stream pollution. We are making national defense a sort of cloak to cover a multitude of sins. For one, I do not go along with a notion of that kind. Too often and too long have the American people, and American industries, and American enterprise followed the line of least resistance. It is like the family that throws its garbage and tin cans out behind some bush or tree in summer because the foliage screens it. That is all right in the summer when the foliage is on the trees, but in the winter there stands exposed in all its naked ugliness all of the garbage pile. That is the attitude we have exercised heretofore in connection with this question of pollution.

The thing to do is to resolutely take a stand and say to all industry everywhere: "You can find some other way of taking care of coal mine waste waters, industrial waste, city sewage, and all the other things that flow into the streams of America today and contaminate them."

Let us not follow the line of least resistance any longer. Let us give some direction to this question of pollution control, stop new sources under the Mundt amendment and then at some subsequent time address ourselves to the larger question of restoring the beauty and the utility of the outdoors of America. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. How does the time stand, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Thirty-five minutes remain at the disposal of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and to include certain quotations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, the Mundt amendment is to be found in the bill S. 685 on pages 17 and 18, beginning with line 11 on page 17 and ending with line 6 on page 18.

It reads as follows:

(2) The discharge of new sources of water pollution without review and approval of the Division as required under the foregoing provisions is hereby declared to be against the public policy of the United States and to be a public and common nuisance. An action to prevent or abate any such nuisance may be brought in the name of the United States by any United States attorney, and it shall be the duty of such attorney to bring such an action when requested to do so by the Division, the Surgeon General, and any duly constituted inter-State agency dealing with control of water pollution, any State agency dealing with the control of water pollution, any State health authority, or any incorporated municipality. Such action shall be brought as an action in equity and may be brought in any court of the United States having jurisdiction to hear and determine equity cases.

A motion has been made that the House conferees discontinue to insist on this amendment. The effect would be to reject that amendment. For nearly 22 years I have been attempting to secure legislation in this House which would do away with pollution. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] is correct, only one bill has been passed in that period of 22 years. The reason why other legislation has not been written upon the statute books is that the proponents of pollution legislation have urged too drastic remedies, and always upon a rock, such as the Mundt amendment, pollution legislation has been wrecked.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], as I recall, once said that he would present a picture which would mean more than many words. Let me present such a picture. I live on the shores of Hampton Roads. There is probably no body of water in the United States that is in greater need of correction from pollution. It is increasing. Contributing to that pollution are the cities of Norfolk, Portsmouth, the territory adjacent Nansemond River and the James River, the cities of Newport News, Hampton, Phoebus, and intermediate territory. Among the contributing agencies may be found the Federal Government which has Fortress Monroe at Point Comfort. There are also the Hampton Roads naval base, and other agencies. I am unable to say to what extent these Federal agencies are now taking care of their pollution.

Realizing the condition that exists at Hampton Roads we have been trying for years to effect a remedy. When it first became apparent some years ago that the oyster planting grounds were being affected, a fight was made which involved the legal right of the city of Newport News to dump its sewage into Hampton Roads. A suit was brought for damages, and as I recall an injunction was sought. That fight went to the Court of Appeals of Virginia and subsequently to the Supreme Court of the United States. In decisions rendered by those courts, and I think in other suits at other times, it was held that the municipality had the right under ancient law and under the Constitution to deposit its sewage in that body of water and in the navigable waters. Realizing that something must be done, a careful survey has been made at great expense to find a remedy.

Plans were proposed, and it was estimated that it would cost $8,000,000 to relieve the conditions there. This heavy burden would have to be borne by the communities around that body of water. The cost now would probably be greater.

The city and adjoining communities went to the Legislature of Virginia and sought to have created one or more sanitary districts. Such a district was created. Bonds were to be issued for the money needed to relieve the situation. It was contemplated that there should be installed sewage plants for the treatment of raw sewage. This procedure required an election, which was held. Some of the localities, including my own community, voted in favor of the establishment of the district and the issuance of bonds, which would have helped to correct the evil. Other localities did not vote that way. The result was that the proposal did not carry. We still have pollution and must again go to the general assembly for enabling legislation.

The Mundt amendment provides that after the date of the enactment of this act no new source of pollution, either by sewage or industrial plants, shall be permitted to be deposited into navigable waters. In other words, under a reasonable interpretation of that amendment, no house may be connected with an existing sewer that deposits its waste in Hampton Roads. Certainly this cannot be done without the consent of Federal agencies. We are penalized and yet we have been doing everything we could to remedy conditions and to provide instrumentalities that would speed the time after which no sewage would be deposited into Hampton Roads.

Mr. Speaker, shall we be penalized, shall our industrial growth stop, shall the progress of our cities stop, though we have done all we could and have not been able to comply and through no fault of our own?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, it is our belief that we may in a few years be able to secure the creation of that sanitary district. If this bill passes even without the Mundt amendment, we may yet borrow money to help us out. The bill without the Mundt amendment will be a start. The picture I have painted applies in many sections of the country. I join with the gentleman from Ohio in asking that you let us proceed with such legislation as we are able to secure now, and do not wreck pollution legislation again upon the rock of drastic procedure such as we have here. By the process of evolution we may take care of the existing conditions and avoid the creation of new sources of pollution. Let us recede from this amendment and make a start after twenty-some years of talk. [Applause.]

Under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks, I wish to present the existing situation more fully than I can in 7 minutes.

The Mundt amendment will impose unreasonable burdens on existing communities and established industries.

Under the Mundt amendment every new attachment to an existing line of sewer discharging in navigable water or a tributary thereof would constitute an additional source of pollution. This would paralyze progress in existing communities.

Under the Mundt amendment every new addition to an established industry would be a violation of the law if it contributed in the slightest to the pollution of a tributary to a waterway, however remote.

The amendment takes effect on enactment of the bill. It does not provide any time within which adjustments may be made to take care of situations which have developed through decades. It is true the bill leaves approval with the Division of Water Pollution Control, but it provides no measure whereby the Division may determine the question. It would require every home owner or other person discharging pollution into a navigable stream or its tributary to make application to the Division. It may be that the Mundt amendment contains meritorious features. If so, they should be worked out as an amendment later.

What may be considered as a tributary within the meaning of the act is not determined. How far removed may the tributary be from the main stream is not specified. There is nothing to control the exercise of arbitrary or unreasonable authority. If the members of the Izaak Walton League wish to be helpful they should assume a reasonable attitude toward these problems and not a policy of rule or ruin. If we did nothing else but create a Division of Water Pollution Control in the United States Public Health Service and started the machinery moving for water-pollution control, we will have made great progress. With a question as important as this, affecting all parts of the United States, we should not undertake to make the law perfect. That can be done as we gain experience. I concur fully in the statement of Dr. Herman G. Baity, professor of sanitary engineering, division of public health, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N. C., who said in a paper read before the public health engineering section of the American Public Health Association at the sixty-eighth annual meeting in Pittsburgh, Pa., October 8, 1939:

> All persons and agencies interested in the stream-conservation problem are mutually agreed that there exists in this country a pollution situation that is most undersirable and uneconomical; that such conditions are so widespread as to constitute a major national concern; and that such remedial and preventive measures should be taken as to protect the public health, preserve public decency, conserve the wild-life resources, and promote the use of natural waters for wholesome recreational purposes. It is ironical and unfortunate that some of these agencies, whose interests and objectives are common, should differ so widely and fight so bitterly over ways and means of accomplishing desirable ends. The greatest contribution that can be made to the cause would be the encouragement of a dispassionate consideration of the opposing points of view and a reconciliation of differences.

If we would write into law those things upon which we all agree, provide machinery acceptable to all, and omit those things which cause our difference, we shall have made a start. The evolutionary processes of that legislation will resolve many of our differences and reduce the others to a minimum which time, I have no doubt, would solve. The greatest present difference as I see it is the impatient desire to enforce by mandate. That is the rock on which all attempts to obtain legislation have been wrecked in my 22 years of service in this House.

I quote again from Dr. Baity on this subject. He says:

> Enforcement by mandate: To the provoked and impatient the correction of public evils by mandate has the appeal of being quick and effective. Regulation appears on the surface to be a simple device for curing all ills. Critics proclaim: "There ought to be a law." Perhaps it will be well to remember other times in our national life when similar evils have been observed, and when the laws designed to provide the perfect panacea proved to be unenforceable and disappointing. Moreover, those who have had occasion to invoke the police power of government in dealing with the public have long ago learned that the mailed fist is less productive than the velvet glove. Public psychology reacts adversely to arbitrary force. Persuasion, education, and cooperation are more effective instruments than the "big stick," and the power of law should be held in reserve for exercise only when milder measures fail. The Lonergan, Clark, and Mundt types of legislation provide for actions in equity to be brought in the Federal courts and instruct United States attorneys to institute such actions when requested to do so by the Secretary of War or any one of the district boards. These bills appear to remove all existing authority of the States over sewage and waste-treatment plants and place their operation directly under the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, except for those waters ruled not to be navigable.
> Although these bills carry provisions for cooperation with State agencies, for advisory services of other Federal agencies, for the collection and dissemination of information, and for Federal financial assistance, it is feared by many that the emphasis upon drastic control by court action would result in inadequate investigations of actual stream requirements and of the economy and applicability of treatment processes. Precipitate action without complete information would result not only in mental anguish but in the gross waste of public and private funds. Enforcement of the provisions of these measures with respect to new or additional pollution would tend to hinder industrial development and municipal growth, and might preclude the extension of sewers to presently unsewered and insanitary communities. In any case, such measures would be concerned with pollution alone and would neglect consideration of the many other related and inseparable problems of water conservation and use.

In the testimony of Mr. Kenneth A. Reid, general manager of the Izaak Walton League, Chicago, Ill., before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors on March 3, 1939, he said, when discussing various bills pending before the committee:

> There is only one issue involved in all of these bills. That issue is the matter of enforcement. Whether a bill shall provide for control of pollution or merely for study and investigation of the subject. Other differences that occur in the bills are minor details. Enforcement is the only important consideration.

He contends:

> All of these bills are purely study bills which depend entirely on voluntary action on the part of polluters. We contend that they would not only be ineffective in correcting pollution, but that the passage of one of them would constitute a victory for polluters rather than for pure streams, as they are masquerading under the title of "water-pollution control" bills, but provide no control whatever. It is significant in this connection that polluting industries support these innocuous bills.

The argument of the Izaak Walton League, as thus presented, proceeds upon an initial fallacy which permeates all of their reasonings. They classify polluters generally as criminals. That is not the case and repeated decisions of courts, even including the Supreme Court of the United States, have held otherwise. None are so blind as they who will not see; and these gentlemen refuse to see that the conditions to be remedied are economic conditions created through a long period of industrial, municipal, and commercial development which should be progressively and gradually corrected by processes which will permit the survival of these industrial, municipal, and commercial agents, who, in accordance with general practices and recognized law have created conditions which they, along with others, would like now to see removed. Just so long as the Izaak Walton League and similar organizations refuse to face the facts but proceed upon their present false philosophy, they are an obstacle to progress. I would submit for Mr. Reid's consideration that many of us who are trying to relieve these conditions are not concerned with victory or defeat for any organization or group, but anxious for a solution which we believe the processes of governments through the centuries show can only be reached by evolution. Since the Izaak Walton League and similar organizations have made no progress for 20 years, but seen pollution grow worse from year to year, why not use a little common sense and try out for a few years, at least, the remedies that we suggest. Surely, that League and those organizations must recognize that others can be as honest as they, and that many who differ with them are no less sincere than they.

As an illustration of the extreme and unreasonable position of the representatives of this league, I call attention to the testimony of Mr. Reid, page 56 of House Hearings of March 3 and 6, 1939:

> I think I could answer your question about the broke municipalities in this way: The Izaak Walton League has consistently urged on the administration that the allocation of Federal funds for public works, or emergency work of any kind, that the inclusion of one simple principle in allocating those funds would greatly simplify the matter and would be eminently fair; and that is that unless and until the municipality that has a sewage system either has an adequate sewage-treatment plant or bona-fide plans for installing one, it would not be eligible for Federal funds for any other purpose. If we had had such a ruling as that we would not have any municipal sewage problem today, with the hundreds of millions of dollars that have been spent on swimming pools, playgrounds, Brown Memorials, and Smith Parkways and what not.

In other words, whatever the demand or need for other purposes, however emergent those purposes and needs might be, however much the municipality might be able financially to provide the funds required of it for a new school or other improvements needed, and yet however impossible it might be to provide a plant for sewage treatment, however impossible it might be for topographical or geographical reasons to provide the money for such a plant, or however expensive or impossible to prepare plans for that purpose, yet the Izaak Walton League urges that that community should be denied all funds for public works or emergency work of any kind unless and until that municipality, though financially unable to do so, either has an adequate sewage-treatment plant or bona fide plans for installing one.

Mr. Reid says that the Izaak Walton League has 25,000 members in good standing and about 100,000 that call themselves members, but they are slow in paying their dues. I wish to remind members that after all only 25,000 persons are speaking through them. It is surprising that they think they speak with so much authority. If legislation is to be determined according to the relative size of the groups supporting that legislation, then this law should pass. I hope that those who are interested in fighting pollution along whatever reasonable lines may promise success will organize. If they do so, we will win.

In the case of municipalities on Hampton Roads, the financial burden of correcting the conditions is large. A report made in 1934 estimated the cost to be $8,370,000, of which $7,616,000 is for immediate construction and $734,000 for future consideration. The cost now may exceed this sum. Many contributing areas such as Norfolk, Portsmouth, South Norfolk, Newport News, Hampton, Phoebus, and the adjoining counties are involved. The Federal Government contributes some of the waste and refuse. The solution of the problem involves a large financial outlay. Sanitary districts must be created. Bonds must be issued. The expense must be divided equitably among the areas affected. Coordination of activity must be secured. Existing sewage facilities must be altered. Engineering obstacles must be overcome. Sewage-treatment plants must be provided. These conditions cannot be corrected in a few months even if we secure the money, and provide the machinery. Yet the Mundt amendment makes it possible for the governmental agencies to say that not another house may be connected with existing sewers, not another industry shall be established if it increases the pollution in the slightest degree, not another activity may be added to the community, if thereby, the contribution of waste in the water is increased. The proposal is so unreasonable and so arbitrary that it defeats the objects which its proponents claim they seek. The House should recede on this amendment.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, as has been pointed out, the whole problem of stream pollution has been bothering the country and all of us for a long time. Bills have been introduced. They have been considered by the House and the Senate. In order that we may act intelligently upon the proposition here before us I think we ought to review some of the history.

This particular bill was enacted by the Senate. It came over to the House and it was considered by the committee. Certain committee amendments were written into the bill. Then on the floor of the House the so-called Mundt amendment was written into the bill by a vote of something like 2 to 1. That represented the judgment of the House. There has been controversy as to the form the bill should take. Generally speaking, the Senate bill is a kind of study measure, designed to bring about cooperative voluntary effort looking toward the elimination of stream pollution.

There was before the committee and placed on the calendar here the Mundt bill, that would have introduced a larger element of force into the matter of the elimination of stream pollution. That bill was not reported by the committee. The committee's bill did come on for consideration and I understood that the majority of the proponents of the bill were in agreement with the Mundt amendment. The Mundt amendment is limited solely to pollution hereafter occurring.

To my mind it is a very modest beginning to this whole proposition. Now, the bill goes to conference with the Mundt amendment written in on the floor of the House. Why have not the conferees of the Senate taken that amendment to the floor of the Senate to be acted on by the Senate? Why do they say to us, "You take that amendment back to the House and get the House to recede?" That is not my idea of the way to do business here. First of all the Senate ought to have the right to pass upon this amendment. Why should we recede from our position after the action was taken, not by conferees, not by a committee of the House, but by the majority of the House itself? Someone says we will not get any legislation if we do not recede from our position. Well, personally, that sort of an argument has never made very much of an impression on me. If we were right in writing the Mundt amendment into this bill on March 1, then I say the amendment is still right and we ought to stand on that amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER].

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise in favor of sustaining the House action taken on March 1 in voting for the Mundt amendment. In this matter of the pollution of navigable waters and control of existing conditions it is most unfortunate that many local communities find themselves in such a plight today. We know their troubles are real. But the solution of local problems is not in the defeat of the Mundt proposal.

If we are going to conserve national resources, if we are going to prevent the defiling of waters that are still unpolluted, we can do it with the Mundt amendment. This amendment, which was accepted by the Rivers and Harbors Committee when S. 685 was passed by the House on March 1, does not disturb existing pollution. Many of us would like to put a stop to that, but the Mundt amendment merely says it is time to call a halt. It states that new sources of pollution shall be illegal unless approved by the United States Public Health Service.

Much confusion and misunderstanding has arisen over the Mundt amendment. Its language is simple and easily understood. It provides that "after date of enactment of this act, no new sources of pollution, either by sewage or industrial waste, shall be permitted to be discharged into the navigable waters of the United States and streams tributary thereto until and unless approved by the Division," which is the water-pollution-control authority set up in the Barkley bill itself. You will note that the prohibition against new sources of pollution apply only to sewage or industrial waste, and there are no restrictions against incidental types of pollution, occasional pollution, farm wastes, additional units of existing sources of pollution, and the like.

Through this amendment we have the opportunity to really do something constructive by preventing the future contamination of the navigable waters of the United States and tributary streams which are not subject to pollution at the present time. It is difficult to understand why there should be serious objection to a conservation measure of this kind. We are spending millions of dollars in preventing soil erosion, in endeavoring to remedy some of the neglectful and harmful practices of this and former generations. We are not through this amendment placing additional burdens upon existing industrial plants; they are established, and their pollution doubtless will continue unless they voluntarily take steps to improve existing conditions. This it is their moral duty to do. But we do serve notice upon all that there cannot be constructed new sources of pollution, either by sewage or industrial waste, unless the public necessity therefor is affirmed by proper Government authority.

The amendment is needed. It is unfortunate that such a provision of law was not enacted many years ago. In agreeing to accept S. 685 with the Mundt amendment, the real conservationists have leaned over backward in effecting a compromise. Any attempt to sabotage, soften, or delete this amendment would be most pleasing to those who want to use every public water course as their private sewers.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I come from a district that I believe is more affected by water pollution than any other district in the United States. This district lies across the river on the Kentucky side from the city of Cincinnati and extends down the river to Louisville. The Ohio River is highly improved for the purposes of navigation. It is locked and damned. It consists of a series of pools. There is a pool commencing about 5 miles below Cincinnati and extending 7 or 8 miles above Cincinnati. Into this pool goes the industrial waste and the domestic sewage of approximately 800,000 people, and out of it comes the water supply of the city of Cincinnati and of the cities I represent on the other side of the river.

It is true that the city of Cincinnati is a rich city. It has established a great water-purification plant. Many of the cities I represent are unable by reason of their size and financial ability to treat the water as the city of Cincinnati has done, and we are compelled to use that water with insufficient treatment. This is a deplorable condition. It is a condition that is much more important to the people than the opportunity of hunting ducks or fishing, because it involves the health and the happiness and even the lives of the people of the Ohio Valley.

I do not believe you can reasonably approach this matter as the Mundt amendment attempts to solve it. The cities, we can assume, being responsive to the will of the people, want to clean up the rivers out of which comes their water supply. How can the Mundt amendment operate with regard to conditions caused by the cities of the United States?

The pertinent part of the amendment is as follows:

> After date of the enactment of this act, no new sources of pollution, either by sewage or industrial waste, shall be permitted to be discharged into the navigable waters of the United States and streams tributary thereto until and unless approved by the Division.

Almost all of the industrial waste in the great centers of population in our country goes into the sewers of the cities. The only way you can stop the flow of this waste into the rivers is by enjoining the operation of the sewers of the cities. Certainly this could not be done. No court in the land would consider a petition for that purpose. What does one have to do under this amendment before he can establish an industry? He has to go before the Division of Water Pollution Control in the city of Washington and get a permit to organize his corporation to build his plant. It is the most dangerous concentration of power at the seat of government that has ever been proposed. A bureau in Washington would control the industries of the United States. Under the common law an individual could abate a private nuisance or a public nuisance if it peculiarly affected him. The States and their subdivisions have the right to bring suits to abate public nuisances. These nuisances in the great industrial areas cannot be abated by order of court without destroying the industries. Almost all the cities are limited in their tax rate, limited in their indebtedness, and limited in their expenditures. The only way the intolerable condition that exists in the Ohio Valley can be relieved is by Government assistance in form of loans at low rates of interest, and over long periods. That is what the act without the Mundt amendment provides. It also provides for compacts between the States having a common interest for the purpose of eliminating the pollution of the waters. Drastic measures have been tried and failed to accomplish their purpose. If the House insists on the amendment, I am confident it will result in no legislation being passed. [Applause.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I favor the spirit and the objective of the Mundt amendment. We would all like to see pollution done away with. But I agree with the last speaker and also with the gentleman from Texas that this is perhaps a very inopportune time to bring in an amendment of this character, investing this amount of power in another bureaucracy here in Washington.

In the first place, this amendment will make it practically impossible for new industries to locate without going through a lot of red tape, which will make their situation very difficult. In the case of oil wells, I can visualize that some of the refuse of those that are already established may be going into navigable streams, but I do not believe that as a rule the new wells that are going down are dangerous as far as pollution is concerned. However, they are faced with this question, because, although most of the water that comes from these oil wells where they use a new process of pumping in the water is drained into the ground, they are going to come in conflict with this Federal power vested in the Mundt amendment. I believe that right now, in a time of national preparedness, we ought to move with caution. [Applause.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT].

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I want first of all to express my appreciation to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Texas, Judge MANSFIELD, for the very fair and very fine manner in which he has handled this legislation and for the manner in which he has distributed the time to debate this particular measure. Unfortunately, I find myself in disagreement with his present position from the standpoint of wishing to recede from the action previously taken by the House, but I am gratified by the fact that a majority of the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House, as the bill was brought before us on March 1, joined with the Members of the House who were interested in a measure sponsored by the conservationists and agreed on a compromise form of legislation. That legislation is S. 685, as amended, on page 17, section (d), by the amendment which I introduced.

You will recall that early in the Seventy-sixth Congress we were confronted with two types of legislation on the matter of pollution. One was sponsored by conservation groups which would have done something about the existing problem of pollution, would have set up a series of easy steps whereby the pollution problem as it now exists could be abated. The other was S. 685, originally introduced in the Senate and the authorship of which is claimed by the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce. Whether or not they are correct in their assumption, I do not know, but they claim the authorship of that original legislation which was far from a pollution-control measure. In fact, they even had it titled, "The Water Pollution Act."

I think it is interesting to quote a passage from S. 685 in its original form, because we are confronted today with a mighty serious and far-reaching decision, and that decision is simply this: Is the Congress of the United States going to reaffirm its position as being opposed to pollution as a public practice and establishing safeguards against new sources and new forms of pollution, or are we going to recede and, by implication, place the official stamp of approval of the House of Representatives on the reprehensible practices of polluters? Now, this bill as first introduced had this unique and intriguing paragraph which was included in the original version of S. 685. I quote from section 6 of the original bill:

> Any person—

Not a corporation, not a municipality, but an individual—

> Any person discharging or building works which will discharge untreated or inadequately treated sewage or waste in character or quality sufficient to be deleterious to the navigable waters of the United States or streams tributary thereto is hereby declared to be eligible to Federal aid in the form of grants in aid."

Think of it! This bill as originally introduced and as originally worded by its authors would actually have placed a premium upon pollution by offering grants from the public treasury to any individual who engaged in the practice of pollution. This was the bill we had to start with. And as it passed the Senate, S. 685 provided these cash Government rewards to persistent polluters.

That bill has been gradually corrected and gradually amended and some of its more vicious aspects taken out, until now we are presented with S. 685 with that language no longer in it, but still granting aids and loans to people engaged in pollution practices.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LEAVY. If the Mundt amendment were taken out of this bill, then we would have nothing but the creation of a new, independent agency that sits in an advisory capacity.

Mr. MUNDT. That is exactly correct, and it would cost the taxpayers a quarter of a million dollars a year to study a problem we have been studying for 150 years in America and have done nothing about. It would cost the taxpayers a quarter of a million dollars to study pollution and at the same time we, as the representatives of the people, would be saying we will do nothing whatsoever to discourage new sources of unknown pollution in virgin streams.

Now, it seems to me, as a matter of consistency, that if the time has come, and it surely has, when we should pass some pollution legislation; if the time has come, and it surely has, when we should encourage State compacts; if the time has come when we are going to appropriate $250,000 a year to set up a bureau to deal with pollution, then certainly the time has come when we should put some prohibitions, some restrictions, and some regulations against new sources of pollution which might be dumped into the public waters of America.

Let us be honest with ourselves and with the public. Either this Congress endorses and encourages the pagan practice of pollution or it does not. If it does, let us not kid the public by voting $250,000 a year to study its elimination, but let us frankly surrender our public waters to private polluters. However, if this Congress opposes indiscriminate pollution as I think it does, let us be equally frank and honest. Let us reaffirm our support of the Mundt amendment. Let us vote "no" against receding from our action of March 1. Let us take action against new sources of pollution while studying the best approach to the solution of existing pollution evils. Surely no sincere enemy of pollution, no genuine supporter of a program to rid our streams of death-dealing pollutants; no real advocate of clean streams, pure waters, and public health, can object to my amendment to restrict the expansion of unregulated pollution. I expect polluters to oppose my measure, but I urge all of you interested in cleaning up the malodorous Ohio River or any other poison-laden stream to support my amendment which, for the first time in American history, puts this Government on record against promiscuous and unrestrained pollution.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. The bill as written now with the Mundt amendment is the bill that the Izaak Walton League and the outdoor enthusiasts want.

Mr. MUNDT. That is correct. That is the compromise measure on which they have agreed. We conservationists wanted considerably more, but we have agreed on this as a fair and reasonable compromise.

Mr. STEFAN. It is not as far as they would like to go, but it is the best that we can get at this time.

Mr. MUNDT. That is correct. I think I said when debating this bill on March 1 that we came in here asking for a loaf and were offered a stone. We are compromising with a few slices of bread. The national conservation organizations, every one of them, are in favor of the Mundt amendment, and they believe that the passage of S. 685 without that amendment would be a backward step instead of a forward step. The public-health agencies, the State Health Departments of Indiana, Ohio, Mississippi, Tennessee, Wyoming, Kentucky, and Illinois have endorsed the amendment. Dr. McCormack, of Kentucky, himself, the head of the department of public health in that State, has endorsed the Mundt amendment. Surgeon General Parran, of the United States Public Health Service, has endorsed it, Secretary Ickes has endorsed it, and I urge sincerely that Members vote "no" against the motion to recede. Let us present this to the Senate and see whether or not the criticism that is made that the Senate will vote in favor of pollution and against conservation is just. I am inclined to doubt it. I believe that the Members of the Senate will prove to be just as sincere in their conservation desires as the Members of the House. I deny the assumption that the Senate will let the polluters of America write its legislation for them now that the facts are understood.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. Yes.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I am wondering whether the committee considered a real, effective piece of legislation against pollution. Of course, it is within the power of the Congress to prevent further and additional pollution in Government-controlled streams. Why is it not within the power of the Congress also to abate by legislative act existing nuisances?

Mr. MUNDT. I am very glad that the gentleman has asked that question, because the bill that I originally introduced in the Seventy-sixth Congress did that, and the cry was made against that by the polluters and by some conscientious objectors that it was "too drastic," and we receded from that, said that we would withdraw that legislation; but let us at least quarantine at this time against an extension of the disease. And now today we again hear it said that this is "too drastic" because it will stop new sources of pollution which are not presently operating. If you are going to start at all to eliminate pollution, we cannot start any more slowly, any more easily, than to say that we are going to prohibit new sources and types of pollution. If we are to do less than that, we will be surrendering our streams to the polluters altogether. I am sure this House will not do that, and I am sure the Senate will also refuse to make such an abdication to avarice.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. Even if new pollution is started, it can be continued if they will get a permit from the board set up in the bill. It does not mean that a new industry cannot start.

Mr. MUNDT. Not at all. It simply means that before pollution, detrimental to the public health and to the public interests, can be dumped into the public waters of America, they must secure from the United States Public Health Service in the Division of Water Pollution control set up in the bill a permit in order to do that type of thing.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. Yes.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I want to inquire about the effect of the gentleman's amendment on existing conditions. Suppose a mill now existing wants to put an additional shift on, what would be the effect of the gentleman's amendment, and also what would be the effect of his amendment on the construction of a hotel or an apartment house in a city?

Mr. MUNDT. My amendment would have no effect whatever on that, because those are extensions of existing forms and sources of pollution and not a new source, nor could it be considered a new source of pollution by any stretch of the imagination.

Mr. HALLECK. As a matter of fact, if the Mundt amendment is retained, the particular language writing that into the law could be adjusted by the conferees?

Mr. MUNDT. Yes; or amended in the Senate, if any further clarification is needed, which I doubt.

Mr. HALLECK. Yes.

Mr. MUNDT. That is correct. I plead with this body not to take a backward step, not by implication and by receding from a 2 to 1 vote which we had on March 1, to tell the polluters of America that this body gives them open sesame to pollute the streams of America without restriction of any kind whatsoever. We have heard opponents here say this afternoon "I believe in the amendment; I voted for it last time; I think it is a good thing, but we are afraid the Senate will not approve it." Let us give the Senate an opportunity to vote on it. They have never had an opportunity to do so. Then if they reject it, there is still sufficient time to get together in conference and work out some other solution on which the House will vote. But let us by all means insist that before appropriating money to study the problem of pollution we include in the bill a provision against aggravating and increasing the very problem we are to spend tax money to help solve. Give the Senate an opportunity to vote on this forward-looking measure. I am confident the Senate will not let the conservationists of America down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, statements have been made several times that this bill without the Mundt amendment is nothing more than a survey. That is entirely erroneous. It provides loans both to industries and to municipalities for the purpose of putting in treatment works to treat sewage and pollution generally. That is the main purpose of the bill. They are not able without this help to put in these treatment plants. You can pass all the drastic legislation you can imagine, but that does not put money into their hands with which to do this work. Practically every State in the Union has a pollution law now along the terms of the Mundt amendment. Not one has ever succeeded in abating pollution, but in 6 years, through loans made through the P. W. A., more pollution was abated than had been abated in more than 100 years previous to that time under those drastic laws. That is the reason why many people in the United States thought that we ought to get up a new plan and try it out and see if it will work. Industries and municipalities all over the United States, practically every large industry imaginable, has agreed to cooperate, and wherever it is possible, to abate pollution, through loans that could be made to them at 2½-percent interest, through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; that they will gladly avail themselves of the opportunity, and put on such regulations as the Public Health Service may require.

Now, here is one bad feature about the Mundt amendment. It leaves it in the hands of a dozen different agencies all over the United States to institute these proceedings in court. In one State they may have one rule. In another they may have another. There is nothing to say what constitutes pollution. There is nothing to say what constitutes new pollution. It will be left to a dozen decisions of courts and it may be 20 years before it will be finally settled by the Supreme Court of the United States. The court reports of the United States are full of decisions on these matters pertaining to pollution. States that now have the most drastic laws—I will give you an instance in the State of Pennsylvania. I have received more complaint from the State of Pennsylvania than any other State in the Union about pollution. They have tried for years to enforce their law there. It is impossible. It never has been done. We have no reason to believe that it ever will be done.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. SPENCE. Is it not true that the cities are limited in their indebtedness, limited in such a way that they cannot build these interceptory sewers and disposal plants without our help?

Mr. MANSFIELD. There is no question about that.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Of course, the Mundt amendment would not stop the making of loans to municipalities in order to help them abate the nuisance?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Not at all. I mentioned that in answer to the charge that the bill was nothing more than a survey.

Mr. MUNDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. MUNDT. Does not the gentleman feel that with my amendment as a part of the bill, which can protect industries against new sources of pollution and new types of pollution, there would really be encouragement for existing polluters to avail themselves of the loan provisions of the bill?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I am sorry, but I did not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. MUNDT. If my amendment prevails and new sources and new types of pollution are inhibted, does not the gentleman think that will encourage existing polluters to avail themselves of the loan provisions of the bill, because they will then have some protection against unfair and unjust polluters?

Mr. MANSFIELD. My judgment is that you are not going to do anything to abate pollution unless you can assist the polluters in doing it themselves.

Mr. MUNDT. Yes; and I am in favor of assisting them, not only assisting them, but encouraging them by giving them protection against new types of pollution.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The bill without the Mundt amendment gives all the encouragement in the world.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. LEAVY. If those who would create any new source of pollution would secure permission of the division they would not be subject to court review at all, would they?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Well, I do not know just how the amendment reads.

Mr. LEAVY. The language seems to be very clear upon that, and it is only new sources of pollution that are created without review that will become subject to court procedure. I am referring to paragraph 2 under subsection (d).

Mr. SPENCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. Is it not true that the pact bill that we recently approved in this House by unanimous consent provides for the abatement of stream pollution by action of the States?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is true. Only last week a bill was passed approving a compact between certain States on the Ohio River.

Mr. SPENCE. A compact approved by the States involved growing out of their effort to eliminate stream pollution.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. With respect to the question raised by the gentleman from Kentucky about diversity of interpretation, is it not true of all legislation? It must all be interpreted. The law books are full of interpretations of every conceivable kind of legislation that has gone through the Congress. So that ought not to operate as an argument against the adoption of the Mundt amendment.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Does not the gentleman realize that it would cause a delay of many years?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I doubt that.

Mr. MANSFIELD. What is "new pollution"? What is "pollution"? The Mundt amendment does not define what "pollution" is. All these matters by the terms of the bill are left to the Public Health Service to determine. But the question of pollution under the Mundt amendment is left entirely in doubt and has got to be left to the decisions of the court hereafter for determination as to what it means.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is true with respect to all legislation when final interpretation is had.

Mr. MANSFIELD. But the bill for other purposes now gives authority for determining what constitutes pollution and the extent of the purification of water, and everything of that kind, to the Public Health Service.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. ELSTON. Is it not a fact that under the provisions of the Mundt amendment it would be possible for the United States Government to enjoin even a State or the municipalities within a State?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The gentleman is more of a lawyer than I, but I think he is correct.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. I do not think there is a greater authority in the House on streams than the gentleman from Texas. As I understand it, the Mundt amendment would not prohibit any of these loans to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Not at all. It leaves that open and intact.

Mr. STEFAN. In view of the fact that all of the conservationists—the Izaak Walton Leaguers, and so forth—are for this amendment, and in view of the fact that it would help eliminate pollution, would the gentleman from Texas mind stating the greatest objection he has to the amendment?

Mr. MANSFIELD. For one thing, it divides authority for its enforcement. The bill without the Mundt amendment places enforcement entirely under the Public Health Service. The Mundt amendment would place enforcement, so far as new pollution is concerned, in the various authorities throughout the country. There is that undesirable division of authority. It should all remain under the Public Health Service, as the bill originally placed it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired, all time has expired.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, not being able to obtain time to speak on the motion I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, the interests of my constituents and the welfare of a great industry in Alaska impells me to express the hope that the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD], not to insist further on the Mundt amendment contained in this bill, be adopted and that the Mundt amendment be thereby eliminated. The gentleman from Texas has pointed out the weakness and the danger inherent in the Mundt amendment through lack of definition and through failure to prescribe a unified and orderly procedure. The amendment speaks of "pollution" but there is nothing therein to define pollution or to say just how far a stream may be said to be polluted by the disturbance of its bed or the introduction into its waters of sand or gravel or other natural materials that are not physically harmful or deleterious. And so the placer mining operators in Alaska, having in mind the general definition of the word "pollution" and the further general tendency of Government bureaus to place the largest possible construction upon terms embraced in laws falling within the administration of those bureaus, and the drastic and sometimes totally unexpected constructions which are thus placed upon words, or phrases, or sections of acts of Congress, are greatly apprehensive lest the term "pollution" as stated in the Mundt amendment shall be so construed as to include the results of the normal and ordinary operations of that industry and, therefore, will be gravely hurtful and perhaps disastrous to the continued and successful operation of placer mining in Alaska.

This type of mining consists of the sluicing or washing of the gravels of creek and river beds for the recovery of the small particles of native gold and other precious metals, or nonprecious metals, such as tin or tin ore, contained therein. Many of the streams of Alaska contain gold or silver or platinum or tin-bearing gravels; and these gravels are worked in several ways: By pick and shovel and by sluice box, by hydraulic, and by dredge, and thus the gold, silver, platinum, tin, and other precious and nonprecious metals are saved. In all of Alaska the industry gives direct employment to perhaps 4,000 men and indirect employment to several thousand more. The output of gold and other precious and useful metals of the placer operations of Alaska amount to about $15,000,000 per year, a large part of which is paid out in wages to those employed in the industry.

The amendment referred to forbids what is called new sources of pollution, either by sewage or industrial waste, to be discharged into the navigable waters of the United States and streams tributary thereto "until and unless approved by the division." It seems possible—perhaps probable—that the operation of placer gravels which always results in the impregnation of the flowing waters of the creeks and rivers where such operations are carried on with fine silt much of which is held in suspension for many miles, will be called pollution resulting from industrial waste, and so, if this amendment is adopted, before a single cubic foot of new ground may be worked by the placer miners of Alaska, it will be necessary for each operator to secure the approval of the division of water-pollution control created by the act.

It is of the very essence and nature of placer mining that new ground be continuously worked and the materials contained therein be extracted. Every year, and indeed, every month, every week, every day, and every hour, and, perhaps, every minute during each mining season new bodies of gravel are dredged or hydraulicked or otherwise washed, and thus it would be easy for some bureaucrat to say that every minute's operations would constitute a new source of "pollution," by "industrial waste."

A statement made a few minutes ago by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] indicates that in drafting the Mundt bill and the Mundt amendments he had no thought of attempting to prevent any "pollution" except such as might be deleterious to human health or objectionable from a sanitary standpoint, and yet the division that will have charge of the administration of this bill, if it becomes an act, is only too likely to arrogate to itself all possible power and thus to include in its jurisdiction every bit of placer mining or other mining in which the waters of streams are necessarily used.

The Yukon River is more than 2,000 miles long and it has innumerable branches and tributaries, on many of which placer-mining operations are now carried on. While it may be that under the terms of the act the present operations may continue without securing the approval of the division, it seems certain that no new operations may be undertaken, and no additional ground may be acquired and worked under the present operations, unless the division approves it in advance. The burden thus sought to be imposed upon the industry is a heavy one. Probably the operators who work on an extremely large scale with an investment of millions will be able without grave loss to employ the necessary lawyers, and engineers, and accountants, and experts, and geologists, and all of the others, in the city of Washington or elsewhere, to support and maintain the applications for approval of new work made by those operators; but those who are less well financed, the man who must operate on a total investment of ten, or fifty, or even one hundred thousand dollars can never afford compliance with the burdensome red tape which is bound to surround the application for and the granting of approval of the division. There is no short and easy way likely to be followed in the administrative set-up. I assume that if the bill passes, a placer operator who wishes to work a few thousand, or a few million, cubic yards of gravel on one of the tributaries of an Alaskan river, or one of the branches of such tributaries, will first necessarily make his application for the approval of the division. And, of course, the division will not grant such approval offhand. Very likely a notice must be given to all who may be concerned in the proposed operation. That is to say, to all of those who live near or who operate further downstream and perhaps anywhere in the valley of the river in which the operation is carried on; and I further assume that after such notice is given hearings will be had and at those hearings it will be necessary to prove that the so-called pollution will really not be injurious to anyone, and to support his case the operator at such hearing must have the assistance not only of lawyers, but of engineers, accountants, and of various classes of experts. The burden thus imposed upon the operator who is not a millionaire is likely to be insuperable.

I am not directly concerned, Mr. Speaker, with the operation of the Mundt amendment, except as to mining in Alaska and particularly with respect to placer mining and, therefore, I take no part of the debate which has had to do with the pollution of streams in the main body of the United States through industrial operations or through the emptying of sewage therein. It is easy to understand and sympathize with the concern of those who wish to correct at the earliest possible moment the present evil conditions and even by drastic measures to prevent any extension of those conditions in the future. But it is never justifiable through carelessness in draftsmanship or through, as in this case, entire lack of definition to run the risk of ruining a great industry just in order to correct evils existing elsewhere. That type of procedure can only be compared with the doctrine that it is always necessary to burn down a house in order to get rid of the mice.

Whatever may be the result of the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD], and even if that motion should be voted down and thus the House conferees be required to insist upon the Mundt amendments, I earnestly hope that the House and Senate conferees will in conference, by definition or by suitable words of exception, exclude from the scope and operation of the Mundt amendment all placer mining in Alaska or elsewhere.

The laws of Alaska at the present time are ample to prevent any "pollution" of streams either through placer mining or otherwise. The courts are always open to entertain suits of those who are injured by any kind of operations which affect the character of a stream. There is absolutely no need of such drastic legislation as is proposed by the Mundt amendment to take care of the rights of those who may be affected by the operation of this industry in Alaska. The miners of Alaska now take sufficient risks and now undertake sufficient burdens without being required to spend their time and their money and their thought upon compliance with another and, in this case, as to them, a burdensome and a useless Federal bureau.

If the motion should be voted down, it will be easy enough, Mr. Speaker, in conference, to insert in the Mundt amendment a provision that silt, soil, and gravel thrown into streams by ordinary placer mining operations in Alaska and containing no extraneous matter which is offensive, poisonous or deleterious to health should not be considered as pollution of the streams within the meaning of the act.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to any modification or change as regards the so-called Mundt amendment. There can be no compromise. The House has previously expressed itself and should now hold the line. If the Senate insists upon the half-baked, insipid, and ineffective proposals made heretofore, then it appears we will have no bill, and I do not know but what we will be just as well off. The bill to have any real value must prevent future new pollution, and at the same time should reduce as rapidly as possible existing contamination. No undue hardship will be placed upon existing industries, mines, and municipalities. All future sources of pollution will be prevented by the proposal now being debated. The House conferees, if they "stand by their guns," will force the acceptance of this valuable amendment. Let the Senate at least vote upon the question.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point, having been unable to obtain time on the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, at the outset permit me to say that I have enjoyed membership on the Rivers and Harbors Committee, particularly because of the wise counsel and able guidance of our excellent and distinguished chairman, Judge MANSFIELD. He has at all times been more than fair in his consideration of all problems, and I want to take this opportunity to pay tribute to him. I am sorry indeed that I cannot agree with the motion to recede and concur.

Several months ago this House passed the stream-pollution bill and with it the so-called Mundt amendment, which had for its purpose the making of a beginning in the problem of keeping pure our streams, rivers, and water supply. It does not affect any existing industrial pollution; it in no way affects or restricts the activities of cities or towns which do not now have water-treatment of sewage-disposal plants. On the contrary, it turns its back on existing conditions but does state definitely that from here on no new sources of pollution will be tolerated.

This, it seems to me, is a sensible, logical, and reasonable approach to a condition which is admittedly bad and which requires the best in cooperative efforts of not only all of industry but of all civic and conservation bodies, as well as the public generally.

Water pollution has been discussed since the beginning of this century, and until recently those who opposed pure-stream legislation were sufficiently powerful to defeat all national proposals in an outright manner.

Conservationists, on the other hand, have been willing and ready to compromise and cooperate, as is evidenced by their acceptance of the Barkley bill with the Mundt amendment. This amendment does not disturb existing pollution, as I have said before, but only states that new sources shall be illegal unless approved by the United States Public Health Service. It therefore simply calls a halt and, in my opinion, makes futile the Barkley bill without this excellent provision offered by the able gentleman from South Dakota.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BENDER) there were—ayes 61, noes 99.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and eleven Members are present; not a quorum.

The doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas, 155, nays 198, answered "present" 2, not voting 76, as follows:

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. ALEXANDER. Were he present, he would vote "nay." I voted "yea." Therefore I withdraw my vote of "yea" and vote "present."

The doors were opened.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ARGENTINE FELICITATIONS ON ANNIVERSARY OF AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Secretary of State:

WASHINGTON, July 6, 1940.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: The American Ambassador at Buenos Aires has informed me that on July 4, deputies representing the four principal political parties in the Argentine Chamber of Deputies joined in paying tribute to the anniversary of the independence of the United States upon the motion of Señor Vincente Solano Lima, National Democrat, of Buenos Aires, who proposed that the Chamber of Deputies should stand as a tribute to the Congress of the United States and that the president of the chamber should send the corresponding communication. Agreement on behalf of the Anti Personalista Party was expressed by Señor Adolfo Lanus in an address in support of democratic institutions. Señor Jose Luis Cantillo, speaking for the Radical Party, stated that the present, of all times, called for their warm support for such a motion. Señor J. V. Gonzalez, Socialist deputy, spoke in support of the motion on behalf of his party. At the invitation of the Chair, the Chamber of Deputies and the public in the galleries stood as a tribute to American Independence Day.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

[The Members applauded.]

The SPEAKER. In connection with the letter of the Secretary of State, the Chair lays before the House the following English translation of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Translation]

JULY 4, 1940—9:59 p. m.

THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, WASHINGTON.

The Chamber of Deputies of the Argentine nation resolved in today's session to pay homage of sympathy to the people and the Congress of the great American Nation because of the glorious date of its independence which created immortal models for the exercise of free institutions in all America. I greet the Speaker with my most distinguished consideration.

AGUIAR,
President of the Chamber of Deputies of the Argentine.
CARLOS G. BONORINO,
ZAVALLA CARBO,
Seretaries.

[The Members applauded.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE RESOLUTION 547

Whereas there have long existed historical ties of friendship between the United States of America and Argentina; and

Whereas these ties, based on the respect and admiration of two free and independent nations, happily grow firmer day by day; and

Whereas on July 4, 1940, the Chamber of Deputies of the Argentine Congress graciously paid tribute to the anniversary of the independence of the United States of America and to this House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America; and

Whereas today, July 9, 1940, marks the anniversary of the Declaration of Independence of the Argentine Republic, a memorable day in the progress of democratic institutions; therefore be it

Resolved, That this House pay tribute to the Chamber of Deputies of Argentina and to the great Argentine Nation on this their anniversary of the signature by a group of 28 patriots in the city of Tucumán on July 8, 1816, of the Declaration of Independence of the United Provinces of the Rio de la Plata; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded through the Secretary of State to His Excellency the Ambassador of Argentina at Washington for transmission to the Chamber of Deputies of the Argentine Republic.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM].

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, on July 4, 1940, deputies representing the four principal political parties in the Argentine Chamber of Deputies joined in paying tribute to the anniversary of the independence of the United States upon the motion of Señor Vincente Solano Lima, National Democrat of Buenos Aires, who proposed that the Chamber of Deputies should stand as a tribute to the Congress of the United States and that the President of the Chamber should send the corresponding communication. Agreement on behalf of the Anti Personalista Party was expressed by Señor Adolfo Lanus in an address in support of democratic institutions. Señor Jose Luis Cantillo, speaking for the Radical Party, stated that the present, of all times, called for their warm support for such a motion. Señor J. V. Gonzalez, Socialist Deputy, spoke in support of the motion on behalf of his party. At the invitation of the Chair, the Chamber of Deputies and the public in the galleries stood as a tribute to American Independence Day.

It occurs to me that on this day, July 9, 1940, the Argentine is celebrating the anniversary of the Congress of Tucumán which met in the city of Tucumán on July 9, 1816, and pledged itself to a declaration of independence for the United Provinces of the Rio de la Plata.

On March 8, 1822, President Monroe sent to the Congress a message in which he renewed his sympathy for the cause of Buenos Aires, and the Congress voted the recognition of Argentine independence unanimously. The United States was then the first country after Portugal to recognize Argentina and I am pleased to say that the friendly relations then established have ever since been maintained between the Government of Argentina and the Government of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, it is very fitting that we should commend and congratulate our sister republic of the Argentine on the one hundred and twenty-fourth anniversary of its independence.

Argentina is one of the largest, the richest, and the most powerful of the Latin-American republics. In these days, as the nations of the Old World are going to the right and to the left into autocracies and dictatorships, we of this Congress should be very happy to send a word of greeting down to this great Republic, and to congratulate Argentina on its anniversary of independence, to wish her long life, freedom, and prosperity, and to send our best wishes to our sister Republic through His Excellency, the Argentine Ambassador in Washington, Senor Don Felipe A. Espil. Ambassador Espil is one of the ablest and most popular of the diplomats now living in the city of Washington, and his charming American wife is equally well liked. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution. The Chair demands a division.

The House having divided, the Speaker said: "On this vote the yeas are 350, nays none, and the resolution is unanimously adopted."

AUTHORIZING COL. DONALD H. CONNOLLY TO HOLD OFFICE OF ADMINISTRATOR OF CIVIL AERONAUTICS

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 283.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain what this resolution is?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, the Administrator of the Civil Aeronautics Authority has resigned, and it has been decided to appoint as Administrator an officer in the Regular Army, Col. Donald H. Connolly, a man of great reputation, very efficient and capable, both in training and in the other work that will be necessary in this office. For this reason and in order that he may hold his rank in the Army, it is necessary for the Congress to authorize him to take this appointment.

Mr. MICHENER. Does this have a unanimous report?

Mr. BULWINKLE. It has a unanimous report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. MICHENER. And the minority Members understand the gentleman is calling it up at this time?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes; they do.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 1222 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 10, sec. 576), Col. Donald H. Connolly, being a commissioned officer on the active list, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, is authorized to hold the office of Administrator of Civil Aeronautics in the Department of Commerce without loss of or prejudice to his status as a commissioned officer on the active list of the United States Army and if appointed to such civil office he shall receive in addition to his pay and allowances as such commissioned officer an amount equal to the difference between such pay and allowances as such commissioned officer and the salary prescribed by law for such civil office.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include therein an address by Hon. Franklin W. Hancock, Jr., member of the Home Loan Bank Board.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from California [Mr. BUCK] be permitted to extend his remarks three times in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include therein a short editorial on Senator MCNARY.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF ACT TO PREVENT PERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 514.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 514

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 3046, an act to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 4 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendments under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], and I now yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order the consideration of S. 3046, better known as the Hatch amendments to the original Hatch Act. This bill extends the same protection to those employed in the States, who are paid in whole or in part from Federal funds, as the original Hatch bill extended to those Federal employees who were not covered by the civil-service regulations. The amendments provide that not only Federal employees, who are now covered by the original bill, but employees in the States who are paid in whole or in part with Federal funds, may vote as they please. They cannot be coerced or threatened with loss of their jobs because of the manner in which they vote or the candidate for whom they vote. In addition, if these amendments are adopted, it will no longer be possible to assess Federal employees with dues for campaign purposes.

The bill as originally passed, which I believe embraces something more than 200,000 Federal employees who are not appointed by State agencies, has brought about a situation, as reflected by my mail, that has given these people a new outlook on life and on the political picture. It is a veritable Bill of Rights for them. I do not know of one employee in the Federal service who would give up the protection afforded him by the Hatch Act and go back to the chaotic and oppressive condition that has existed in many States for many years.

The Congress has seen fit to pass and the President to approve legislation which was deemed desirable from the standpoint of giving employees of the Federal Government the protection afforded them by the original Hatch Act. Most certainly, then, it is fitting and proper to give those public employees in the various States, who occupy much the same status as the Federal employees, the same protection. There should be no discrimination, no class legislation, and I am confident it is not the desire of this House that there should be.

This legislation is based upon honesty and integrity in the political structure of our Nation; it is intended to extend further the intention expressed by this Congress last year that public moneys, paid into the Treasury of the United States, shall not be forcibly collected to foster political machines or selfish political ambitions. It does not prevent any person, except those paid from relief funds, from making a voluntary contribution if that person so desires. It does strike directly at "bossism" and political dictatorship.

This legislation, Mr. Speaker, will prevent the extreme application of the spoils system, which countenances, even demands, that through the devious channels of ruthless machine politics, the taxpayers' money shall finance partisan political activities.

Every poll, every survey made since the passage of the original Hatch Act reveals that more than 75 percent of the people of the Nation favor the original law and its protective inclusion of the thousands of State employees, whom these amendments seek to cover.

Consideration of this legislative proposal should and must transcend partisan politics; it should and does, I am certain, tower far above the individual political fortunes of any of us. Let us, then, consider it from that standpoint—purely on the basis of the reestablishment by both political parties of decency, common honesty, and true democratic principles in the conduct of their campaigns and the people's governmental affairs.

This is not a revolutionary or novel idea. It is simply a return to the principles of government and political procedure which have been enunciated by this Nation's greatest leaders.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Since the greatest danger to our democracy now lies in the domination of the public utilities——

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RANKIN. Wait a minute, I am going to ask the gentleman about the amendment I propose to offer.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Ask a question about the amendment and I will be glad to yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to ask the gentleman if he will support an amendment to prevent these hirelings of public utilities that are supposed to be publicly regulated from also going out and making speeches and using money and other influences to control elections in this country.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that the purpose of the original bill and the amendments is to free the employees of the Federal Government. This bill has nothing whatever to do with private individuals except that a private individual cannot coerce, intimidate, or threaten anyone in order to secure his vote.

Mr. RANKIN. But it permits employees of the public utilities to continue to dominate politics in this country.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield further.

Now, who is opposed to this type of legislation and who is for it? The press quotes the President of the United States as being one who is for it. I notice the press also quotes the gentleman who has permitted his name to go before the Republican Convention and be selected as their candidate for the Presidency as being for this type of legislation.

Mr. RANKIN. Why, of course, but I dare say he would not want us to curb the employees of the utilities. [Laughter.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. The majority leader of the Senate and the minority leader of the Senate favor this legislation. I am sure the leadership of this House on both sides of the aisle favor this type of legislation.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. Under the proposed amendments would it be unlawful for a State organization or a State administration to assess or solicit funds from a State agency that participates in Government funds?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. It would be unlawful?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It would be unlawful but they can contribute if they desire to do so voluntarily.

Mr. HOUSTON. But they cannot assess them.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Absolutely, they cannot assess them.

There are people who oppose this legislation, who are honest in their belief, and I have all the respect in the world for them. Then we have the other type of person who opposes this legislation because he believes that the party in power has the right to the spoils that go with that power. With that I disagree. I think it is wrong to assess employees against their will, who are working for the Federal Government. I think it is wrong to dismiss an employee of the Federal Government because he dares to vote for the candidate of his own choosing.

Now, a short time ago I heard the distinguished gentleman from Texas make a marvelous speech on the floor of the House. He spoke about the law of nature which he has observed so carefully. I have always been delighted to listen to the gentleman. He pointed out the greatness of the law of nature, stating that he observes such things and tries to follow in that pathway.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

If all the people of this country were of the same character as the great chairman of the Judiciary Committee, there would be no occasion for the Hatch Act. While he views and watches and tries to uphold the things that God is for and wants, there are others who try to emulate the devil. Those are the people at whom the Hatch Act is aimed. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, this bill gives rights to certain people in this country. I have seen women on sewing projects getting $35 a month and being assessed $2 or $3 of their wages when they had little children that were not getting enough milk and bread.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman mind——

Mr. DEMPSEY. I have not yielded, Mr. Speaker, although I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. I was trying to ask one.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am yielding for a question.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. Would the gentleman mind reciting the instance where that took place, in what State, and what kind of a set-up brought that about?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Well, that was in the W. P. A. and has been entirely cured by the original Hatch Act. There has been no more scandal in W. P. A. since the Hatch Act was passed, and that is what cleaned it up. I can go State by State through the United States if I desired, but I do not wish to reflect on any State or any people. I hope to help clean up a condition that exists, and which is generally known to exist. That is all that I am seeking to do.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Mexico has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, we have passed from the subject of water pollution to political pollution. I hold in my hand a photostatic copy of an order blank for advertising space in the Democratic Book of 1940. The number of this particular application has been deleted, because we have no desire to see the recipient persecuted by the income-tax people, the wage and hour people, the social-security people, and all of the other New Deal evils that now afflict the body politic. I shall read a few excerpts from this application:

THE DEMOCRATIC BOOK OF 1940

Make checks payable to Democratic National Committee, National Press Building, Washington, D. C. Hotel Biltmore, New York City.

I wonder if that name should not be spelled with an "M." That is a good place for the Democrats to have their intake—the Hotel Biltmore or "Milkmore." Then it goes on and says:

The Democratic National Committee accepts this order under the following conditions: This order is not binding on the Democratic National Committee—

I am not surprised at that, because nothing is—until accepted in writing by a duly authorized officer of the committee, and upon acceptance in writing shall become a binding and enforceable agreement between the advertiser and the Democratic National Committee. Advertiser is to pay for all drawings, photographs, and engravings used in the space hereby ordered, and the committee retains the right to edit all copy.

I suppose the advertiser might forget to glorify the New Deal, so the committee reserves the right to correct the omission or the oversight. To continue:

All alterations of this order must be written on the original and duplicate to be binding and valid—

And so on. Now we come to the most interesting part. Here are some of the prices:

Black and white: Full page, $2,500; preferred position 25 percent extra. Full color page, $3,125; no preferred position.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Not now.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Has Mr. Willkie's company got an ad there?

Mr. KNUTSON. To continue with the prices:

Preferred positions: Back cover in full color, $8,500.

Why, Mr. Speaker, that is more than one would pay for a page in the Saturday Evening Post, the Ladies' Home Journal, and the Woman's Companion combined. That is the price for a back cover, full-color page in this Democratic book. Then for the inside back cover in full color they ask $5,000, and for the inside front cover in color, $6,000. Of course, all of this space will be taken by Government contractors; that is, contractors who are doing business with the Government, the cost of which will be passed on to the people. Now here is some mechanical information:

Standard process colors—no metallic colors.

I presume that means that there is neither gold nor silver used in the manufacture of the ink with which this publication is printed.

Color pages and covers same size as black and white pages.

Then here is something interesting:

Bleed cover pages 15 percent extra.

That is rather an appropriate word, "bleed." Of course, they are all being bled. Then it says:

No bleed pages inside.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to yield me a little more time.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 minutes more.

Mr. KNUTSON. No bleed pages on the inside. That is rather misleading, because I find that the inside back cover in full color costs $5,000. If that is not bleeding, then I do not know what the term means.

Then, to continue:

Engravings: Halftones should be 120-line screen for best reproduction.

Mr. Speaker, ordinary newspapers use 85-line screen, but this seems to be an extraordinarily fine job. In other words, they are going to bleed you with a stiletto or some fine instrument rather than use a hacksaw or a meat ax. I presume the faithful are out now soliciting advertising at the point of a gun for this publication, and we shall all wait the appearance of this wonderful book with a great deal of interest. I am sure that it contains all the information that the heart could desire. I believe the Republicans could learn something from this priceless publication.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes; for a brief question.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I note that the Republicans have voted for this bill all the way through except when it came to the Bankhead amendment in the Senate where they limited contributions to $5,000, and only one Republican voted for that. Can the gentleman tell me why?

Mr. KNUTSON. Because we thought that figure was too high.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. I notice that Mr. Willkie has announced that no contribution in excess of $5,000 will be accepted by his campaign committee in the coming campaign.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, this rule gives plenty of time to discuss this matter, and the way the thing starts out there will be much partisan political talk indulged in. Of course, following my usual custom, I shall not do that. [Laughter.]

This rule makes in order the Hatch bill, S. 3046, with 4 hours of general debate, and then the bill is thrown open to amendment under the general rules of the House.

The gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY], coauthor of the bill with Senator HATCH of New Mexico, has explained in a general way the purpose of the bill. However, I hope you will bear with me while I read a part of Senator HATCH's explanation when the bill was before the Senate. It is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 5, 1940, and is as follows:

At the last session, Congress passed a law (the Hatch Act) which, among other things, prohibited political activity on the part of employees of the Federal Government, with certain exceptions. The purpose of the pending measure is to extend exactly the same provision to employees in the States whose employment is made possible by the use of Federal funds or appropriations from the Federal Treasury.

We have tried to approach the task mindful of the difference between the Federal Government and the several States, and mindful of our obligation to protect the funds which the Government itself appropriates, as well as the rights of the States and of the employees who are technically State employees from a legalistic standpoint, but nevertheless are perhaps in a greater sense Federal employees, for their employment could not be were it not for the aid given from the Federal Treasury.

In approaching this task, we—referring to the Senate committee—have tried to follow as nearly as possible the exact language of the act we passed last year—which, in turn, was the exact language of the rule of the Civil Service Commission, which has been in effect for more than 50 years.

I want to accentuate that. The original Hatch Act was in the language of the civil-service law for more than 50 years. There is nothing new about it; nothing new in principle, only it applied to non-civil-service Federal employees the same as the civil-service law applied to civil-service employees.

And that language was originally chosen because it had been in effect in this country so long and was so thoroughly understood.

Now, that is a part of Senator Hatch's explanation of this bill.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I would rather not. My time is so limited.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I simply wanted to ask the gentleman one question on that feature of it.

Mr. MICHENER. Well, for a question.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The point is, if the Federal Government, for example, gave the State of Missouri some money for building highways and a contract were let at some country point and the men in the neighborhood were working on this job, and they have a precinct meeting, those men could not participate in that precinct political meeting without forfeiting their jobs?

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman is opposed to the bill. It is very easy to conjure up fantastic examples. The mischief aimed at here is hard to reach. After all, the effectiveness of any law depends much upon the reasonableness of the administration enforcing it. My friend from Missouri is one of the most able Members of the House, and I hope he will consider the bill in its broader aspects and help us write a law that is fair and just.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Would it not apply to those men?

Mr. MICHENER. I am not sure that it would.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MICHENER. I would rather not, I only have 5 minutes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I hope the gentleman will not insist. My time is very limited.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would like to ask the gentleman as a lawyer one question.

Mr. MICHENER. I hope the gentleman will not insist.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Just for one question.

Mr. MICHENER. Very well. The gentleman from New York always asks worth-while questions, but sometimes difficult to answer.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. As one of the best constitutional lawyers in this House—and I say that with all sincerity—do you think that Congress has the right to say to a citizen of the United States, if he is on the Federal pay roll, that he cannot express himself publicly on a political question? Under the Constitution can we do that?

Mr. MICHENER. Under the Constitution the Government may attach such conditions to the spending of Federal money as the Congress sees fit. This bill has to do only with the political activities of those compensated from Federal funds. It is only another manifestation of that power of limitation. I do not believe any constitutional question is involved.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Then you say we have a constitutional right to do that?

Mr. MICHENER. I do. The Congress has a right to provide how the money shall be spent in a building program. We have the right to provide in an appropriation bill the persons who may work on the job. We can even fix the age of the persons who work on a project financed by the Government, and all that kind of thing. So, in my judgment, the gentleman has suggested no constitutional question. Civil-service employees compensated from Federal funds have been prevented from engaging in political campaigns for years. The constitutionality of that control is not even doubted.

The Congress has vastly more power over elections than it has ever sought to exercise. I do not believe that there is sufficient doubt of constitutionality to justify voting against this meritorious measure.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MICHENER. I want to discuss some other things, but I see that my time is about expired.

The SPEAKER. Did not the gentleman from New York yield the gentleman additional time.

Mr. FISH. Yes; I will be glad to do it. I did yield it, but I do not believe the gentleman understood it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understood.

Mr. MICHENER. In spite of the dire predictions of the opponents of the original Hatch Act, that law has worked well. None of the things that the opponents insisted would happen has happened. Indeed, the Hatch law makes it impossible for the political boss to corral, herd, and vote W. P. A. workers and other employees of the Federal Government throughout the States of the Union. That law is an emancipation proclamation for the honest, worthy citizen who finds himself receiving financial aid from, or is in the service of, his Government. No longer can he be compelled to work in the political vineyard of the reigning political administration. In no way is he deprived of his constitutional rights. In fact, the Hatch law protects those constitutional rights for him.

The debates on the original Hatch Act are replete with nauseating incidents of political coercion and browbeating of those receiving compensation from the Federal Government. The present debate will not develop any such incidents affecting Federal employees, because the Hatch Act accomplished something. Who then would say that this act should be repealed? Of course, none of us.

Those vehemently opposing this bill are largely the same persons who opposed the original Hatch bill and, mark you again, they will cite no incidents wherein the law now on the statute books has not been effective and beneficial. I use the word "beneficial" in the generic sense; that is, it has benefited the worker and it has made for free, honest, and pure elections.

Now, if the present Hatch law, which applies only to Federal employees, has worked well and is a good thing for the country and the employees, why should the principle not be extended to employees of States who receive their compensation in whole or in part from the Federal Government? This law will bring political freedom and liberty to many of these employees rather than deprive them of any constitutional rights.

Now, I am sure that there are those here who in their opposition to destroying political bossism will take shelter under the old States' rights cloak. I have much sympathy with those of that philosophy. We have too much centralization of government in Washington and the bureaucrats are reaching out their long arms into our States, our counties, our municipalities, and our homes. It is true that during the last 7 years our country has been pretty well regimented, regulated, and controlled from Washington. I am just as much opposed to that as anybody can be. However, this system is now operating and the purpose of the bill now before us is to protect those States and their citizens who are directly controlled by bureaus or money sent from Washington. Most of those opposing this bill do not oppose the Federal Government making these grants and contributions to States and local communities. Well, if the Federal Government is controlling the politics of States and localities by virtue of contributions to those agencies, and if this bill will lessen this domination, even though it does not destroy it entirely, then we should all be for this bill.

Tell me why the Federal Government should furnish the money to build highways in the States and then permit the administrators of the highways in the States, who spend the Federal money, to build up a political machine not only to elect highway commissioners and highway officials but also to dominate and control the entire political set-up in a whole State. The original Hatch Act put a stop to the Federal employees of a State dominating and controlling politics in the State. Does it seem fair for the Federal Government to furnish the money to permit a State highway department to dominate the political life of the State when that privilege is taken away from the Federal group? Oh, no; money should not control the political elections in any State. Of course, this money is not appropriated to the States for political purposes, but the State political machine is ofttimes the indirect result of the Federal money appropriated. The State highway commissioner has the right to locate roads, the right to employ hundreds of engineers, supervisors, and other subordinates. What is wrong about preventing him from using this authority for pernicious political purposes?

It will be said in this debate that this legislation is not only wrong in principle but that it is only needed in a few places. It seems to me that if the Federal Government is going to spend the money that it is spending in the several States, it has the perfect right to place such limitations as it sees fit on the spending of this money. One Member has suggested that this bill would not be here were it not for a condition obtaining in New Mexico, where the authors of the bill reside. If reports are true, this bill certainly is needed in New Mexico and possibly in many other States. It is always the wounded bird that flutters. Possibly New Mexico is spectacularizing conditions which we know are prevalent in many other sections of the country. Should we close our eyes to these conditions, or should we meet them head-on?

When we reach the 5-minute rule in the consideration of this bill those who would destroy the measure will offer prolific amendments. If you are in favor of remedying the conditions aimed at by this new Hatch bill, then you should vote against these sabotaging proposals.

The people of this country understand in a general way what the Hatch law is, and they favor that type of legislation. They believe in clean politics and are not going to quibble about technicalities when it comes to getting results. This is another step in the right direction, and I predict that if these amendments are adopted they will meet with the same general approval accorded to the original Hatch Act. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER].

POLL TAXES AND PERNICIOUS POLITICS

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, if this rule passes, I propose to offer an amendment to the bill it makes in order, and this amendment will have to do with the poll tax. I hope we can discuss this thing rather dispassionately and not indulge in personalities. I am sure we are not so much interested in personalities as we are in correcting a situation which I believe to be very un-American; that is, the charging of a fee before one is allowed to vote.

The purpose of the Hatch amendments is to prevent pernicious political activities.

The abolition of poll taxes as a prerequisite to voting in Federal elections is also necessary if we are to curb corrupt practices during elections. In eight States in the United States payment of a poll tax is required for voting in Federal elections. Frequently such taxes are paid for by persons other than the voters as an inducement for voting for certain candidates. Experience proves that existing legislation prohibiting such practices has failed to prevent them. It is therefore necessary in order to insure the honesty of elections that the Congress forbid the requirement that poll taxes be paid as a prerequisite for voting in Federal elections.

HOW POLL TAXES WORK

In these eight Southern States the people have to pay for the right to vote: Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia. The amount of the poll tax varies from $1 to $2, but in some States it is cumulative. That is, if a voter fails to exercise his franchise in a particular year, he must pay 2 years' taxes the following year before he can go to the polls to vote. In Georgia a man who has not paid his poll tax for 7 years will have to pay $15.50 for the right to vote. In Alabama this bill may run as high as $36. And so hundreds of thousands of sharecroppers, tenant farmers, and city workers have gotten behind with their poll taxes. Because of their low incomes they cannot afford to buy the right to vote. The result has been that powerful cliques have gained and kept political domination by the manipulation and control of elections. The democratic guaranties of the Constitution are thus nullified.

Here is how the poll tax works in the eight Southern States: Months before the election people pay their poll tax. On the poll-tax receipt is recorded the voter's name, age, sex, and color. Then when he goes to the polls on election day he takes his poll-tax receipt and hands it to the proper official and casts his ballot.

VOTES ARE BOUGHT

But what happens? Political machines come along and openly buy receipts. They go to the tax collector, who writes thousands of fictitious poll-tax receipts for them. Then, on election day, the machine politicians call in their henchmen and get them to vote in as many different places as possible. When the fictitious tax receipts are made out the politicians say, "We will make 200 of them for persons between 23 and 25 years of age, 200 of them for individuals about 30, 200 of them for those about 40, and some for those who are older." Then the proper poll-tax receipt is given to a man between 20 and 25 years of age who also has the other qualifications listed. The fictitious voter is loaded with others in cars that go from one polling place to another and along he goes, stopping here to vote as John Doe and there as Henry Smith.

I have in my files a sworn affidavit which reads as follows:

In 1936 I was interested in the election of a local candidate in Knoxville, Tenn. One evening a man active in local politics approached me and offered me a block of poll-tax receipts for my use. He had a large number of receipts, apparently several hundred. He counted off about 50 for me.

The receipts had no names entered on them, the names of registered voters to be filled in. They were, however, properly signed.

After some consideration of what such activity would involve, I decided against the use of the receipts and handed them back to him.

It is a common thing for employers, whether landowners or heads of manufacturing plants, to lend their employees money to pay the poll tax, or in some instances to pay the tax outright, and then see that these workers vote for the candidate supported by the employer. Ballots are not secret in some of the poll-tax States, but bear an identifying number so that workers know that they will be discovered if they do not vote as they were expected to do.

On many occasions the tax collector in a county will ignore back poll taxes due from a person and restore the voter's name to the polling list merely upon payment of the current tax if he knows he will vote the "right" way.

I have heard of a case where a single individual was armed with 130 poll-tax receipts which had been paid for by candidates for county offices and given to him that he might distribute them to those who thus gained the right to vote. At the same time he reminded them that this precious privilege was given to them with only one condition—"be sure you vote right."

In these ways the poll tax is used to manipulate elections illegally.

PAST EXPERIENCE

Many more States than the eight Southern States at one time or another required a poll tax for the right to vote. But as time went on these other States abolished them.

In 1821 the State of New York found that the poll tax led to fraud and corruption, and so they got rid of it.

As early as 1819, in the Maine constitutional convention, it was said that:

> Pecuniary qualifications of electorates have been productive of little benefit; sometimes of injuries. They are too often relaxed and strained to meet the purposes of the day.

And so it was never established in Maine.

It is interesting to note that all the States which were able to remove the poll-tax requirement for voting through legislative enactment have done so—North Carolina in 1920, Pennsylvania in 1933, Louisiana in 1934, and Florida in 1938.

CONGRESSIONAL ACTION NECESSARY

In the remaining eight poll-tax States the provision has been frozen into the State constitution and requires congressional action in order to remove it.

The poll-tax statutes have reduced the percentage of voters in the eight poll-tax States to one-fourth of those eligible to vote. The great poverty among the masses of workers on the land and in the mills and factories of these eight Southern States makes $1 something tremendously real. The cumulative features of the poll-tax laws make it almost impossible for workers and farmers, tenants and sharecroppers, to catch up with their back taxes once they have fallen behind in their poll-tax payments. And so the situation exists where the percentage of adult citizens who vote in the poll-tax States averages 24 percent compared with the average of 66 percent for the non-poll-tax States.

And because so many of the people have been prevented from exercising their voting privileges, they cannot remove the poll-tax statutes. For instance they had a referendum in Arkansas in 1938 to abolish the poll tax. Payment of the poll tax, of course, was a prerequisite to voting in this referendum. Only 13.1 percent of the adult citizens of Arkansas cast ballots. Consequently 7 percent of the voting population were able to preserve the poll-tax requirement in this State.

Therefore, it is necessary that Congress forbid the requirement that poll taxes be paid as a prerequisite for voting at Federal elections in order to insure the honesty of such elections.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 8 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, this is a fair rule. I do not believe there will be any opposition to it. It provides for free, full, and fair discussion of the Hatch bill and for 4 hours of general debate. I trust there will be no dilatory tactics or obstructionist methods used to delay further consideration of the bill. The House I am sure would like to finish the debate this afternoon and proceed under the 5-minute rule tomorrow and see if we can not dispose of the bill by tomorrow night. The House has a right after all these months to pass their judgment upon and work their will on the Hatch bill.

The gentleman from California who has just spoken has raised an important and rather extraordinary issue. I know and realize full well that it is loaded with political dynamite. I would not have raised the issue at this time myself.

There is too much not only dynamite, but too much personal animosity in it, because it affects too many Members from half a dozen Southern States. It is rather extraordinary at least to us in the North that the great Democratic Party that prides itself on having given birth to the democratic ideal and conception of government that all people should have a voice and vote in shaping the destinies of their own government, should tolerate in some 7 or 8 States of the South a poll tax that disfranchises approximately 7,000,000 voters, American citizens, more than half of whom are white citizens. Probably, if the truth were known, these poll taxes were put into effect originally to disfranchise the colored people; and they have succeeded in disfranchising about 3,500,000 of them in the Southern States. At the same time, however, they have disfranchised an even greater number of the poor whites.

My conception of democracy is the right of the people to rule, and my idea is that all people, no matter whether they are white or colored, whether they are rich or poor, whether they own property or do not, should have an equal voice in government and an equal right to cast their ballots in all the States of the Union.

But we find in certain Southern States that large numbers of American citizens are disfranchised by means of the poll tax and in certain congressional districts only five, six, or seven thousand voters elect a Member of Congress. That does not seem to me to be part and parcel of our democratic system or in accord with our free American institutions. After all, as we Members of Congress sit here today, democratic institutions are under attack throughout the world and dictatorships have sprung up all over the Old World, and our answer to those dictators should be to make democracy work in America. We should extend democracy and democratic institutions by giving all the people of this country an equal right to vote in every congressional district in the United States, regardless of race, color, or creed. I feel compelled to speak on this issue and I do it as far as I am able without wishing to tread on anybody's toes or to hurt anybody's feelings or to raise a vexing issue, but I would be derelict if I did not speak on this occasion as long as it has been raised.

The fifteenth amendment to the Constitution was proclaimed by my grandfather as Secretary of State in the Grant administration and reads as follows:

> The right of the citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

The prior amendment, the fourteenth amendment, reads as follows:

> No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States.

Certainly one of the privileges and immunities of all our citizens is the right to vote. The poll-tax laws were put into effect, I am inclined to believe, to disfranchise the colored people, but they have disfranchised far more of the poor white people in certain Southern States. I am in sympathy with the amendment that the gentleman from California has proposed. How far we should go toward putting it in this bill I do not know. I do not propose to jeopardize in any way the Hatch bill by loading it down with amendments that might prevent its passage.

The reason for the Hatch bill is very simple. We in Congress have appropriated not millions of dollars but billions of dollars for W. P. A., A. A. A., and other governmental agencies. We have created an army of Federal and State employees who are paid either wholly or partially by Federal funds which the Congress of the United States has voted. It is our duty to place as many safeguards around the ballot box if we want to protect and defend our free institutions and if we want our democratic institutions to survive. We all know from experience that the employees on the Federal pay roll and those who are paid partially by Federal funds get into the hands of the partisan spoilsmen. The political spoilsman has just one purpose in view; that is, to try to corral as many votes as he possibly can to keep himself in power. That is the main reason we are forced to meet this issue today and we cannot escape the responsibility.

We Members of Congress have appropriated this money by the billions of dollars; therefore, in order to protect the sanctity of the ballot box, the very heart of democracy, the cornerstone of our free institutions, we have to safeguard these Federal and State employees who are partially paid out of Federal funds from being controlled and delivered by the spoilsmen and having their liberty of political action taken away from them by being coerced, intimidated, and forced to vote for one candidate as against another, either in the primaries or on election day.

It seems to me we are striking a blow in the defense of free institutions, the ballot box, and of democracy itself by affording protection in this bill to those citizens on the pay roll of the Government, saying to them, "From now on you will not be coerced or intimidated by anyone, and you can vote for any candidate you care to in the primaries or at any election." [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH].

THE HIGHER SPORTSMANSHIP IN POLITICS

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, as a new Member here and one with an extraordinarily high regard for the quality of performance in the House of Representatives, I thought I had a right to expect that out of the Judiciary Committee of the House, whether by majority report or minority report, we would get in solid substance and in form dignified and sedate whatever can be said against this Hatch bill.

THE MINORITY REPORT DISAPPOINTING

To me this minority report of the Judiciary Committee is the most astonishing official report I have seen during my 6 years in State and National politics. It is to me indeed the most saddening document that I have seen come from a public body. I do not say that merely because I regard it as being completely wrong-headed, for after all we have to allow each other as we allow ourselves a wide margin of error. But from the Judiciary Committee I thought we had a right to expect that even when we are wrong-headed we would have a temperate rather than dogmatic discussion of important issues. This is the most logically intemperate report I have seen come from a committee of this House. I wish I had time to discuss the document paragraph by paragraph. It ought to be done for the sake of the logical self-respect of the House of Representatives. Why the heat about a simple, honest effort to make elections honest? Could it be that eight Democrats—not a Republican signed the report—are so unbiased as to have a monopoly upon constitutional reasonableness?

But in a time so short I want to lift what I have to say about the merits of this bill—the rule itself is foregone—from the level of legalism, about which I know little and in which I profess to know less to the level of good sportsmanship. I want to let the light from western windows blow in upon some dogmas that this report likes to dignify as principles of government.

The only conclusions I draw from this minority report which undertakes to state the solid grounds against this Hatch bill are two. One of them is that you can say anything with language. It is an amazing thing about language: you can say anything with it. The other one is that the saying of it does not make it so, not even if the speaker arrogates to himself an intimate knowledge of the laws of nature or a monopoly upon wisdom of the divine. It still is just something said in language: whether true or false depending upon something else, and not upon the mere saying of it.

As I read that minority report, I was reminded of the experience I had some months ago in the northern woods of Wisconsin when I was spending the night with an old trapper. About 9 o'clock in the evening we heard a noise out at the wood pile and he said, "You know, that sounds like a bear," but he did not do anything about it. In another hour we heard the same noise, somewhat intensified, and he said, "You know, I believe that is a bear"; but he sat still for a long time talking. About midnight, that strange mystic hour when the veil between the frail present and the eternal future grows thin, spooks sputter, and goblins growl, we heard this same noise, much intensified. The old trapper said, "I tell you, that is a bear." He got up leisurely and lighted his lantern and we walked out together to the wood pile, and sure enough—it was not a bear. Read this Hatch bill with your eyes open to present abuses of political power, and see, for all the noise raised by the minority report, that this Hatch Act is not a bear.

But I wish now to lift the discussion of the act to a constructive level. We commit ourselves today in voting upon this rule, and tomorrow in voting upon the bill, as to the high matter of improving the rules of the great American game of politics. We seek to make effective in politics by means of this extension of the Hatch Act our American sense of sportsmanship in the field of political action.

Sportsmanship. That is what has saved the Constitution, not dogmas about it. Sportsmanship. That is what makes the two-party system work with us, though it creak in Mexico and break down in many other countries. America lasts only so long as this spirit of sportsmanship continues to grace the American two-party system.

TWO KINDS OF SPORTSMANSHIP

But there are two kinds of sportsmanship, the lower and the higher. The lower we have always had in large measure. The higher we are slowly, very slowly, attaining. It is of this higher sort of sportsmanship that I want particularly to speak, but only after a word, if you will bear with me, on this lower kind of sportsmanship.

THE LOWER SPORTSMANSHIP

The lower sportsmanship is to lose one's case with good humor after fighting with all one's might for his cause. Even this kind of sportsmanship is unknown in many parts of the world today. The dictators take the kingdom of power by violence because they cannot stand to see others win in peace. The temptation to bully also proves for a few politicians, even in America, a strain too great for their democratic stamina. Poor sports may seem to submit to an election, but behind the scenes be buying votes or bullying their employees. That is a little higher than dictatorship, I suppose, but it is much lower than democratic decency.

It is a form of political sportsmanship, any losing of one's case without violence. The higher sportsmanship, however, has to do not with losing but with the manner of winning. The American people were spoiled against poor sportsmanship and sensitized to higher sportsmanship in the very beginning of this Republic.

Two great men, who in many countries then and in most countries now, would have cut each other's throats, taught us Americans how to remain democratic through thick and thin. These men were Alexander Hamilton and Thomas Jefferson. How hard they fought, how bitterly at times they hated each other. Each had his day of success, but neither would ever have harmed a hair of the other's head. Each loved his country, and each was man enough to see his country's need of the other. Their common country, this America of ours, became great enough from the beginning thus to harbor enemies, to stomach opposition, and to turn party contradiction to patriotic purposes, provided the political process itself could be kept cleanly operative.

Hamilton and Jefferson taught us by example that in the American way of life opposition itself is a standard form of cooperation. It was the greatest lesson they or anybody else had to teach. It was the greatest lesson that we had to learn.

THE HIGHER SPORTSMANSHIP

It is this lesson taught by both Jefferson and Hamilton which is forgotten by those among us whose conduct made necessary the first Hatch Act, and now makes necessary this second Hatch Act. The opponents of this bill forget that the American theory is that both great political parties are equally indispensable. As early America could not afford to be without either Hamilton or Jefferson, so the country today cannot afford to be without either of the traditions which these men founded.

If equally indispensable, each party must, of course, be afforded equal opportunity to live and equal opportunity to win elections. The Hatch measure, first and last, seeks only to protect equality of opportunity for the party out of power by preventing the party in power from doing what no decent party should do but which practice allows, using public money for partisan effect. It is rotten sportsmanship as it is sordid citizenship to compromise this equality of opportunity against the party out of power.

Everyone knows, who has reflected upon this matter for even a moment in patriotic mood, that the party in power has already some advantage, simply because it is in power.

I know, for instance, that I start with an advantage over any man who runs against me as Congressman at Large. So with every man in office. The party in power has the public eye; it can catch the public ear; it thus has free publicity to begin with. This natural advantage should surely make incumbents ashamed to snatch also advantages artificial and unsportsmanlike.

It is this kind of dishonest advantage which the Sheppard committee reported certain States to have taken of the W. P. A. in 1936. It is this kind of unsportsmanlike advantage which Senator HATCH wishes to stop. His first bill outlawed this advantage in strictly Federal jobs. But there are several hundred thousand jobs in the States, paid for in whole or in part by Federal money; and it is holders of these jobs which the present Hatch bill proposes to sterilize of political poison. Poor sports never understand how a party in power could voluntarily surrender advantages to the opposing party. Politicians, however, are mostly good sports, and sportsmen hate unfair advantage when they come to see it for what it is.

DEMOCRATS THE PROMOTERS OF THE ACT

So it happens that Senator HATCH, a Democrat, proposed this legislation. So it happens that Senator BARKLEY, Democratic floor leader in the Senate, fought it through that body. So it happens that the gentleman from New Mexico, Representative DEMPSEY, my colleague, a Democrat, furthers this legislation with his legion of honor in the House of Representatives. So it happens that I, a Democrat, am at this moment urging you to vote this rule and then to support this effort at fair play. So it happens that President Roosevelt had joined other Democratic Party leaders in publicly recommending this display of good sportsmanship. Contrary to the Christian Science Monitor editorial of July 6, which my good colleague the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] inserted in the RECORD yesterday, responsible Democratic leadership did not have to be "blitzkrieged" into decency by a power magnate turned into a powerful politician overnight. Of course we Democrats want to win this election, but we do not want to win it the dirty way. We want to win it in a way that will keep elections worth winning in the future. That is what I mean by the higher sportsmanship in politics—so to win, or lose, as to keep the game agoing, efficiently and decently.

In a two-party system, for the party in power to use jobs publicly paid for to prosper its partisan advantage is clearly outrageous to any generous conscience; for we have not then a two-party system at all, but in perilous respects a totalitarian one. It is like a game of chess in which you take all the titled pieces and leave to your opponent only the lowly pawns. This practice would ruin any game, and this practice is clearly pernicious in the game of politics. The Hatch Act simply so brands it, and proposes to outlaw it accordingly.

THOMAS JEFFERSON FATHERED THE PRINCIPLE

Good taste and a sense of sportsmanship ought to prevent any such practice. As long ago as President Jefferson, the good sportsman in politics, there came an order from the Presidency saying that a public official should not under him—

> Attempt to influence the votes of others nor take any part in the business of electioneering, that being deemed inconsistent with the spirit of the Constitution and his duties to it.

Shades of mercy upon those who read all of the rest out of the court of reason and out of the law of nature and out of the favor of God because we would enact something so new and radical that it is as old and as reasonable as Jefferson. Jefferson had the whole thing clear in principle and put it in practice besides.

That is the whole case for the Hatch Act, stated and ordered long ago by the Sage of Monticello. I admit it unfortunate that we must now legislate what we should have inherited from him as good sportsmanship; but bad taste cannot be allowed to prevail below a certain level, not even in the name of a cult of otiose constitutionalism. Those who snitch on freedom must have their freedom curtailed so that the freedom of others may be safeguarded. No others are touched by this act, save to be protected from such as these. The Hatch proposal simply defines as pernicious and forbids as contrary to law this thing which Jefferson correctly described as "inconsistent with the spirit of the Constitution."

JAMES MADISON ANSWERED OUR CONSTITUTIONAL CULTISTS

Those who, with Jefferson, say this should be done, but, against Jefferson, say it should not be done by the Federal Government are making public spectacles of themselves before this Nation in 1940. They cannot hide the shame behind the cloaks of the fathers. Such a cult of complacency was accursed by Jefferson and is still accursed, "inconsistent with the spirit of the Constitution!" It is the very States that have most outraged good taste and honest citizenship that would now shout "State rights" and continue to perpetrate the deepest wrong against the democratic state itself. The Federal Government exists, among other reasons, for this very reason, to prevent State rights from becoming national wrongs. This is a question settled long ago so far as Federal power to corrupt goes. We propose to settle it now so far as the power to correct goes. Those who howl about the corrupting influence of Federal money ought to be shouting for the Federal power to correct the corruption. The extension of Federal power is already an accomplished and an abiding fact. What we now need is as much Federal power to correct as history has furnished to corrupt.

What needs to be done should be done by whatever agency can do it most effectively. That is the deepest principle of any constitutionalism that is dynamic enough to live in the world today. That is the division of labor indeed that has always prevailed between the States and the Nation—constitutional cultists to the contrary notwithstanding—and it is the principle that was intended to regulate the leeway left by our fathers under the not too definite separation of powers. The fathers separated the powers but left to the prowess of their sons the working of that separation so as to get government and not stagnation.

The leeway left by the fathers was intended by them to afford flexibility between the States and the Federal Government. When we extend the Federal power to where it can corrupt the machinery of election—and that is a historic fact now to be accepted—and then refuse to extend the power to correct the corruption, we are talking not constitutional law but constitutional anarchy. All this was most clear to that cautious constitutional father, James Madison:

> If the people should in the future become more partial to the Federal than to the State governments, the change can only result from such manifest and irresistible proofs of better administration, as will overcome all their antecedent propensities, and in that case the people ought not surely to be precluded from giving most of their confidence, where they may discover it most due.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the story against the Jeremiahs of States' rights cultism. That is the story of every advance in national power from the settlement of slavery to the founding of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Starting with jealous States who broke up the Confederation and almost ruined prospect for any America at all, we have moved cautiously but surely for the establishment of a national power adequate to deal with whatever ought to be done but is not being done; and we have moved along the groove marked by Madison's powerful words—"manifest and irresistible proofs of better administration." Those who think that politics ought to be jungle behavior may be entitled to some respect for their frankness. But those who say that politics ought to be purified but insist that nobody shall do the purging save the poor sports themselves or those under their thumbs—such apologists for moral mediocrity and administrative ineffectiveness may be left to the pomposity of their own pusillanimous preachments.

Do you remember the resolution of the city fathers of Podunkville: (1) that they would build a new courthouse, (2) that they would build it of material from the old, but (3) that they would not tear down the old until the new was ready to use? The minority report figures out something very much like that, to the effect that the demand for Federal correction of Federal corruption shows that the correction is about to take place without our doing anything about it federally at all. Away with such mystic rationalization of civic complacency.

THE ACT LARGELY SELF-ENFORCING

The Hatch Act is dead right. That is its great advantage. But it has another advantage: It will require little Federal power for moderately successful enforcement. It is one of those fortunate things which, born of good sportsmanship, will enlist sportsmanship to make it effective. In the enforcement of any law one good sport is worth a hundred policemen. With the partisan use of public money branded "pernicious," the party out of power will so publicize prospective perniciousness as to minimize its actual perpetration. I have seen the principle already working in this way in our Illinois primary of this very year. It is a case of virtue paying its own way when such a law becomes largely self-enforcing.

THE ACT IS A SCHOOLMASTER TO BRING US TO CIVIL SERVICE

There is, moreover, poetic justice as well as good sense, in leaving to the United States Civil Service Commission, as this bill does, the question as to who has been guilty of the practices defined as pernicious—of course, the courts have the last say here, as elsewhere—it is poetic justice because the law itself points to a day, I hope not distant, when the higher sportsmanship will require us to forego the advantage of patronage altogether in partisan struggles for political place. That means the coming of real civil service; that means efficiency at last and such economy as is compatible with new and heavy governmental responsibilities. Meantime, the justice is not merely poetic in its promise but substantial in its effect. The Civil Service Commission has long experience in determining just this thing: for it is our standard Federal agency to save the most skilled Federal workers from political domination and to prevent them in turn from officially influencing political outcomes.

The Hatch bill only requires federally paid employees in the States still out from under civil service to observe the rules in force when they presently come under the merit system in the several States. Let us regard it, then, on the remedial side, as primarily the schoolmaster to bring all public employment, Federal and State, to the merit basis. The Hatch bill can largely stop corruption; civil service alone can furnish correction. The two should advance together, the House now passing this Senate bill and the Senate now passing the Ramspeck civil-service bill sent over from this House.

When we add thus to the lower sportsmanship of losing with good grace this higher sportsmanship of winning only with good grace, we shall have advanced the prospects of American democracy in days dark for democracy everywhere else. Let us back up our deepest patriotism, not our shallowest partisanship, in the effort offered by this rule to win through to the higher level of politics: the sportsmanship of losing graciously and of winning justly.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3046, with Mr. MCCORMACK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, there are 2 hours to be controlled by the chairman of the committee and 2 hours by the ranking minority member. The chairman of the committee is opposed to the bill, and I assume that somebody who is in favor of the bill will take the responsibility of making an explanation of it.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. The usual custom under the rule is for 2 hours on a side, and that means the Republican side and the Democratic side, and the gentleman in charge of the 2 hours is presumed to take care of those people on his side who want to speak for or against the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We have not anybody over here who wants to speak for this thing.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. If nobody wants to speak I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. DEMPSEY. To say to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary that I for one propose to speak for the bill on this side, and I think there are many others. I would like to hear some of those who are opposed to the bill if there are any such people.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, full well do I know that the voice of anyone speaking reason on this issue is like the voice of one crying in the wilderness. He will not be heard. This is now a moot question. Therefore, I hate to take up the time of the House in debating a question that is already settled. It is like the old story of the caucus of the animals. They got together to decide the future of the animal world. How to vote was the first question. Very few of them could understand the others, so they ruled out the viva voce method. After much argument it was agreed that voting should be done by lifting their tails. Of course, this disfranchised the goats because their tails were already lifted. [Laughter.]

So it is in this matter. [Laughter and applause.] So many people have already voted that there is not any use in talking to the Republican side. Naturally they wish to do what they can to embarrass the Democrats, and they think this is the way to do it. The distinguished professor from Chicago has just demonstrated the fact that he is one of the greatest speakers in America, one of the greatest psychologists in all the world, a lecturer worthy of the utmost attention upon the subject of clarity in the use of the English language. [Laughter and applause.] When he tells us that the minority views of the Judiciary Committee members who espouse it are mere words, I grant that he is right, for words are the vehicles of civilized men in waging their warfare.

But I say to the distinguished gentleman in all kindliness—and we all love him and esteem him highly in his realm—that his confession, with which he began the speech to which I have listened twice, once over the radio and again here today [laughter], that he did not know anything about legal phases of this subject does him credit. I have entirely too much confidence in his integrity and truthfulness to contradict. [Laughter.]

How he can so misjudge the Hatch bill was a mystery to me when I heard him over the radio. To talk about good sportsmanship in connection with this bill is the height and length and breadth of absurdity.

The first reason that I am against this infamous thing is that it is just exactly the reverse of what his word picture painted. I am against this infamous Hatch bill because, as I said to a Pulitzer prize winner out in the lobby one day when he jumped on me in the presence of several other friends of the press and asked me, "Is this Hatch bill that has been in your committee so long an egg or a doorknob? In other words, is it going to hatch?" I replied, "Well, it surely cannot be a doorknob, for doorknobs don't stink." [Laughter.]

Understand me clearly, I do not say that the intent of the distinguished author, nor of any proponent of this bill is to accomplish this purpose. I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, and Solomon's dog has never nipped my leg, much less bitten me hard. I claim to be nothing but what I am, a country boy from Alabama who has great difficulty in finding his way around in this big city. [Laughter.] But I am going to tell you the low-down truth about this thing. This is what this bill means and what it will do: It will turn over to the ring politicians in America, not only control of elections, not only control of who shall vote, but also of how they shall vote.

Now, let us look at this thing for just a minute. You understand, I am not talking about words now. I am not saying a word about the Constitution. I am not saying a word that is in our minority report, although that is as true as gospel. What the gentleman from Illinois, Brother SMITH, said is true as gospel if there were any predicate or foundation for what he said in the bill being debated; but there is not. All of us believe in good sportsmanship and a man would be a cowardly crook who did not. I, for one, appreciate deeply the transcendent intellectuality of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH], but I do not appreciate his insinuation and innuendo that those of us who oppose this bill are cowardly crooks.

This bill will turn over to the machine politicians in this Nation, particularly in the cities, the right to dominate all elections and to say how every mother's son of those whom they can bluff by threat of arrest and conviction of pernicious political activity shall act and vote.

Now, let us get down to brass tacks.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am glad to yield, briefly.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. A gentleman from a large midwestern city recently told me that, if the Hatch bill passed, that city could absolutely control and dominate the politics of that State, and that the rural sections of that State would have nothing to say about it.

Mr. HOBBS. I thank the gentleman for that contribution.

Now, let us get down to brass tacks. I want you to get this. If you forget everything else that I say, please remember this. Who is guilty of pernicious political activity in our family quarrels—our primaries? Those who vote for me or those who vote against me? Now, who is going to be prosecuted as being guilty of pernicious political practice? I will tell you this, there is nobody who ever got out and tore his shirt for me who was in my opinion guilty of a political pernicious practice.

No, sir. It is that blankety-blankety-blank who opposed me who is going to jail if I have the say-so. The ones who are going to jail are our opponents in the primary. We will not bother about the Republicans, for they do not amount to as much as a wart on a dog's tail. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I yield. I am always delighted to yield to my distinguished colleague from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; and I asked the gentleman to yield in order that the thing he attempted to do will be doubly done and that the entire House as well as the country will have their attention called to the statement which he has just made as to the way they do things in a State where they have one party. I just want to join with the man in emphasizing to the country what we in the States where there are two parties have to contend with here in Congress.

Mr. HOBBS. I appreciate the gentleman's calling attention to that. I believe sincerely that since the last Republican administration in Alabama which disgraced the State and your proud party—and I say that advisedly and would be glad to debate that issue with the gentleman or any other man anywhere—from that day to this I am saying to you that the purest politics in all the United States of America are in Alabama, and that the only corruption and crookedness we have ever known has come from the Republican Party. And as long as we Democrats handle the affairs of that great State politically they will be clean.

I have no desire to cast any aspersion upon the many distinguished members of the Republican Party. Your national committeeman, Lonnie Noojin, is one of the finest men living, and I have the highest respect for him. There are other Alabama Republicans just as fine. But what I mean to say is that in Alabama we do not have to worry about November. We settle our little family rows in May, and then we are through. What I am saying is that the ones who are apt to be arrested in Alabama, and in Illinois, and in every other State, for alleged violations of this law are those who do not vote according to the wishes of the bosses. Those who dare thwart the will of the bosses will be the ones you will visit in jails under this Hatch bill.

I repeat, therefore, that this bill turns over to the corrupt rings and political bosses the politics of America.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Certainly, sir, I am delighted to yield.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Merely for information will the gentleman be so kind as to tell me what proportion of his fellow citizens vote?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Just a minute, I want to answer the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I ask that as a matter of information.

Mr. HOBBS. Whether the gentleman knows or not I am delighted to tell him that I join him in his ignorance, because I do not know. If the gentleman knows he has the advantage of me. But I will say that my firm conviction and belief is that in the only elections which we have in which there is any real contest, in our Democratic primaries, at least as large a percentage of voters vote as do in the gentleman's State of Illinois.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am delighted to yield now.

Mr. RANKIN. The last two United States Senators that were bought by the utilities and sent down here were one from Illinois, bought by the Insull crowd and sent down here, and another from Michigan by the name of Newberry; and the Republican Senate threw them both out because they were sent here corruptly.

Mr. HOBBS. With the highest respect for every Member of the House and the most cordial regard, I must decline to yield further, and finish my statement.

The thought I want to get over to you is that those who are going to jail are those who vote wrong in the opinion of the bosses. You leave absolutely in the hands of those who are now in authority the right to prosecute whomsoever they see fit. And you know, as ordinary, common-sense human beings—and you do not leave your brains outside when you come into this Hall—you know that I am speaking the truth. The ones who are going to get it in the neck as a result of this law, like the turkey at Thanksgiving, are those who vote wrong in the opinion of the bosses. That is exactly what this will do, whether so intended or not.

Not only is that true, but this bill places in the hands of every unscrupulous official the weapon he may use to destroy his opponent in any campaign. All he will have to do is to have an affidavit for the arrest of the candidate opposing him made just before the election, on the charge of violating the Hatch Act, then circulate the report that his opponent is in jail charged with pernicious political practice. The official is in power. He not only can have such an arrest made, but he can probably keep his opponent in jail until the election is over. Nor would it be possible to prove malicious prosecution or false imprisonment against the incumbent, who has now been reelected, because no one knows what is pernicious political practice under the Hatch Act nor who comes under it.

Every practice condemned clearly by this bill is already condemned by other law. Vagueness is the only real contribution to the body of our law by this bill. Our relief appropriation bills carry the same provisions as the Hatch bill does for the protection of W. P. A. workers and persons on relief.

The Corrupt Practices Acts and the regular criminal codes cover every offense involved in this bill, save one. But this is new. When you have a W. P. A. project painting the walls and ceiling of the courthouse in Red Level, Mo., or Frog Level, Ala., the janitor is paid by the county. So is every other county employee. You understand, they need never have heard of Washington. They need not know that the Federal Government exists. They are paid by the county exclusively. If any person so employed in any administrative position spreads papers on the floor to keep the paint from the walls and ceiling from spattering on the floor, he comes under the Hatch bill. You will not gain that news from the newspapers. I have read them all. They all appear to believe that this bill applies only to persons paid in whole or in part with Federal money. That is not true.

If such a county employee, in the scope of his employment, in connection with any activity financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States or any department or agency thereof, uses his official authority for the purpose of affecting the election or the nomination of any candidate for Federal office, he has violated this bill.

Mr. HANCOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am delighted to yield to the distinguished minority member of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HANCOCK. The gentleman has in mind the original wording of the bill, but not the bill that is before us today. The prohibition applies only to employees of any State or Federal agency whose principal occupation is in connection with a Federal project. That would not include the poor carpenter, janitor, or whoever it was the gentleman was talking about.

Mr. HOBBS. I remember that after I made similar remarks in our committee the wording of section 12 (a) was changed, but the interpretation of the words "principal employment" as used in section 12 (a) will be made by the political boss. But the case I cited would come under section 2, not under section 12 (a). You amended one section but not the other.

Here is the new thought in this bill. Not only does this bill take away a man's job for pernicious political activity but it blacklists him so that he cannot be employed anywhere for 18 months thereafter. He could not even be a watchman on a tower in a forest, a hundred miles from the nearest polling place; although he might be in another State, and would be, of course, wholly removed from circulation.

That may be freedom of speech, that may be freedom of action, that may be guaranteeing the American citizen all the rights that the Bill of Rights was written to give him, but I do not think so; and neither do you, in the cloakroom. But they believe in hunting him, so they take their pack of dogs and put them on this poor devil going from State to State, wherever he finds a job, and root him out of it. The great Government of the United States is asked to lend its support to that merry chase.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH] told you only that it was not a bear. He did not tell you what it was, and I have too much respect for the rules of this House and for the ladies present to tell you what it is.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word about one or two other matters. I understand that a poll-tax amendment is going to be offered to this bill by our friend the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER]. I hope you will not vote for that amendment if it is offered. It is not in accordance with the wishes of the authors of this bill, it is not in the bill as now written, so neither side, those who propose and those who oppose this bill, are for it. I am asking you now in advance, before it is offered, do not do that. I do not believe you will. I know you are going to do whatever the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] asks and I ask the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] not to support that amendment. I wish I had time to go into that matter fully. I have not. I am just making this appeal to you, for God's sake do not lose your poise, do not let the poison and animus behind such an amendment run away with you; do not kill democracy in America and the last vestige of States' rights by seeking to punish those with whom you disagree as to how they run their internal affairs.

There is one other thing I want to say, and that is about the amendment which would guarantee to those who are charged with crime under this bill a jury trial. I asked my good friend the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] if he was going to strike that amendment out and he said he could not support it; he was going to try. Trying by him under these circumstances is equivalent to doing, so it will be stricken out if he says so, unless many of you vote differently upon that issue from the way you will on the bill itself. Our forefathers wrung from the unwilling hand of King John at Runnymede a guaranty of trial by jury.

At that time the court of star chamber was the order of the day, and an Englishman, no matter how long his forebears had lived in merry England, could be snatched up in any part of the realm, dragged to London, where the court of star chamber sat, and there before three judges, without any right to get witnesses, without any right of jury trial, or any other right, would be adjudged guilty and sentenced, sometimes to be hanged, drawn, and quartered if the judges saw fit. Our forefathers rebelled against that kind of procedure, and they got in the Magna Carta a guaranty which Englishmen have prized from that day to this. I will include in the RECORD, by unanimous consent, a few excerpts from the praise of jury trial by some of the leading legal minds of the world, from men who have lived and died with it, and whose experience has taught them to revere it.

John F. Dillon (1831–1914), New York:

TRIAL BY JURY

It (the trial by jury) is a cherished right. It is protected from legislative overthrow by the National and by all our State Constitutions. It is a historical and essential part of the free institutions of England. It equally belongs to our own free institutions. It springs out of them and tends to support and perpetuate them. It is my firm conviction that the love of liberty, of liberty regulated by law, and a general and habitual reverence for and obedience to the Constitution and the laws, are the only ties which can surely hold together our vast Republic. These are the sources of our greatness and the foundation of our hopes. Let us never forget the truth so nobly expressed by Burke: "Justice is itself the great standing policy of civil society; and any eminent departure from it, under any circumstances, lies under the suspicion of being no policy at all."

Hon. Joseph Neilson, chief justice of the city court of Brooklyn, from address at Saratoga, August 1, 1875:

THE GROWTH OF PRINCIPLES

At the seashore you pick up a pebble, fashioned after a law of nature, in the exact form that best resists pressure, and worn as smooth as glass. It is so perfect that you take it as a keepsake. But could you know its history from the time when a rough fragment of rock fell from the overhanging cliff into the sea, to be taken possession of by the undercurrents, and dragged from one ocean to another, perhaps around the world, for a hundred years, until in reduced and perfect form it was cast upon the beach as you find it, you would have a fit illustration of what many principles, now in familiar use, have endured, thus tried, tortured, and fashioned during the ages. We stand by the river and admire the great body of water flowing so sweetly on; could you trace it back to its source, you might find a mere rivulet, but meandering on, joined by other streams and by secret springs, and fed by the rains and dews of heaven, it gathers volume and force, makes its way through the gorges of the mountains, plows, widens, and deepens its channel through the provinces, and attains its present majesty. Thus it is that our truest systems of science had small beginnings, gradual and countless contributions, and finally took their place in use, as each of you, from helpless childhood and feeble boyhood, have grown to your present strength and maturity. No such system could be born in a day. * * *

It took a long time to learn the true nature and office of governments; to discover and secure the principles commonly indicated by such terms as "Magna Carta," the "Bill of Rights," "Habeas corpus," and the "right of trial by jury"; to found the family ties of each member of it, so that the music of the domestic hearth might flow on without discord; the household gods so securely planted that "Though the wind and the rain might enter, the king could not"; to educate noise into music and music into melody; to infuse into the social code and into the law a spirit of Christian charity, something of the benign temper of the New Testament, so that no man could be persecuted for conscience sake, so that there should be an end of human sacrifice for mere faith or opinion; the smouldering fires at the foot of the stake put out, now, thank God, as effectually as if all the waters that this night flood the rivers had been poured in upon them. It took a long time to learn that war was a foolish and cruel method of settling international differences as compared with arbitration; to learn that piracy was less profitable than a liberal commerce; that unpaid labor was not as good as well requited toil; that a splenetic old woman, falling into trances and shrieking prophecies, was a fit subject for the asylum rather to be burned as a witch. It took a long time after the art of printing had been perfected before we learned the priceless value, the sovereign dignity and usefulness of a free press.

But these lessons have been taught and learned, taught for the most part by the prophets of our race, men living in advance of their age and understood only by the succeeding generations. But you have the inheritance.

I beg of you not to crucify justice and its administration in America by denying to the humblest citizen, even if he does vote wrong according to the opinion of the boss, the right of trial by jury. Our forefathers thought that right worth dying for. Shall we hold it not worth voting for? They put it in the Constitution of the United States. Of course, that does not matter. As I understood the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH], those are just words. I am saying that they are more than words; they are living fire; and you men and you ladies cannot sit here comfortably in your seats and deny to Americans charged with a violation of the law under this act the right of trial by jury, without being burned in your hearts by that fire.

Your conscience will not let you say, "I did the right thing. I am going to leave you to the mercy of the boss and the machine." He will not know it, but you will. You ought not to vote that way. Every mother's son in America is entitled to that much consideration, at least, to have his cause heard and decided by a jury of "12 good men and true." [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE].

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to discuss the merits or demerits of this bill except to say that I am in favor of it. I should like to point out rather briefly just what the bill does, giving you my opinion, at least, as to what the bill means. I do this with no thought of influencing the vote of any Member here, but I believe if each Member will examine each section of this bill he will find they are not open to the objections that you have often heard made.

In the original Hatch Act, you remember, we prohibited in one of the sections any administrative officer of the Federal Government from using his official authority to interfere with the election of a Federal official. In section 2 of this bill we simply extend that prohibition to any administrative officer of a State or subdivision or agency of a State who is connected with an activity that receives money from the Federal Government.

What is meant by misuse of official authority? It simply means, to give a few easy examples, that if the Governor of your State should refuse to extradite a person or should extradite him, his decision depending upon how that man voted, or if a district attorney should dismiss an indictment in return for a promise to vote as he directed, or if some individual who had authority to let a contract should let the contract or refuse to let it because of the manner in which somebody voted, that would be a misuse of official authority. That is all that is provided in that section. Are you opposed to that? Do you think that restriction placed upon the State officials who are getting money in part from the Federal Government is unfair or unjust or in any way interferes with any of your essential liberties?

You recall that the original Hatch Act provided that employees covered by that act might express their views privately or publicly on all political subjects. This bill amends and broadens that privilege so that they may express their views publicly and privately on political subjects and in regard to candidates; in other words, their right to speak is extended by this bill. You do not oppose that, do you?

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BENDER. Does that give an employee the privilege of speaking from a public platform?

Mr. GWYNNE. Yes, it does.

Mr. BENDER. At a political gathering?

Mr. GWYNNE. No, not at a political gathering. As I understand, it means, to give an example, that if the district attorney in my district should tonight hire time on the radio and make a speech for or against my candidacy for Congress, he would not, in my judgment, violate this law.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes, he would.

Mr. GWYNNE. Let me say that I have the authority of a ruling by the former Attorney General, Mr. Murphy himself, which I shall be pleased to call to your attention.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. I am just wondering whether if an employee of a Federal agency under the provisions of this section, W. P. A. or P. W. A., or some other agency of the Government, standing on a street corner some evening in discussion with 5 or 6 or 25 other people, engaging in an argument in favor of the candidacy of someone seeking office, he would not violate the provisions of this section.

Mr. GWYNNE. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that those parts of the original Hatch law which had to do with people on W. P. A. are not in any way amended by this law. It is my understanding, however, that the action the gentleman describes would not violate the law.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. In connection with the statement the gentleman made with reference to the district attorney making a political speech in behalf of the gentleman's candidacy for reelection to Congress, I call the gentleman's attention to the language on page 14 in lines 4 and 5, which is as follows:

No such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

Mr. GWYNNE. That is correct.

Mr. COOLEY. In the case the gentleman has used as an illustration, would not the district attorney be taking an active part in a political campaign if he spoke on the radio in the gentleman's behalf?

Mr. GWYNNE. I believe not in the case I cited if he did it not as a part of a political campaign.

Let me read a statement made by the Attorney General, which I believe expresses the thought I have been trying to express:

Civil-service employees are required by the civil-service rules to confine their opinions on political subjects to private expression. From the corresponding provision of the Hatch law, on the other hand, the word "privately" was omitted. Accordingly, as stated by the President—

You recall that the President commented on that very thing when he signed the bill—in his message to Congress approving the Hatch bill, non-civil-service employees would not violate the act "if they should merely express their opinion or preference publicly—orally, by radio, or in writing—without doing so as part of an organized political campaign."

Now, that is the test. A man may speak anywhere, any time, and as he pleases, under this law, but he cannot do it as part of an organized political campaign.

Mr. COOLEY. Suppose the State director of W. P. A. were to take the radio in behalf of the candidacy of a certain person; for instance, the gentleman from Iowa, and make a speech in behalf of your candidacy, urging all the people of the district to vote for your reelection to Congress, does the gentleman mean to suggest that that would not be a violation of this act?

Mr. GWYNNE. That is what I mean to suggest.

Mr. COOLEY. Why would it not apply to the State director of W. P. A.?

Mr. GWYNNE. Because this law gives any person the right to express his own views. If he did that as a part of an organized campaign, if he spoke, for example, on radio time that was paid for by a political party——

Mr. COOLEY. Well, what is the purpose of the act? If it is not the purpose to prevent an officer such as a State director of W. P. A. from intimidating, coercing, and influencing unduly the voting privileges of the people employed by him——

Mr. GWYNNE. The whole purpose of this act is not to interfere with anybody's right of free speech. The purpose of the act is to prevent these people from participating actively in politics as part of a political machine.

Mr. COOLEY. How could a man be more active than going out on the stump in behalf of his candidate for Congress?

Mr. GWYNNE. That is the opinion of the Attorney General and I certainly think he is right. The test would simply be this, if the gentleman will give me his attention. It might sometimes be a close question whether or not the expression of opinion was or was not a part of an organized political campaign. That is the thing this bill is hitting against.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SPENCE. I am wondering why it was put in the bill that all such persons shall retain the right to vote. Has Congress the right to deprive a man of the vote under the sections of the Constitution which state that the right of franchise shall not be abridged by reason of race, color, or previous condition of servitude or because of sex?

Mr. GWYNNE. Let me say to the gentleman there is nothing in the Constitution giving everyone the right to vote. There is no question in my judgment about the right of Congress to limit the right to vote. We do it in our registration laws, do we not?

Mr. PATRICK. Was not that just put in there to show him what was still left to him?

Mr. SPENCE. I doubt very seriously that the Congress of the United States can take away the right of a man to vote who otherwise is qualified, because of some activity of his, or can take away his right under the Constitution to express his opinions.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. SPENCE. When the Constitution states that freedom of speech shall not be abridged and that the right of people to assemble and petition for redress of grievances shall not be abridged.

Mr. GWYNNE. I must decline to yield further, because any question about the right to vote is academic, because, certainly, this bill does not take away the right to vote and you can read this bill all the way through and you will find there is nothing in it that interferes with the right of anybody to speak his own mind as long as he is speaking his own mind and is not speaking as a part of a Republican or a Democratic machine. Now, that is the test.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I cannot yield now, but if I get a little more time I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

Remember that the original Hatch Act provided that Federal employees could not take active part in politics. Now, section 3 of this bill extends that prohibition to certain employees of States. It does not extend the prohibition to all the employees of a State. First, it covers only those activities being carried on by a State which are financed in whole or in part by Federal money, and, in the second place, it does not cover every employee on that activity. It simply covers an employee whose principal employment has to do with that particular activity.

Now, these State employees of the executive department are prohibited from three things. First, they must not use their official authority to interfere in any election; second, they must not coerce or advise any other employee, under this act, to make contributions for a political purpose. The right, however, to make a voluntary contribution to a candidate or for a political purpose is not interfered with.

Finally, they must not take an active part in political management or in a political campaign. In substance, that is all there is to that section. Do you think there is anything particularly wrong about that? All it seeks to do is to say that those people who are employed on jobs, part of the finances of which is furnished by the Federal Government, shall devote their time to the job and shall not engage in any political activity in behalf, perhaps, of the person who appointed them.

Following that, the rest of the bill has to do with the machinery for enforcing that provision. It provides that the Federal agency that has reason to believe that this law is being violated will call that to the attention of the Civil Service Commission and there will be a hearing at which the State and its agency may appear. If the Commission decides that the law has been violated they notify the State agency. They cannot, of course, compel the State to dismiss the man, but if the States does dismiss him within 30 days, that is the end of it. If it does not dismiss him within 30 days the Federal Government imposes a penalty, and the only penalty is that the State will have deducted from the funds payable to the State a sum equal to twice the yearly salary of the offending employee.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Has the gentleman found anything in the bill anywhere which would put a man in jail without a jury trial?

Mr. GWYNNE. Absolutely not. The only penalty for this part of the bill is that he may lose his job.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. If there is a fine imposed, it can only be imposed, and if there is any imprisonment imposed, that can only be imposed after he has been duly convicted and that means a trial by jury, does it not?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. I yield 5 minutes more to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GWYNNE. That is correct, on the question of penalty. If an administrative officer uses his official authority wrongfully, there is a fine of $1,000 and a year in prison, but for the employee that is covered by this action I have described the only penalty, that he could lose his position. The only penalty on the State agency is that it may lose twice the yearly salary of the offending employee.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. Yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman explain to me, and I am quite puzzled over this situation, how this bill will affect the average W. P. A. worker?

Mr. GWYNNE. The gentleman must remember that there are other sections of the original Hatch Act that are not amended by this bill, which cover that general situation. There is no amendment here that affects the W. P. A. worker.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. But I have in mind a painter on a P. W. A. project or any project to which Government funds have been contributed or loaned, such as the building of a bridge or any public improvement. How is that worker on that public improvement affected by this bill? I have in mind a carpenter, a plumber, a painter.

Mr. GWYNNE. The W. P. A. worker is not affected at all.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Not the W. P. A. worker. Let us say the Government contributes or lends a certain amount of money for the erection of a bridge. How is the carpenter or the stone mason or the bricklayer or other employee on that project affected by this bill, not the W. P. A. worker.

Mr. GWYNNE. I see what the gentleman means. Here is a carpenter who is employed on this project, the money for which is advanced in part by the Federal Government.

If it is his principal employment, then he comes under the bill. He must observe three things. First he must not use his official authority to interfere with an election. That would not mean much, of course, in the case of a carpenter, because he would not have official authority that he could use. Second, he must not coerce or attempt to coerce any fellow employee to contribute to a campaign fund, and, third, he must not take an active part in political management or in a political campaign.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. In other words, he cannot canvass for any candidate?

Mr. GWYNNE. That is correct.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. Yes.

Mr. HENDRICKS. As I understood the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] in asking the gentleman from Iowa a question, it was whether it would be permissible for an administrator to make a speech over the radio in the interest of somebody's campaign, and I believe the gentleman said that it would be all right so long as he did not do it in connection with some organization.

Mr. GWYNNE. That is correct.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Suppose a relief client attempted to do the same thing, what about that?

Mr. GWYNNE. Nothing prevents anybody expressing his own views.

Mr. HENDRICKS. In other words, if a relief client wanted to make a speech and pay for it himself, it would be all right?

Mr. GWYNNE. There are other provisions of the law——

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is something that I have never been able to clear up.

Mr. GWYNNE. The gentleman must remember that the first sections of the original Hatch bill contained far more drastic provisions in respect to the W. P. A. worker. He could not even contribute to a campaign.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Oh, yes; I know that.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. HINSHAW. On the defense program that is coming up there will be very large sums of Government money expended for Government material. Does the employee of a firm who has a contract with the Government for the furnishing of defense materials come under this bill?

Mr. GWYNNE. He does not, except there is a section later in the bill which covers, in part, that situation. It is on page 24. I just refer the gentleman to it. It explains itself.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. In the opinion of the gentleman, would it be a violation of the provisions of this act if one of those persons covered should sign a nomination petition of a candidate for public office?

Mr. GWYNNE. I presume it would. I may say for the benefit of everyone that the Attorney General sometime ago made a ruling on the original Hatch Act and pointed out some things that in his judgment constituted taking part in politics and other things that did not. I think if I just read that it may answer the question as quickly as anything.

It has been ruled that the following acts are taking active part in political campaigns:

1. Holding office in a political party or a political club.
2. Attending a political convention as delegate or alternate.
3. Serving on committees of a political party or political club, but not belonging to the club.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. GWYNNE (continuing reading):

4. Distributing campaign or printed matter in support of any candidate.
5. Serving at party headquarters or as watchers at the polls or otherwise assisting a party or candidate in any primary or election campaign.
6. Being a candidate for elective office.
7. Soliciting funds for a political organization or campaign fund.

I am not so sure that signing a petition would be taking an active part in a campaign. I think circulating the petition would, however.

Mr. HEALEY. From those offenses enumerated it appears that it is not included in any of the offenses.

Mr. GWYNNE. I realize it is difficult to draw the line between what is taking part in a campaign and what is not. Many questions will come up under this law that will have to be determined as they arise.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The real danger there is this: If the distinguished gentleman from Iowa is disturbed about what comes under the law, how does he think the millions of voters back at home, who never saw the law, will feel? It would just be "duck soup" for those political bosses who will want to browbeat them into staying away from the polls.

Mr. GWYNNE. Let me say, in answer to that, we have had for many years a provision prohibiting civil-service employees from taking an active part in political campaigns. They have worked out what they can do and what they cannot do.

Mr. RANKIN. But they were instructed by the Civil Service Commission. Here you are dealing with thirty or forty million voters. Here is a large crew of men, we will say, working on a project. How easy it will be for some "flannel-mouthed" boss to go to them and point his finger at them and say, "Now, if I hear a word out of you, you get off of this job." What will be the result? There may be thousands or hundreds of thousands of people who will be intimidated to the point that they will not even go to the polls.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I have heard a number of references made to political organizations in big cities and the terms "boss" and "political leader" used many times. Our problem in America is largely that of getting people to vote and being active politically. Political leaders do not discourage voting. I do not believe there is a leader in politics, either Republican or Democrat, who is not anxious to have as many people vote in the primary or election as possible. The point I wish to make is this: It is extremely difficult sometimes to get a man to run for precinct committeeman in a community where there are no jobs involved. Once interested, it is very hard to get that person to retain his interest in politics. I am trying to make up my mind on this bill. I want to vote for things that are wholesome in politics, as every one of you do, whether you are Republicans or Democrats, I am sure.

Are you going to make it more or less attractive for the officeholder to vote? After you help obtain a job for a worker, what happens to that person after he is on the pay roll? In the city of Cleveland not so very long ago there was an issue voted on that had no politics in it; no partisanship. It was a matter of voting for a levy to carry on the city's services, and much to my amazement we discovered that over 30 percent of the people on the city pay roll whose jobs were involved did not take the trouble to go to vote. They would not go to vote because of fear of possible violation of some civil-service rule.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Ohio that in my State and in my district when I have opposition in the hottest campaign we can possibly wage we cannot get 50 percent of the registered qualified voters to go out and vote in the congressional primaries. I am afraid that this kind of legislation will discourage more people from going to the polls and that it will make it far more difficult to keep our Government close to the people.

Mr. BENDER. I wish Members on both sides of the aisle would discuss this bill from that point of view.

What does this bill propose? I just heard a Member on my side of the aisle, who is a member of this committee and whom I respect as an expert, admit there was a question in his mind as to what the bill provided and how far the bill would go.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BENDER. I would like to get your answers to these questions: Whom does this bill affect? How far does it go? Where does it stop? And what is intended by the language in the bill?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. So far as the gentleman understands the bill, can he say whether anyone will be affected by this bill other than those on pay rolls where the money is furnished by the Federal Government?

Mr. BENDER. As I understand, in addition to the persons who are on the regular State pay rolls who receive a part of their pay from the Federal Government, any person who is doing a special job for the Government, a contractor who employs others, he and those he employs are also subject to this measure.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The reason I raised the question was because the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] said a little while ago, as I understood him, something like 30,000,000 or 40,000,000 voters would be affected if this bill passed. Did the gentleman from Mississippi mean that? And I ask the gentleman from Ohio if he will yield to permit the gentleman from Mississippi to answer?

Mr. BENDER. I yield; certainly.

Mr. RANKIN. I do not know that I used those figures. What I meant to say was that hundreds of thousands would be intimidated because they would not know what the provisions of the bill were. Much damage can be done over the radio. Some of these radio commentators who broadcast every night—if one of them were to make a speech throwing doubt around the right of the people to vote, and the danger of violating some law, and make that speech the day before election, he might easily keep three or four million people from voting because of their fear of violating some law or some regulation.

Mr. BENDER. We are all here as a result of politics and because we take part in politics. If the organizations that control politics are unwholesome it is our fault. If they are good, it is to our credit. If they are no good, someone ought to come along and change the leadership of the organizations. But I resent the wholesale indictment of men just because they engage in politics and work in the field of politics. [Applause.] I resent very much these expressions that are voiced here and elsewhere criticizing people engaged in politics and referring to them in a manner that makes politics so undesirable for the very citizens to enter who should be in politics. It is an all-too-common experience in both our primaries and in our elections that we cannot get the vote out; we cannot get the people to interest themselves in politics. We are not going to help matters any by penalizing the persons who do the active work and attacking them in this way. If you have anything to say regarding that individual or any individual man or party that is doing wrong, then say it; but do not condemn the whole American system of politics by questioning or challenging the people who are active in the political affairs of this country.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. MAY. As I understand it, the bill we passed at the last session affected only Federal employees, but this bill proposes to apply to State employees the same rules the other bill applied to Federal employees; that is, that a man who is employed, part of whose salary is paid by the Federal Government, is not permitted to participate in political activity. It seems to me that any such infringement upon such civil liberties of a citizen is an unconstitutional infringement upon his rights.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. McGRANERY. It has been said in the explanation of this bill that violation of the act carries as a penalty only dismissal of the employee. I notice on page 13, section 10, however, a double-penalty clause in the bill.

Just as the gentleman from Iowa said, he would like to know how far this bill goes. Section 10 provides that the provisions of this act shall be in addition to and not in substitution for any other provision of law. In other words, dismissal is not the end. Conviction may mean something more than dismissal.

Mr. HARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. HARE. The last statement of the gentleman, to my mind, goes to the crux of this bill. I want to supplement the statement with this thought: If you destroy the incentive of the American people to take part in politics, then you destroy democracy as a whole. Is that in accordance with the ideas of the gentleman?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I am frankly puzzled about the whole business. I do not particularly fancy Members whom I know to be part of political organizations, getting up here and making rash statements about the rank and file of the party who are willing to do political work in the party, many of them without any reward. I want to make politics as attractive as I possibly can to every citizen everywhere. [Applause.] In making it attractive to all persons we will have a better party, we will have a better Government.

The thing that appeals to me, Professor Smith, is this: In your original statement—and I followed you very closely—you talked about the two-party system. Among your associates in universities, schools, and colleges, how many people did you find actually interested in one party or the other? You know that in this Government when we want to get something done it is done through one or the other party, in order to achieve anything in the way of political reform.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. With reference to the discouragement of people in politics, I would estimate that not more than one-half of 1 percent of the voters of America are involved in this bill at all, certainly not 1 percent. Now, to have less than 1 percent of the people engaged in politics setting a standard of indifference to politics in a great many other people, and that is the complaint I hear about the party system, is the sort of thing this Hatch bill prevents and that will do more to enlist the interest of the group the gentleman speaks of, the 99 percent of the people, in politics, because they will believe it is an operation in which they have a chance to be heard and to be effective. That is really the secret of my interest in it. I believe we should prevent a very small minority of people in politics from so corrupting the process that other citizens will be indifferent.

Mr. BENDER. I appreciate the contribution of the gentleman, but the gentleman has not answered my question, and I wish he would answer it. Today your political organizations are voluntary organizations, and if they are corrupt, then it is the fault of the people who belong to that party. If they are dissatisfied with that 1 percent, then surely the 99 percent can change the condition that is complained of.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. That is exactly what we are doing in this act. We are proceeding to that precise thing, in my opinion.

Mr. BENDER. As I see it, you are by legislation attempting to do something that your people are not willing to do by taking hold of the organization that is theirs for the asking, if they will only participate and if they will only contribute of their time and services in taking hold of that organization. If you say that the organization is run by a lot of people who want jobs, then why are there not more people in this country interested in politics or in the organization who are not interested in jobs?

Mr. BARNES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BARNES. Referring to the college professors and the college groups who are supposed to be leaders in thought in this country and who should take an active part in politics, let us assume those professors have as a part of their classroom some N. Y. A. students who are being taught, for instance, in the University of Chicago. Do they come under this act?

Mr. BENDER. I cannot answer. I am not an expert on the subject.

Mr. BARNES. I think those professors are under the act and cannot participate in politics, therefore they would not be able to express their opinion.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7½ minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SASSCER].

Mr. SASSCER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened, as all of us have, with interest and attention to the debate. I have come to the conclusion from what we have read in the public press and from the discussion that has transpired from time to time that if the words "pernicious political activities" were removed from the atmosphere of this bill there would not be 25 votes for it in the House. Under a hysteria of removing pernicious political activity, we strike through and practically change our system of government. I say that because precedent is the best judge by which we can determine future application.

A short time ago under this same guise of removing pernicious political activities and under the thought that we will prevent the heads of departments from bearing down on employees and removing certain things to which everybody is opposed, we enacted the old Hatch Act, which I am proud to say I did not vote for. Under its application what did we do in connection with the removal of pernicious activities? First of all, you said that this great group of Federal employees, people in the middle brackets of life, good American citizens, cannot go out and express an opinion. They say, "You can express your opinion," but the rulings have been, and these people have been led to believe by the departments that they cannot exercise their American right of going out and participating to some degree in the selection of those who may represent them. Still we say that is removing pernicious political influence. And again, not the heads of departments, not those who might have some influence through promotion over persons under them, but the great mass of Federal employees, cannot belong back home in a little town to a club, semicivic or semipolitical, if they are going to hold any office of such as fourth vice president, even though that particular organization might be directed toward the betterment of that particular section.

I have written to the different departments for various interpretations. I have written to the Department of Justice from time to time as numerous people have contacted me in the Federal Government asking whether or not they may do this or that in their particular community.

We found out that under the old bill they cannot freely exercise their rights as American citizens by being officers in some organization—civic, labor, veterans, or what not—because if some public official may have in his course of action been unfriendly or stood for things for which they did not stand, or perchance favored them, and if the particular organization goes on record politically by passing a resolution commending that officer for what he has done or for what he has not done, then those Government employees are engaged in pernicious political activities and subject, possibly, to losing their jobs or being prosecuted.

May I say also that there was not a word in the old act about the little municipalities; still the interpretation of the last Hatch Act was such that if out here over the line in Maryland, in a small community made up probably 75 or 80 percent of Government employees, many of them retaining their votes in your States, interested in the welfare and growth of their community, and not tied up in business and worn out at night after coming home, without compensation serving as councilmen in their particular town, working for the benefit of that community, if such Federal employees were urged by their fellow citizens to run for municipal office, an office for which no salary was paid, they could not do so. They are indulging in pernicious activity and either have to resign their jobs in Washington or get off the town council and no longer take part in local elections. That is what precedent has shown has happened in the matter of interpretation and application of the law. It has thrown confusion in the minds of Government employees to the extent that in walking down to the primaries many of them are cautious and afraid to stop on the street and talk to a friend who may be standing there for fear that somebody may call up their department and say that they were arguing politics on the corner. Can we honestly say to ourselves that such legislation is accomplishing the object it attempts or professes to accomplish?

Under this bill we go a step further and go right down into every community in the State and reach men working on State roads, men belonging possibly to Democratic or Republican clubs, men who for years have been interested in the development of their sections. We here in the Federal Congress, although we do generously say that you can still vote—it was kind to keep that in the bill—say, "You can vote, but you cannot engage in any activities, although you can express your opinion." Express it to whom? To yourself in a closet? No; you get out and attempt to express it to your neighbors and you lose your job by this act of the Federal Congress. Shall we reach right down into the counties and into the States and take away our basic State rights, and take away from citizens on State pay rolls in which there is some Government contribution their right to participate even in their State affairs? [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, all of us recall the original Hatch bill which was before the House last year and was passed. There comes before us at this time the amendments which are proposed. At the outset of what I have to say regarding these proposed amendments I want to compliment and congratulate the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] on his foresight in presenting this splendid piece of legislation to this body.

The purpose of these amendments is to promote clean politics in our country. The original Hatch Act applies to those who are on the Federal pay roll in the city of Washington and elsewhere whose entire remuneration is paid by the Government of the United States; the original act applies to those on W. P. A., and others, whose sole occupation is with respect to and in the agencies of the Federal Government. These amendments seek to go out into our respective States and prevent those whose principal occupation is on projects which are financed in part or in whole by the Federal Government from taking an active part and in participating in political campaigns.

May I say that I believe that prohibition is right. All of us have witnessed those who have been on the Federal pay roll participating very actively in political campaigns. I recall campaigns in my own State, as do many others on this floor from the State of Indiana, and from many other States, where men and women on the Federal pay rolls in Washington have come back into our States and have taken a very active part in political campaigns. I sometimes think of the influence such persons have upon the average voter in our community. The average voter has a very great respect for those who are in whole or in part employed by the Federal Government; they respect those who are in the Federal employment. It appears that they have a dominant influence over the people. Not only do we have those things to contend with, but we have the added fact that the people of the United States of America are paying the salaries of those who go out and participate in political campaigns. The people pay the salaries of those employees while they engage in political activities in our country. This is entirely wrong.

I want to mention the particular point brought up by my very distinguished colleague the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SASSCER] during this debate with respect to matters within his own State and in the area just outside the District of Columbia. That point is taken care of entirely in section 16 of the bill, which is now before the House. I read from section 16:

> Whenever the United States Civil Service Commission determines that, by reason of special or unusual circumstances which exist in any municipality or other political subdivision, in the immediate vicinity of the National Capital in the States of Maryland and Virginia or in municipalities the majority of whose voters are employed by the Government of the United States, it is in the domestic interest of persons to whom the provisions of this act are applicable, and who reside in such municipality or political subdivision, to permit such persons to take an active part in political management or in political campaigns involving such municipality or political subdivision—

> the Commission is authorized to promulgate regulations permitting such persons to take an active part in such political management and political campaigns to the extent the Commission deems to be in the domestic interest of such persons.

Therefore the fear which the gentleman from the State of Maryland has expressed is provided for under section 16 of this bill which is now before the House and upon which action will soon be taken. There are some other reasons which I desire to present to this body as an added argument for the passage of these amendments.

Mr. SASSCER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I have only a few minutes remaining.

We sometimes think of the extension of Federal power; all of us reflect upon that great and vast extension of Federal power in this country; when that extension of power reaches the point where fraud and corruption are involved, or where there is an imminent liability of fraud and corruption, is it not the duty of our Federal Government to curb and suppress that very great power, and to eliminate the pending danger? I think this appeals with force and effect to everyone within the hearing of my voice. Does it not then become the duty of our Federal Government to curb and limit that power to which it has submitted itself?

We have that situation existing before us at this very time and I believe, as one of the Members of this House, it is necessary to take such action as may be necessary to curb those ills and those abuses to which that extension of power has taken us in the holding of our elections in this Nation. The people demand that our elections be clean and fair—entirely free from domination.

Just a little while ago mention was made by my distinguished colleague the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] in his splendid address before the House in which he referred to those who would be jailed under these amendments in case of a violation thereof; he emphatically stated that those who failed to vote as the "so-called boss" dictated would be the voters who would suffer under the act. When these amendments are passed and become the law, the people who are employed upon Federal projects as their principal employment will enjoy freedom from political domination; they may then vote as they may choose. I am confident there will never be a majority of our people on the Federal pay roll in this country. Again, may I say, the boss, who is under Federal employment, is governed fully by the provisions of the original Hatch Act. Let that "boss" dare dominate and control those individuals who are under his supervision; he then comes within the provisions of this act, and the "boss," let me say to my very dear and good friend from Alabama, would be the fellow who would suffer the penalty and he would be the one we would meet when we visit the county jail. Yet let us remember when these amendments have been enacted into law, the people to whom it applies will respect it, and the violations will be very few indeed.

This amendment to the original Hatch Act gives the little fellow—the fellow in the highway department back home—an opportunity to vote as he desires to vote. It provides for clean politics. It takes him away from a theory of politics by which he could be called upon and forced to manage political campaigns; it removes the temptation from the so-called political "boss" to compel those Federal employees, who come within the provisions of this bill, to do things which he would not, perhaps, personally desire to do in a political campaign. This bill when passed will give those voters the right to vote as they please, as free Americans, without domination, and it extends to the voters the right and privilege of going to the ballot box and casting their vote as they may freely choose. This is our right as Americans. These amendments protect that right. The people of our Nation demand this protection. Let us not falter—let us give our people this inalienable right. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE].

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, the Hatch bill which passed the Congress last year made it unlawful for any person receiving a salary direct from the Federal Government to become unduly active in the interest of any candidate or in any political campaign. Since then provision has been added making it unlawful for such persons to be coerced in making contributions to political campaigns. The bill now before us undertakes, among other things, to make the same provisions of law applicable to persons who may be employed by a State, county, or municipality, if such person is paid directly or indirectly from grants or loans to such State, county, or municipality by any agency of the Federal Government.

It is claimed by the proponents of the bill to be a measure to prevent corruption in politics. If this were the sole purpose there would be no objection whatsoever by anyone to its passage. I am one who believes that this feature is only incidental and that the real purpose on the part of many of the proponents is more subtle and calculated to be more dangerous to the life of our Republic than the alleged irregularities or corruptions found in different sections of the country. There can be no objection to that provision of the bill which makes it unlawful for the class of people referred to to make contributions to a candidate or political party, but the same provision should apply to all classes of people. I think it should be unlawful to make contributions to any candidate for office and it should be equally unlawful for any candidate to receive such contributions when they are made for the purpose or intention that a subsequent favor would be asked or requested of the candidate if elected. I think when a man receives such contributions he virtually agrees to return the favor when an opportunity affords. But such irregularities or improprieties are already covered under what is known as the Federal Corrupt Practices Act and if there should be a greater specification required as alleged by the arguments in support of this bill the amendments should be made to the Corrupt Practices Act and not to the Political Activity Act, but I will discuss this feature a little later on. We will find out before this bill is passed that the underlying reason for its passage is for the Federal Government to get control of the election and suffrage laws of the States and we should never forget that the question of suffrage and the privileges incident thereto are matters heretofore conceded to be exclusive prerogatives of the several States and the people therein, and the concession dates back to the ratification of the Constitution. They are matters which have been considered and passed upon time and again by the highest judicial tribunal of our country and invariably it has been decided that they are among the rights and powers never delegated to the Congress or the Federal Government but reserved for the several States and the people. They have exercised these rights and privileges for more than a century and a half without having to be coerced or dictated to by the Federal Government. No doubt there has been some individual corruption in the political machinery in all or most of the States, but the same is true in business and other circles, but the refining pot for such irregularities is found in the discharge of the responsibilities of citizenship and not in the arm of the Federal Government which undertakes to paralyze and destroy the conscious responsibilities of the people to government. When you destroy or paralyze the people's conception of their obligations to their government you will no longer have a government by the people, but you will have a dictator government or dictator individual in the place of it, and the freedom and liberties of the people are gone, and when once lost they are never regained. There is not an instance in the history of the country where the Federal Government has once acquired a right or privilege from the people, either by delegation or acquiescence, where such right or privilege has been returned.

There can be no objection to legislation that has for its purpose the purification of politics. Where there is corruption and it is known there should be punishment of some kind, because corruption in political machinery or in any public activity is an offense against society, and the offender should be punished. Pernicious political activity has never been considered as an offense against society. It has never been looked upon or considered as corrupt or immoral. The original Pernicious Political Activity Act was not designed to punish anyone for an offense against society, but was designed for the purpose of maintaining the good will, devotion, and loyalty of the citizenry of this country to their flag and to their Government.

Years ago it was discovered that when a person employed in the Government service, under a classified lifetime status, became unduly politically active among the people he served and incurred the displeasure of those who did not happen to agree with him, such displeasure was not only registered against him but was registered against his employer—the Government. It was not because the employee had done anything corrupt or morally wrong, but his conduct became pernicious when he became so active and outspoken in his efforts to influence people to his way of thinking and he became so distasteful to them that their distaste for him was registered in the lack of loyalty and devotion to their Government. Therefore, the first pernicious political activity law was passed for the purpose of maintaining the loyalty and devotion of the citizens to their flag and Government. This bill is labeled a "pernicious political activity bill," but in order to get public support the proponents are emphasizing immorality and corruption in politics, the idea being that if the bill can become a law it can then be construed and interpreted by its administrators and those charged with the responsibility of enforcing it to cover a thousand and one things never dreamed of. Right now, if this law were in effect and the agricultural teachers throughout the length and breadth of this land should attempt to explain the merits of the farm program inaugurated under our administration they could be charged with pernicious political activity by saying they were trying to reelect a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress. A county agent addressing a group of farmers trying to explain the intricacies and, I may say, the unexplainable ramifications of the specifications and rulings set up under this program could also be charged with pernicious political activity in an effort to reelect a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress, although there is nothing corrupt, immoral, or even pernicious in his conduct or activity.

Yes; you may go further than this and say that every farmer who receives a soil-conservation check or a farm-parity check after entering into an agreement or contract with the Government to regulate his farming operations in accordance with the farm program may be subject to the provisions of the law and then subject to the penalties if he should try to give his interpretation to his neighbor and induce him to support his political party or some candidate in which he may be interested.

As a matter of fact, if this bill is enacted into law, it may be construed so as to close the mouths of thousands of cotton-mill operatives of the country in case the mill in which they are employed secures a Government contract to manufacture a certain quantity of cloth and the operatives are paid from the money obtained by their employer from the Government.

In my congressional district there are six colleges in which every member of the faculty will be estopped from explaining the merits of the Democratic Party as contrasted with those of the Republican Party for the reason that these colleges receive funds from the Federal Government through the National Youth Administration.

Mr. Chairman, the original purpose of the author of the bill may have been sincere in trying to enact legislation that would in a measure prevent corruption in politics. The idea and purpose is one that can be endorsed by everyone, but it has long been conceded that you cannot legislate pure thinking and clean acting by passing a resolution. Something has been said about administrative officers in our party being politically corrupt. I do not know whether it is true or not, but if they are, they ought to be weeded out, even if the party has to suffer as a consequence, because no political party in this country should be permitted to survive with open and known corruptions among its leaders and administrative officers. I yield to no one a stronger desire for purity in politics, but the passage of a law by Congress will not prevent corruption. It has been stated here this afternoon there is not a corrupt practice referred to in this bill but what is not already covered by an existing law. The people of the country alone, not legislation, will purify politics. If I should be guilty of accepting bribes or contributions from people who expected to have them returned by favors rendered after election or votes cast in Congress, I should be defeated, and any other man guilty of such conduct should be defeated. I cannot speak for other districts, but I have confidence enough in the political honesty and the political integrity of the people in my district that, if they knew or even thought I was guilty of such conduct, I would not have any more chance of coming back to Congress than the proverbial snowball would have of remaining in Hades.

That is, if the people in my district were convinced that my campaign was being financed by someone who expected to be favored or selfishly rewarded afterward, they would not call on the Corrupt Practices Act or the Pernicious Political Activity Act for help. They would take care of that situation on election day. They would not only give me my deserts under a situation of this kind, but they would do it for any other man. As long as the sentiment is maintained in the minds of the people for clean and upright politics, they will handle corrupt practices and irregularities at the proper time and in the proper way.

No; this bill has resolved itself into one supported and promoted by those who believe in the continued concentration of power in the hands of the Federal Government. The questions raised here this afternoon show conclusively that one of the main purposes of this bill is for the Federal Government to take control of the election machinery in all of the States. I listened to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER], who preceded me a short while ago, as he stood in the well of the House and pleaded for the people of my State, as he claimed, saying they are deprived of their right to vote on account of the poll-tax law. I will venture the statement there were not a dozen men in my congressional district who offered to vote in the last general election and were denied because they had not paid their poll tax. I am not arguing as to whether or not the poll tax is a good or bad law. The point I am trying to make is that it is up to the people of South Carolina to say whether they want a poll tax or whether they do not want it, and it is not a prerogative of Congress or the Federal Government.

I agree the administrative functions of our Government should grow and extend in proportion as our social, economic, and political problems enlarge and become more intricate, but the acquisition and the exercise of new powers by the Federal Government with the surrender of such powers by the people and the States is a matter that should receive the most deliberate consideration of the Congress. This gradual and everlasting exercise of powers by the Federal Government, not contemplated in the beginning, may prove to be a sleeping paralysis where the States and the people will find themselves absolutely paralyzed in an effort to exercise their original functions and opportunities in governmental affairs. It should be remembered that the American ideal underlying our whole governmental fabric is not something that changes with the wind or change of political administrations. These ideals are written in blood and, therefore, cannot easily be erased. They were bought and paid for with a supreme sacrifice at Bunker Hill, Valley Forge, Kings Mountain, Eutaw Springs, and Yorktown. The American ideal is written in the tradition and the history of this Nation for 200 years, and the recent magnified propaganda that the American youth is entitled to a new baptism of American ideals is another step calculated to destroy the defense of this country from within. There are no new ideals in Americanism. There seem to be new ideas, and to my mind they seem to be a threat or a danger to the ideals of the people, especially when we take into consideration the fact that these new ideas are now being promulgated and disseminated by men and women who do not know by experience or inheritance the A B C of Americanism.

If it can be done by legislation, I am in favor of passing a law that will put every man behind the bars who may be found guilty of dishonesty and corruption in politics; but I am not in favor of closing the mouths of the people of the country on such a pretext as provided for in this bill, because the safety of this Republic and the safety of our democracy is contingent upon the right of the people to discuss the questions that affect their security—questions that affect their social and economic life. To me it is elementary to say that when you take from the people the right to express their ideas or discuss among themselves their social, economic, or political problems you destroy their incentive to exercise their responsibilities as citizens; and when the people of this Republic get to the point they do not take any interest in politics or are not allowed to take any interest in politics, their freedom and their liberties are gone and they can kiss democracy good-bye and prepare to be slaves to a dictatorship the balance of their lives, and bequeath to their children and grandchildren an unwelcomed servitude for all succeeding generations. Mr. Chairman, I really believe that every honest and reasonably intelligent man in this country feels and knows that the future of our democratic form of government is dependent upon the sincere and honest interest manifested in politics by the people. One of the greatest and most valid criticisms of our democracy today is that people do not take enough interest in politics. If this bill is passed and enforced, thousands and millions of people will then have a right to say that since they are not permitted to take any part in politics they will not bother with it, and we will soon have the political dictators running the entire country.

From the days of Thomas Jefferson down to the present day the people of the Nation have been urged to study the problems of their State and Nation in order that they may intelligently register their will at the ballot box in selecting their representatives; but this bill, in effect, undertakes to reverse the order and tell many of them they shall take no interest in politics in the exercise of their responsibilities toward their Government. It is equivalent to saying to the States and many of the people therein, "You have failed in the discharge of your duties and you are no longer competent to discharge the duties of citizenship." It is an insult to the integrity, intelligence, and character of the American people.

However, I would not want to appear as a pessimist in this matter, because it may be that this war on democracy may yet prove to be a blessing in disguise. It may cause the American people to arouse themselves and begin once more to exercise their individual prerogatives and discharge their individual responsibilities in directing the affairs of State. If the Federal Government continues for the next decade as it has for the last decade to encroach upon the rights of the individual States and the rights of the people, I can vision the time when such States may rise in their might and exercise their right to amend our Constitution in such a way as to restore to the people and the States the powers to which they know they are rightly entitled. It would not be secession and it would not be revolution. It would be an orderly, legal, and constitutional recovery of power acquired by the Federal Government through legislation, coercion, or acquiescence.

Suppose the States should decide to repeal the sixteenth amendment—the income-tax law—in order that they may have this source of income for their own revenues; and they are going to need it. We can very easily see what might happen to the Federal Government. Of course, I do not expect to see this happen, but only cite it as an example as to what could happen. It is by no means unthinkable that following a continued trespass upon the rights of the States and the people they may finally decide to exercise their constitutional powers and initiate amendments to the Constitution that will have far-reaching effects upon the future powers of the Federal Government. It might be well for the Congress, therefore, to stop, look, and listen before enacting legislation that may eventually contribute in a measure to its undoing.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, we were all very much interested and moved by the pathetic picture of the janitor in Alabama drawn for us by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]. However, the picture was grossly overdrawn, as I suspect was his picture of purity in politics in Alabama. In the first place, the school authorities he mentioned could not under the law browbeat and persecute that janitor in the way described by the distinguished gentleman. The very opening sentence of the present Hatch Act reads as follows:

> It shall be unlawful for any person to intimidate, threaten, or coerce, or to attempt to intimidate, threaten, or coerce, any other person for the purpose of interfering with the right of such person to vote as he may choose.

That is the present law. The State and local employees on Federal projects have plenty of safeguards against being railroaded under this bill. First of all, a charge must be made against them, and they must be given a right to be heard and tried by the Civil Service Commission. They may introduce new evidence and have a rehearing if they are not satisfied with the first result. They may go into court and be tried by a judge, or they may demand a jury trial. They have the right of appeal to the circuit court of appeals, and they may even go to the Supreme Court of the United States under a writ of certiorari. No such persecution as described by the gentleman from Alabama is possible under the present law or under the proposed law.

It is not necessary for us to spend very much time in debating this bill, because we all know it is going to be passed; and it is going to be passed because the people of the United States wish that it shall be passed. They intend that the next election shall not be bought and shall not be dictated, and they demand that we take every possible precaution to make it a fair and free election. They are acutely conscious that we are facing a grave emergency, with dangers threatening us from within and without.

The coming national Presidential election overshadows everything else in the public mind. People nowadays are not particularly concerned about the political background of the candidates for high office. They do not care whether they are lawyers, editors, manufacturers, bankers, farmers, or public-utility executives. [Laughter.] They want a man big enough to do a big job, and they want a fair election without the misuse of money or the browbeating of Federal employees of the United States by those who control their jobs.

I think there is some misunderstanding as to what this bill does.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. I yield.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I would like to ask the gentleman's interpretation of part of section 2 on page 12 of the bill. That is, "any person employed in any administrative position by the United States in connection with any activity." Now, suppose a State or county employee worked all week on some job that is connected with some Federal grant and then on Saturday when the election comes they put him on some other job. He would not be covered by this bill, would he?

Mr. HANCOCK. I suppose we will have to rely on the interpretation to be put on this language by the Attorney General. He will be guided by the precedents already established in interpreting the civil-service rules. Any answer I might give would be purely speculative and of no value.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Would not this necessarily result in the shifting of State, county, or city employees from one job to another, depending on when the election was held?

Mr. HANCOCK. Well, the particular section to which the gentleman refers applies only to administrative positions.

Mr. KEFAUVER. It is section 2—"any person employed in any administrative position." But when they shift them——

Mr. HANCOCK. Any person employed in any administrative position. That is the language and the particular provision mentioned by the gentleman does not apply to workingmen.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Does not the gentleman think that if this is good for a certain length of time, there should be some protective clause that they shall be so employed for 30 or 60 days after their employment ceases?

Mr. HANCOCK. I do not see how the gentleman could object to that provision, no matter who is affected by it. It prohibits the use of official authority for the purpose of interfering with or affecting the election or nomination of any candidate for President, and so forth.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. HANCOCK. It is doubtless true that there are many imperfections in this bill. There are many ambiguities. It repeats and overlaps a great deal of legislation already on the books.

Mr. SHERIDAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. Just let me go on for a minute, please. If I am fortunate enough to be returned to Congress and reappointed to the Committee on the Judiciary, I intend to make an effort to create some sort of a commission to rewrite our election laws and codify the Corrupt Practices Act, the two Hatch bills, the various penal statutes affecting political activities, and the provisions on the subject that are in one of the relief bills passed last year. But what we are trying to do here is nothing new, strange, or startling. We have had similar laws even before the original Hatch Act was passed. We are merely extending the protection that other Federal employees have to the State and local employees whose principal occupation is in connection with Federal projects. That is all we are doing. It is not a very large group of people which will be affected. We have a perfect right to do it and it is no interference with anyone's civil rights or with States' rights. Of course, you all know that the civil-service employees are barred from active participation in politics.

This may surprise some of you. A Presidential order directed to the State, Treasury, War, Navy, Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce Departments and various others reads like this:

> Presidential appointees are forbidden by statute to use their official authority or influence to coerce the political action of any person or body, to make any contribution for a political object to any other officer of the United States, or to solicit or receive contributions for political purposes from other Federal officers or employees, or to discriminate among their employees or applicants for political reasons.
> Otherwise, a Presidential appointee will be allowed to take such a part in political campaigns as is taken by any private citizen except that he will not be permitted—
> 1. To hold a position as a member or officer of any political committee that solicits funds.
> 2. To display such obtrusive partisanship as to cause public scandal.
> 3. To attempt to manipulate party primaries or conventions.
> 4. To use his position to bring about his selection as a delegate to conventions.
> 5. To act as chairman of a political convention.
> 6. To assume the active conduct of a political campaign.
> 7. To use his position to interfere with an election or to affect the result thereof.

That is the law now. That law was in effect before the Hatch Act. I have read it from a pamphlet issued by the United States Civil Service Commission in 1936.

Do not be shocked or frightened by the alarmist talk you have heard today and will hear again tomorrow that this bill is going to deprive men of their civil rights. If it has any effect at all, and we hope it will, it will be to purify politics. I do not regard this as a perfect measure. I realize it will be difficult to interpret, but we are going to pass this bill, and we are going to pass it because the folks back home insist on it and are almost unanimously in favor of the objective it seeks to reach. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire as to how the time stands?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER] has 1 hour and 3 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Texas has 1 hour 20½ minutes remaining.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, it is now 5 o'clock, and we have a number of Members on this side of the aisle who are insisting on making a point of no quorum. I hope the gentleman from Texas will move that the Committee rise.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I appreciate that the Members are tired.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW].

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, on May 10 last, in addressing the House on the Hatch bill, I announced that when the bill came before the House I would move to amend it by adding the following section:

> Nothing in this act shall be construed to alter or amend any provisions of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925, or any amendments thereto, as to the amount of money that any candidate for Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner may expend in his own campaign under the provisions of that act.

Since that time the Committee on the Judiciary has adopted the essential part of this proposed amendment in the following language:

> Nothing in this act shall be construed to alter or amend any provisions of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925, or any amendments thereto.

This amendment carries out the purpose I intended, and I thank the committee.

Mr. Chairman, the philosophy back of the Hatch bill is a sound philosophy, which has my undiluted sympathy and all the support I am capable of bringing to it. It is based on a principle that ought to be emblazoned in characters of living light in every department and ramification of the public service from Maine to California. That principle is that a public office is a public trust. Those who believe in the Hatch bill believe that public servants should perform the duties of their offices faithfully, honorably, and well. They subscribe wholeheartedly to the maxim that "he serves his party best who serves his country best," and their objective is to do all they can to promote honest, clean, and decent government.

This proposed amendment has the approval of Senator HATCH, and I understand that it is acceptable to the gentleman from New Mexico, Representative DEMPSEY, who has charge of the Hatch bill in the House. After the Hatch bill passed the Senate, when it could not be recalled and amended, a doubt arose in the minds of some very good lawyers in that body as to whether it would have the effect to repeal the limitations which the Federal Corrupt Practices Act places on the amounts candidates for the United States Congress may spend in their campaigns and leave the door open for unlimited expenditures. An amendment was prepared by these Senators, and I was invited to introduce it in the House. This amendment would make certain that the present maximum limits of expenditures are retained, $25,000 in the case of a Senator and $5,000 in the case of a Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner.

I am not a lawyer and I am not qualified to pass upon the subtleties of legal interpretations, but some very able lawyers have at least a doubt as to whether the enactment of the Hatch bill without this amendment would not have the effect to repeal by implication the provisions of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act relating to expenditures of candidates. I am sure no one wants to see those provisions repealed. In the past we have witnessed the scandal of candidates for seats in another body attaining their objectives by the use of enormous slush funds. We do not want to see any repetitions of the colossal expenditures that have been tantamount to the sale of congressional seats on the auction block. Furthermore, the sections of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act that would be safeguarded by my amendment contain certain protective provisions that are valuable to candidates in properly conducted elections, such as the right to spend money for travel, subsistence, stationery, assessments, and so forth, without having the same counted in a statutory limitation on expenditures. The amendment I propose may not be necessary, but that is a question on which lawyers differ. It cannot possibly do any harm, and I am glad that it is acceptable to the proponents of the bill.

The provisions of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act which will be protected by my amendment from repeal by implication if the Hatch Act passes are as follows:

SEC. 309. (a) A candidate, in his campaign for election, shall not make expenditures in excess of the amount which he may lawfully make under the laws of the State in which he is a candidate, nor in excess of the amount which he may lawfully make under the provisions of this title.

(b) Unless the laws of his State prescribe a less amount as the maximum limit of campaign expenditures, a candidate may make expenditures up to—

(1) The sum of $10,000 if a candidate for Senator, or the sum of $2,500 if a candidate for Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner; or

(2) An amount equal to the amount obtained by multiplying 3 cents by the total number of votes cast at the last general election for all candidates for the office which the candidate seeks, but in no event exceeding $25,000 if a candidate for Senator or $5,000 if a candidate for Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner.

(c) Money expended by a candidate to meet and discharge any assessment, fee, or charge made or levied upon candidates by the laws of the State in which he resides, or expended for his necessary personal, traveling, or subsistence expenses, or for stationery, postage, writing, or printing (other than for use on billboards or in newspapers), for distributing letters, circulars, or posters, or for telegraph or telephone service, shall not be included in determining whether his expenditures have exceeded the sum fixed by paragraph (1) or (2) of subdivision (b) as the limit of campaign expenses of a candidate.

SEC. 310. It is unlawful for any candidate to directly or indirectly promise or pledge the appointment, or the use of his influence or support for the appointment of any person to any public or private position or employment, for the purpose of procuring support in his candidacy.

SEC. 311. It is unlawful for any person to make or offer to make any expenditure, or to cause an expenditure to be made or offered, to any person, either to vote or withhold his vote, or to vote for or against any candidate, and it is unlawful for any person to solicit, accept, or receive any such expenditure in consideration of his vote or the withholding of his vote.

In conclusion I want to extend my warm and sincere compliments to the able Representative from New Mexico for his great service to the cause of good government in promoting this measure. The gentleman from New Mexico, JOHN J. DEMPSEY, has made a most creditable record for himself and has written his name high on the roll of honor, for if it had not been for his tireless efforts and unflagging devotion this very meritorious measure would never have reached the statute books.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCCORMACK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill S. 3046, the Hatch bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

THE LATE W. LAIRD HENRY

Mr. WARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute for the purpose of making an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make an announcement of the death on July 5 of Judge W. Laird Henry, Sr., of Cambridge, Md., former Member of Congress and former member of the court of appeals.

Judge Henry was elected to Congress in 1893 at the age of 29 to represent the First Congressional District of Maryland, serving the unexpired term of the late Robert F. Brattan. He was not a candidate to succeed himself.

The First District of Maryland and the Nation have lost a great citizen, honored and respected by all who knew him.

Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an article from the Daily Banner, Cambridge, Md., concerning Judge Henry's life.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. WARD]?

There was no objection.

The article referred to follows:

[From the Cambridge (Md.) Daily Banner of July 5, 1940]

JUDGE W. LAIRD HENRY DIED THIS MORNING AT CAMBRIDGE HOSPITAL—DEATH OF WELL-KNOWN JURIST CAME AS SHOCK TO COMMUNITY—WAS ACTIVE IN COUNTY AFFAIRS

In the death of the Honorable Winder Laird Henry, which occurred at the Cambridge-Maryland Hospital this morning at 25 minutes after 12 o'clock, there passed away a gentleman who had been actively identified with the growth and development of Cambridge and Dorchester County for more than 50 years. A quiet, cultured, educated gentleman who left an impress of kindliness, a human touch of real understanding and sympathy with all of those who were associated with him in any capacity, whether professional, business, social, or otherwise.

Judge Henry was one of the few people in the world of today who had been able to retain, through the stress of the times, that calmness of demeanor, the simplicity of manner, the quiet reserved understanding that enabled him to see through the problems that were presented to him and to do those things that were necessary for the protection of those interests that were entrusted to his care, and, at the same time, to deal honorably, uprightly, fairly, and conscientously with all of those who were interested parties in the various matters.

DEATH REGRETTED

There is no man in this community whose death will be more sincerely regretted because, all of his life he was courteous and fair in all of his transactions and sought, always, at all times, only to honorably and justly protect the trusts that had been imposed upon him.

While he was 75 years of age last December, he was one of those men who do not grow old. The passing of time did not dim his views upon life, did not narrow his outlook upon the world, did not occasion his living in the past; but, instead, he lived in the present and the future; he enjoyed the things of life, and he looked with indulgent eyes upon the problems of the world today, never losing his faith in the rising generations, but frequently stating that each generation has its own problems with which to deal and that, usually, each solves them as well as the preceding one and, judging from the advances that have been and are being made, probably a little better.

BORN IN 1864

He was born at Hambrooks on December 20, 1864, and was the son of the late Daniel M. and Susan Elizabeth Goldsborough Henry. His early education was obtained in the public schools of Cambridge and at an early age he engaged in the mercantile business but soon left that to enter the newspaper business. He published for a number of years the Cambridge Chronicle, which under his leadership, was one of the leading weeklies of Maryland. The Chronicle and the Daily Banner were merged May 19, 1889, and from that time on Judge Henry devoted his time to the practice of law. His office, in the early days of his profession, was located in offices in the Spring Valley, now occupied by Mr. Trice. Judge Henry had purchased these offices from the late Judge Henry Lloyd, they having been Judge Lloyd's offices before his elevation to the bench.

The judge had always lived an active life. While never very robust in the greater part of his life he had always enjoyed good health, which he regarded as one of the greatest blessings that could be enjoyed by anyone.

MEMBER OF LLOYD GUARDS

As a young man he was a member of the Lloyd Guards, one of the military companies of early Cambridge, and he enjoyed very much meeting with former companions in the guards and exchanging reminiscences of those days. He developed an interest in politics at an early age and never lost that interest during his lifetime. He served, while a young man, on campaign committees, was a member of the central committee and was enthusiastically allied with one of the other factions of the Democratic Party in all the campaigns.

Because of this interest in politics and the many friends that he had made all over the State as the result of attending various political conventions it was not surprising that he should have been selected to fill a vacancy in Congress when he was only 29 years old, he having been nominated and elected to fill out the short term of the late Robert Brattan.

NAMED LAND COMMISSIONER

When Gov. Austin L. Crothers was elected in 1907 he named Judge Henry Land Commissioner of Maryland and, a little later, when Judge Henry Page died, he named him chief judge of the first judicial district, a position which he held until the election of 1909 when he was defeated for renomination by the late Chief Judge John R. Pattison. When Gov. Phillips Lee Goldsborough was elected in 1911 he named Judge Henry a member of the public service commission, a position which he filled, as he had all others, with credit alike to himself and the appointing powers.

When he retired from the Public Service Commission he reopened his law offices in Cambridge and has been actively engaged in practice since that time. The law firm was composed of himself and his son, W. Laird Henry, Jr., who became associated with him upon his admission to the bar in 1921, a year or so after his return from France where he had been actively engaged in the air services of the United States during the World War.

RESIGNED TO ENTER P. S. C.

Judge Henry was one of the directors and counsel to the old Cambridge Water Co. but resigned this connection when he went on the Public Service Commission. He had been a director in the Dorchester National Bank and became a director in the Eastern Shore Trust Co. upon the merger of the two banks. He was vice president of the company and upon its reorganization into the County Trust Co. of Maryland he became its first vice president and had been a member of the executive committee for several years. He had been a director and counsel of the Cambridge Manufacturing Co. for more than 20 years and was active in the reorganization of that company's affairs making a number of trips to Richmond and other places in the working out of the plans.

For several years he was a member of the vestry of Great Choptank Parish and was a director and president of the Cambridge-Maryland Hospital for nearly 20 years, finally tendering his resignation in order that younger men might be given the opportunity of becoming interested and active in the management of that institution which was always very dear to him.

MANY ALIKE PASS AWAY

Rapidly the men of Judge Henry's kind are passing away. Men who are courteous and thoughtful for all of those with whom they come into contact, considerate of the poor and humble as well as the rich and prosperous, chivalrous to all women of whatever degree. Men who seem to have been blessed with the ability to look with a broad mind upon the shortcomings of their fellow men, to appreciate the weakness of the flesh, not to ask the impossible of any but to view with charity the actions of their fellow men, men who do not know how to be other than real gentlemen under all circumstances and who refuse to allow petty, small considerations to influence their actions and who indignantly refuse to be parties to anything that attempts to undermine or misrepresent their fellow beings. Surely one of God's noblemen has passed on to his reward.

LIVED ON HIGH STREET

For 45 years he has lived at No. 13 High Street, and only recently he stated that he had lived there so long that he would hardly know how to go elsewhere.

He is survived by one son, Winder Laird Henry, Jr.; his wife, who was Mrs. Mattie Adkins Henry, to whom he was married December 7, 1894, having died about 20 years ago. He is also survived by two sisters, Miss Charlotte G. Henry and Mrs. William Dunbar Gould, II, Cherry Grove, Talbot County, and by one brother, Robert G. Henry, Myrtle Grove, near Easton, Md.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a short newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER]?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY (at the request of Mr. KEOGH), for 1 week, on account of illness.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JULY 10, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, July 8, 1940)

The Senate met in executive session at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Duncan Fraser, assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O God, the fountain of wisdom, whose statutes are good and gracious and whose law is truth, we beseech Thee so to guide and bless the Members of this Senate that they may ordain for our governance only such things as please Thee, to the glory of Thy name and the welfare of Thy people. Through Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

As in legislative session,

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Tuesday, July 9, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

SELECTIVE MILITARY TRAINING AND SERVICE

As in legislative session,

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, for a brief moment I desire to refer to that part of our preparation for national defense which is represented by the Burke-Wadsworth bill for selective military training and service. A question occurred in the Military Affairs Committee this morning with respect to the element of time. The question was asked, What is the hurry? I desire to answer that to some extent by showing that time is of the very essence of our preparedness.

From all the evidence we get in committee and outside of committee, notably in the distinguished address delivered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] yesterday, we are persuaded that we cannot perfect or anywhere near perfect our Military and Naval Establishments within a period of years. So that what some of us regard as an unprecedented peril to this country at the instant time is the utter impossibility of creating machinery, that is the physical thing constituting our defense, and also the utter impossibility of enlisting the necessary personnel to man such machinery in a short period of time.

That means to the people of this country, as evidenced by what I am going to point out, that we ought to begin now; that we should not postpone; that we should not delay; and without depriving anybody of the opportunity to express his views, and taking everybody's views as bona fide, and giving full weight and consideration to them, we should progress as rapidly as the circumstances will permit to a solution of the questions relating to national defense.

In order to show to what extent public opinion is in advance of the Congress with respect to the element of time, and as applied specifically to the personnel of the Army, I desire to read a card, copies of which have come to me by the thousands from the State of Vermont, from every part of the State of Vermont, and from persons engaged in all kinds of activities. It is as follows:

> Because I believe that America faces the greatest danger in its history, and because this danger forces us to put the fully trained manpower of the Nation behind the defensive equipment just voted by Congress, I urge the immediate adoption of a selective military-service law for all ages as the only efficient and democratic way of manning our national defenses and protecting our men against the needless slaughter of an ill-equipped and unprepared defense.
> Sincerely yours.

This card happens to come from Barton, Vt., but the cards came in such numbers to my office that we could not store them, and they have had to go unresponded to, save as I am now by this means responding to them and acknowledging the receipt of them, and the fact that I give due regard to them, together with all the other evidence which is being taken in the Military Affairs Committee, and all the other evidence that I can gain here on the floor of the Senate and elsewhere.

Mr. President, those cards are being received, and they cannot be answered otherwise than in this way. Their presence here is evidence of a widespread, a deeply rooted persuasion by the people of my State that we should proceed as rapidly as feasible and proper in the passage of a selective military service law. You will observe that the signers of the cards have not been specific. They have declared for a principle; and that is characteristic of Vermonters. I shall, of course, adhere to that in my service for them in the committee and in the Senate.

Mr. President, I desire also to have noted in the RECORD the fact that I have received numerous petitions reading as follows:

> To the President and Congress of the United States:
> We, the undersigned American citizens, meeting at Middlebury, Vt., July 5, 1940, believe that our security and our way of life are seriously menaced at this moment. We therefore urge the following program:

(1) Continued and effective aid to Great Britain to insure her survival in this war of democracy against the totalitarian powers.

(2) Modification of any American laws which may hinder such effective aid.

(3) Quick passage of the Burke-Wadsworth bill for universal military training, with any necessary revisions.

(4) Passage of such legislation as may be necessary to permit our citizens to volunteer for military service with Britain.

(5) Speedy confirmation of the appointments of Secretary Stimson and Secretary Knox as outward evidence of the unity of all Americans in the cause of American defense.

(6) Whatever legislation may be needed to facilitate the removal to the New World of refugee children for the duration of the war.

I also have a similar petition from the town of Wolcott, Vt., which I should like to have noted in the RECORD, although I do not care to have the names printed.

Mr. President, I conclude with the request that these petitions be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. At the hearing before the Committee on Military Affairs this morning on the bill to which the Senator is addressing his remarks, the distinguished Senator from Vermont made a statement which impressed me as being entirely correct. He said, in answer to some questions, that in his judgment the people of the country were far ahead of Congress in realizing the importance of prompt action upon a measure for selective compulsory military training.

In that connection, I should like to call attention to the fact that a careful compilation shows that the press of the country, as expressed in its editorial policy, endorses the general principle of this bill and substantiates the position taken by the Senator from Vermont to the extent of about 90 percent.

As an example of that, let me read just one short excerpt from the Beatrice (Nebr.) Daily Sun:

> Universal military training for all young men would be justified as an established policy by the benefits it gives the individual, even if unrelated to the national defense. * * * So long as we recognize the possibility, however remote, that armed defense may be resorted to, justice to those who may be called upon to provide the defense demands that they have preliminary training for their duties.

That is the thought which seems to have found lodgment in the hearts and consciences of the people over the country, that in fairness to those who may some time—we hope never, but may—be called upon to engage in the defense of this country, we owe them the duty of providing the training now while there is time.

If the Senator will permit me to do so, I ask unanimous consent that there may be inserted in the RECORD at this point brief excerpts from editorials appearing in some of the leading newspapers of the country.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

INLAND EDITORS JOIN COAST EDITORS IN URGING NEED FOR IMMEDIATE LAW FOR SELECTIVE COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING

A digest of editorial comment in daily newspapers throughout the United States on selective compulsory military training and service, as provided for in the Burke-Wadsworth bill, reveals that inland editors, as well as coast publishers, are 87 percent united in urging immediate action by Congress.

Heretofore it has been supposed that public realization of the danger of war and sentiment for naval and military expansion were keener in the Coast States than in the inland section. It is now indicated by a survey of editorials by the Military Training Camps Association, which is sponsoring the Burke-Wadsworth bill, that the inland States are just as alive to the perils of a Hitler "blitzkrieg" as are the more exposed States.

Of hundreds of editorials studied and collated, about 13 percent are either mildly or strongly opposed to the immediate enactment of a law for selective compulsory training, but admit that compulsory service will be necessary after war is declared. Most of the favorable comment, however, points out that it will be too late to train an adequate army and expand the existing land and naval forces after this country becomes actually involved in war.

Brief excerpts from editorials in some of the newspapers, both in support of and in opposition to compulsory training, are given below:

Akron (Ohio) Beacon-Journal: "Three months ago it was unthinkable that compulsory military service would ever be invoked except in case of war. * * * Today it has the approval of President Roosevelt and many of the very same people who considered it crass militarism a short time ago."

Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle: "It is folly to think that in an era when two or three million men are thrown into a single battle that the necessity of our country should rest upon the shoulders of an army of less than half a million men. * * * We must have millions trained and ready. * * * How is this manpower to be trained? There is only one known method, and that is some form of compulsory military training."

Albany (Ga.) Herald: "The idea that every citizen should be made to give a year or more out of his lifetime to serving in the armed forces of the Nation is not one which can be sufficiently sugar-coated to be made pleasant to the people of this Nation. * * * We hope that compulsory military training will not become necessary, but we believe that if it does this Nation will adopt it in the spirit of sacrifice without grumbling."

Albuquerque (N. Mex.) Journal: "There undoubtedly is a rising tide in the United States today in favor of compulsory military training, but it is doubtful if public opinion will support legislation at the present time. Volunteer enlistments can fill the requirements in enlargement of the armed forces to the size now contemplated. Until this fails, or the war menace becomes more dangerous, the United States can well pass up compulsory military training."

Alexandria (Ind.) Times-Tribune: "Compulsory training in the essentials of military operations, and especially as they relate to the handling of mechanized equipment and supplies for the fighting forces, appears as one of the certainties of the not far-distant future in the United States."

Amsterdam (N. Y.) Recorder: "We are in thorough sympathy with organization of the whole manpower of the Nation. * * * It is apparent that a great deal of thought has been devoted to the (compulsory training) program, for while every eligible man and woman in the country would be assigned to specific duties and trained for them, care has been taken to assure a minimum of industrial dislocation."

Annapolis (Md.) Capital: "If the United States is to drift still closer to war, and it has been drifting rapidly in that direction in recent months, universal military conscription will probably again be applied. * * * But any indication that this country will be compelled to resist invasion of this hemisphere will lead to clamor for universal governmental command of all resources, human and material."

Anniston (Ala.) Star: "As much as anyone else, we hate the idea of compulsory military training; but in the light of conditions that obtain in the world, it appears necessary. The only power a great army respects is an army just as great."

Antigo (Wis.) Journal: "Universal military training has gained more ground in the last few days than it has in the past 10 years. * * * The situation in Europe should therefore be a lesson to us; and from the activity that has already been started, we are apparently going to profit from it."

Appleton (Wis.) Post-Crescent: "We support it, irrespective of potential enemies, for the wonderful good it would do to the health, morals, and the manhood of our youth. * * * Military training is cleanliness and efficiency. It is independence and self-reliance. It hasn't a single draw-back, not a black mark. And some day it may be used to the salvation of the Nation."

Asheville (N. C.) Citizen: "If the United States is to be able to oppose their aggressions effectively, we will have to discard some of our traditions. We must be prepared at a moment's notice to throw all that we have in wealth and manpower against them if they seek to seize our possessions."

Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution: "We know of nothing to be said against compulsory military training for the United States except its cost. Experience might well prove more expensive to save money than to spend it. * * * Military training in a democracy teaches discipline and responsibility. It makes better citizens, physically and morally. Only in peace does a nation have time to prepare for war. If war comes, we shall have to fight, whether we wish it or not. The question is whether our men go trained and prepared or as mere raw material for enemy guns."

Attleboro (Mass.) Sun: "There is a widespread demand in a world where the makers of war seem to almost rule the planet for compulsory military training."

Baltimore (Md.) Evening Sun: "If we are to expand our defense forces as planned, it is obvious that we cannot rely on volunteers. * * * There are not enough volunteers to do the job. * * * If these are times that try men's souls and strain their emotions, they are also times which test democracy's capacity for unity, sacrifice, and competent effort."

Baltimore (Md.) Morning Sun: "The Constitution gives the Federal Government plenary powers to provide for the national defense. * * * We have a defense problem of the greatest magnitude. * * * We must have trained reserves ready. * * * Such a necessary program cannot be manned by any system of voluntary enlistments. * * * National service, like taxes, must be asked of all of us. Indeed, such national service is a form of taxation, in that the Government must have it if it is to endure."

Baton Rouge (La.) Advocate: "Registration for compulsory service, military or civil, appears to be a primary and vital step toward the national self-discipline which we must acquire and without delay, if we are to meet successfully the regimented nations of the world."

Bay City (Mich.) Times: "Those who are looking upon the proposal for compulsory military training * * * in the United States as something foreign to our traditions are quite correct as far as peacetime service is concerned. But its advocates hold that what is lawful in war is also legal in preparing for war. If that is accepted as true, the compulsory idea is well supported by our history."

Beatrice (Nebr.) Daily Sun: "* * * Universal military training for all young men would be justified as an established policy by the benefits it gives the individual, even if unrelated to the national defense. * * * So long as we recognize the possibility, however remote, that armed defense may be resorted to, justice to those who may be called upon to provide the defense demands that they have preliminary training for their duties."

Berlin (Wis.) Journal: "Compulsory military training, or universal training, embracing certain age groups generally, is a thing this country must now consider. * * * Such training, because it would fall equally on all individuals within the age groups, would be fair."

Bismarck (N. Dak.) Tribune: "A month ago the Bismarck Tribune felt it might be extreme in suggesting compulsory military service for American youth. On the contrary, it found the people here supported the idea. * * * The Bismarck Tribune is an independent paper. * * * The point is that sound Americanism and a proper national-defense policy know no partisanship."

Bordentown (N. J.) Register: "There is a definite trend to universal military training for our American youth. Every sane parent in the United States realizes that a young man who has spent from 3 to 6 months in a military camp has better physical stamina to meet either the normal civilian requirements of later life, or the more severe test of military service in an emergency."

Boston (Mass.) Christian Science Monitor: "If the United States had a background of universal military training there would be available several million trained reserves. The necessity now is to prepare such a body of citizen reserves as rapidly as possible. The United States, through Congress, ought to adopt now a compulsory universal service act along the general lines proposed by the Military Training Camps Association in conjunction with the War Department."

Boston (Mass.) Herald: " 'Compulsory military service, has been an odious expression. But various conceptions have been vanishing not because we have modified our ideals but because the world which is closing in on us is not the world of even 150 days ago. A proposal which we would have dismissed instinctively and angrily even a month ago must now be debated in cold blood."

Boston (Mass.) Herald: "The bill for selective compulsory military training and service which Senator BURKE has introduced should have the closest, most conscientious, most sympathetic attention of every American, whether a pacifist or a fire-eater, an interventionist or an isolationist. There is a preponderant sentiment in the country for something of this kind. The character of the sponsors makes ridiculous any assertion that this is an attempt to pervert democracy, to regiment us, and get us into war. The measure is protective and preventive, and the motives are patriotic."

Buffalo (N. Y.) Courier-Express: "We believe that trained forces, freed for civilian occupations in peacetime but prepared at all times for the serious business of the soldier, are much to be preferred to the creation of an immense standing Army. Compulsory military training, however, is not something of the immediate in this country."

Carlisle (Pa.) Sentinel: "A bill to establish such a system of training and service is built on the right lines; thoroughly democratic in the sense that it calls on all alike; thoroughly fair in the sense that it does not seek to put the burden wholly on the young."

Centerville (Iowa) Iowegian: "America can continue to rely in the present emergency as it has in the past, to a considerable extent on its voluntary preparation for military service. We have had this through enlistment in the National Guard, through attendance at universities and colleges giving military training, by attending citizens' military training camps, by joining such organizations as the National Rifle Association, and in other ways."

Cincinnati (Ohio) Enquirer: "It takes a long time to create a large army by conscription. And there is much to be said for taking the preliminary steps promptly. Apart from its value as national defense, universal military service has certain definite uses. Compulsory military service is a democratic means of providing for the better defense of our homeland."

Champaign (Ill.) News Gazette: "Universal military training would not only greatly benefit young men physically but would mean training in arms invaluable in case of an emergency in which this Nation was called upon to defend itself. The advantages of universal training far outweigh any disadvantages."

Charleston (S. C.) News and Courier: "Let us have the compulsory military training. The News and Courier has always been for it. The News and Courier would advocate some form and period—not too much—of compulsory military service for all youth, whether a threat of war was present or not."

Charleston (W. Va.) Daily Mail: "We must face our defense problems realistically, and that obviously calls for universal compulsory training, if we are to have any program outside of the existing military establishment."

Chattanooga (Tenn.) Times: "* * * The experience of this Nation, since the first day it required the services of soldiers, has been that an adequate defensive force cannot be obtained by voluntary enlistment. And even if that method sufficed to raise an army of a million men, the result would not be representative of the country as a whole. Such an army would not be a democratic army. * * * Without trained men we shall have spent billions of dollars for nothing. And the only way to train men in sufficient numbers and in the spirit of democracy is to call them up in the name of the people from every station in American life."

Chicago (Ill.) Daily News: "There is no worth-while opposition to proper military training for young Americans, and never was. Politicians have mistaken for public opinion the vocal outbursts of the few pacifists and reds who have harried the R. O. T. C. ever since the last war."

Chicago (Ill.) Tribune: "This country has need for a bigger army than it has today, but before it needs conscripts it needs the modern weapons with which they must fight and knowledge on the part of Army officers of how these weapons are employed. France fell not for lack of men but for lack of modern weapons. Until our Regular Army gets the weapons * * * and learns to fight in 1940 fashion, with 1940 cooperation between the various arms, and 1940 speed of movement, there will be no teachers for * * * conscripts. When the Army has caught up with the military times we can begin to think seriously of a program of universal military training."

Chilton (Wis.) Times-Journal: "It must be admitted that universal military training is inconsistent with the ideals of American democracy. * * * Better a system of voluntary training provided under Government auspices."

Clarksville (Tenn.) Chronicle: "Compulsory service for our young men is a sensible program. The simple fact that this country is fast realizing that we must build up a powerful military machine if we are to live in a dictatorial world."

Clinton (S. C.) Samson Independent: "We are inclined to favor compulsory military training, not only because of the present world conditions, but because we believe it worth while, even if we never went to war."

Columbus (Ind.) Republican: "The whole idea is contrary to American tradition and repugnant to most Americans, or at any rate, has been until now. But there is no question that young people of today need more discipline and more purposefulness."

Columbus (Ga.) Ledger: "America cannot take too many precautions to safeguard the Nation and maintain democracy. * * * Compulsory military training as we view it does not mean sending our youth off to battle, but merely a step in preparedness that would insure us an effective and trained arm of defense if the time ever came when we would need it."

Coshocton (Ohio) Tribune: "Universal compulsory military training does not fit into our needs, certainly at this time. On the contrary it would be a positive distraction from our main requirements in national defense—airplanes, pilots, an expanded navy and naval personnel, modernization of naval bases, increase in mechanical equipment for the Army. But universal compulsory military training would be more than a distraction. It would take funds which had far better be used in the improvements just enumerated."

Cumberland (Md.) News: "Americans are so nimble minded that they can jump in a few weeks from an isolationist policy to contemplation of some form of compulsory military service for young men. * * * If the worst fears for Europe are realized, not only a compulsory training period but also universal service under a draft law may become necessary."

Dallas (Oreg.) Chronicle: "Military training never hurt anyone. It will provide healthful, body-building activities for American young men."

Dallas (Tex.) Times Herald: "Its monetary cost would be enormous. So far, the readiness with which our young men have come forward to enlist in the various branches of the service has not indicated a need for compulsion. * * * Technically trained men are needed in the Army but it is possible without compulsory training. The man power that serves men behind the lines cannot be neglected."

Dallas (Tex.) News: "The safest procedure for this country now would be universal and compulsory training * * * with reserve duty made mandatory for a prescribed period after active service. The News reached this conclusion under the compulsion of events abroad, realizing that military training upsets a tradition of more than 150 years to which this newspaper has fully subscribed."

Dansville (N. Y.) Breeze: "Nothing should stand in the way of protecting the Nation, and youths certainly should not and will not be expected to go to war without training. * * * There is no reason in common sense why the youth who willingly go to the Government for assistance in earning a living should not learn the rudiments of military science."

Dayton (Ohio) Herald: "With war racing with the speed of planes and tanks, even democratic people must think faster than they ever have before. It is apparent that America must arm itself to the teeth to defend its freedom, and that requires men, millions of well-trained, rescurceful men. And as we think (of becoming a totalitarian nation) let us remember that democracy, if it is to survive, must fortify itself to face a rough, tough world."

Daytona Beach (Fla.) Sun: "Shall the arms burden, in short, designed to protect all, be carried by all in proportion and in manner called for by ability? That would seem, in principle, to be the democratic way. In the World War compulsory service was immediately adopted as the only equitable and effective way to face the situation. It is not too soon to begin considering whether or not today's world demands that we come at last to the European system of universal militarization."

Denison (Tex.) Herald: The American people have never taken very well to compulsory military training. The British have taken the same attitude. Consequently the United States and Great Britain have entered every war in which they have been engaged unprepared. It is utter folly for a great nation to wait until war has been declared before starting to build its army."

Dennison (Ohio) Paragraph: "The idea of compulsory military training for the youth of America gains strength proportionate to Hitler's drive through France. The establishment of such a system will be the country's best answer to the charge of Mussolini that the world's democracies are 'decrepit.' Congress and the country should face the issue now. One fact that helps to make democracies 'decrepit'—if they are—lies in their slowness to reach major decisions."

Devils Lake (N. Dak.) Journal: "If the worst fears for Europe are realized, not only a compulsory training period but also universal service under a draft law may become necessary."

Duquoin (Ill.) Evening Call: "To call in peacetime for compulsory military service, no matter in what form it is disguised, is one more step—and a long step—in taking this country down the long, hard, terrible road the nations of Europe, victor and vanquished alike, are following."

Elwood (Ind.) Call Leader: The most elementary lesson to be learned from the war in Europe and from the strategy and tactics of the "blitzkrieg" is that there may be no time for military training, especially if the initial force is inadequate after a war has begun. Congress will be blind to the most glaring lesson of the present war, and negligent in its duty, unless it provides now at least for setting up the machinery for military training. Compulsory training is a form of insurance which has become essential in the present emergency."

Eugene (Oreg.) Register Guardian: "The nature of modern war makes universal military training almost imperative. * * * Those who argue that 'when we are invaded it is time enough to prepare' speak out of sheer ignorance of modern war."

Fayetteville (N. C.) Observer: "The burden should be spread among many shoulders by a universal military service law which would require at least 1,000,000 young Americans to undergo military service for a period of at least 6 months each year."

Florence (S. C.) News: The Morning News, while strongly opposed to compulsory service as a permanent policy as being utterly inconsistent with American ideals and the American way of life, is at the same time in full sympathy with such a legislative move for the purpose of coping with the present emergency."

Gary (Ind.) Tribune: "In the past, compulsory military training has been a moot question. * * * The answer usually was that we had no need of a large force of trained men. * * * The same answers can't be given now. It is not a question of being warlike but of being ready to meet an aggressive nation—or a combination of aggressors. We should consider seriously the advisability of instituting compulsory training."

Greenfield (Mass.) Recorder: "For the time being, however, it is generally believed that volunteer enlistments will strengthen the Army, Navy, and air services sufficiently to meet the emergency."

Greenville (S. C.) News: "If this country recognizes the need for training a great civilian army reserve for the long-term future, universal military training is the only answer."

Hamilton (Ohio) Journal: "Compulsory training for youth sounds distasteful. But is there a better way in these trying times to guard against attack and at the same time instill in the minds of people that this is a time when our responsibilities to our country are important, and that without a democratic government our homes, our businesses, our mode of living all will vanish?"

Houston (Tex.) Post: "It is doubtful if the United States can avoid compulsory military service under present conditions. We can reject the idea entirely only when some of the world's most powerful nations are willing to lay down their arms and return to a more peaceful method of settling international difficulties, and at this moment that day seems very far distant."

Iola (Kans.) Register: "We see no particular reason to shrink from the thought of universal military service for American youth. * * * If we must have universal compulsory military service in this country in order to live in this military world of today, let's have exactly that. Let's train men how to fight."

Indianapolis (Ind.) Star: "This country is 100 percent for preparedness, but for preparedness in the American way. * * * If there is need for personnel, why not appeal to the people, not order them?"

Jackson (Miss.) News: "Officers of the Mississippi National Guard adopted resolutions declaring that Congress should immediately provide for compulsory military training. * * * It might as well start now as later. * * * Every able-bodied man ought to be trained to bear arms in defense of his Nation."

Kalispell (Mont.) Monitor: "In the face of what has happened and is now going on in Europe, we feel that compulsory military training is one of the first phases of preparedness that should be adopted."

Kansas City (Kans.) Kansan: "The country's defense needs are going to call for some form of compulsory military training. But wars are no longer fought by military units alone. This is the age of total war, and if it should ever come to us, all resources and activities will have to be devoted to it. It sets no bounds to the power of Congress to use men in an army. It can take men and risk their lives; it can take them for the much milder purpose of training."

Kansas City (Mo.) Times: "The first step is authorizing the use of the largest possible amounts of relief funds for preparedness. Then, as events require, a further just and equal principle may be applied through universal training."

Kinston (N. C.) Free Press: "Let's postpone compulsory military service until there is evidence that the traditional patriotism, exhibited and demonstrated in voluntary service when needs arise, is no longer motivating the hearts and souls of the men of this country."

Knoxville (Tenn.) Journal: "If in our democracy we have something worth fighting to preserve, then it is worth while that the fight be made intelligently and effectively when it comes. That can mean only one thing—proper training of American citizens; all of them. Universal service is the only way to insure this result."

Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette: "While the need is keenly realized for equipping and modernizing the Army and Navy on the material side, it must equally be recognized that the United States could not put a million young civilians into uniform and have an army of a million soldiers in a few weeks, or even a few months. Universal conscription would provide * * * the hard and fast military training that United States Army recruits now receive."

Los Angeles (Calif.) Times: "A year ago, had anyone dared make them, proposals for such staggering arms expenditures and defense taxation as we are now not only accepting without protest but actually urging would have been howled down in a chorus of indignation. And yet most of us will now admit that it would have been better for us if we had not lost that time for preparation."

Lowell (Mass.) Citizen: "There is no evidence of a general readiness on the part of young America to volunteer for military service; on the contrary, there is rather more than is comfortable of the idea that national defense is not an inescapable adjunct of American citizenship. * * * That's what these pacifists and youth coddlers have got us into."

Manhattan (Kans.) Chronicle: "Perhaps before many months have passed, the American public will speak out in favor of (compulsory) training, and the Congress will adopt such a program. If it becomes the will of the people, then let it be done, but it should not be sold "wrapped up" to the American people. We wonder how many of those favoring it realize just what training is?"

Memphis (Tenn.) Commercial Appeal: "It (compulsory service) will be adopted eventually because realism is beginning to dominate in this Nation. * * * Selective compulsory military service will require sacrifice, but not out of proportion to the national need. * * * Military training is a great leveling process in which the gold is separated from the dross."

Meriden (Conn.) Journal: "Military power seems now to count more than justice or promises made in treaties. When a strong little nation like Holland can be beaten down in 5 days, it is time for even a great nation to polish up its weapons and learn to shoot."

Millville (N. J.) Republican: "Military training cannot be dismissed as jingoistic or war-mongering. Those who enjoy the blessings of democracy must be prepared to protect and preserve them."

Milwaukee (Wis.) Journal: "War asks better preparation than paddling canoes and kindling fires without matches. Why deny our young men this insurance in a world in which we are surrounded on every side by the apostles of force?"

Moline (Ill.) Dispatch: "There can be no objection to a demand that every American regardless * * * do whatever he can to guarantee our security. Recently this newspaper recommended compulsory military training for all able-bodied young men. * * * It is a good thing to have every potential soldier trained in advance, by compulsion if necessary."

Monett (Mo.) Times: "What about compulsory military service? We should have an army and it should not be less than a million men. Such an army cannot be raised by voluntary recruitment. * * * First, there should be a general registration of all of America's manpower. Then * * * the Government could decide how many men it would need and what age bracket they should be."

Monroe (Wash.) Monitor: "With all the branches of the military service short on enlistment, we go on record as being wholeheartedly for a compulsory form of military training."

Montgomery (Md.) Independent: "By compulsory military training, if merely for the sake of physically developing our men, not to mention the rich lesson in discipline of which there is so little today, we can retain our position of physical supremacy throughout the entire world."

Moultrie (Ga.) Observer: "A year ago anyone who suggested compulsory military training in the United States would have been regarded as one of our wildest radicals. * * * We never dreamed that we would soon be imitating (governments that had conscription). Maybe it will blow over and the skies will clear up. We sincerely hope this will happen before we inaugurate compulsory military service."

Murfreesboro (Tenn.) Journal: "President Roosevelt said that he approved * * * a proconscription editorial. 'Every citizen is bound to serve and defend the state as far as he is capable. Society could not otherwise preserve itself' was the way the idea was expressed by an outstanding (French) jurist of the (1793) period."

Nashville (Tenn.) Tennesseean: "Volunteers are enrolling for military service. * * * but that is a slow and uncertain method of getting soldiers. * * * Before the days of the "blitzkrieg" * * * there might have been some excuse for a leisurely approach to the problem of national defense. * * * Universal military service is well within the democratic tradition. * * * It discriminates against no class or station. If we are to become strong without delay, we must follow the only methods which give results."

Nashville (Tenn.) Banner: "Preparedness is, for a nontotalitarian state, the finest peace insurance. * * * Adequate preparedness requires not only machines but men. It requires an army and such millions of trained men as could immediately augment that army should need arise."

New Orleans (La.) Item: "There can be no question that the individual who has had military training stands a better chance for health, life, and safety than the untrained man or boy, in peace as well as war. * * * Time is the essence of this situation. * * * The whole world knows what compulsory military service means. The enactment of an equitable law along these lines is worth a million speeches."

New Orleans Times-Picayune: "This newspaper shares the belief now finding Nation-wide expression that this Republic, for its own safety, must now adopt a system of compulsory military training."

Newport (R. I.) News: "For those who find the idea of compulsory military training in peacetime hard to accept, it might be proper at this time to quote from an opinion in World War days of the United States Supreme Court. 'Compelled military service,' the Court held, 'is neither repugnant to a free government nor in conflict with the constitutional guaranties of individual liberty. Indeed, it may not be doubted that the very conception of a just government and its duty to the citizen includes the duty of the citizen to render military service in case of need and the right of the government to compel it.'"

Newton (N. J.) Herald: "During the World War, thousands of young Americans lost their lives because of lack of training. It is not possible to give men a few weeks' training and pit them against well-trained, fully equipped troops, and hope to prevent unnecessary sacrifice of lives."

New York Herald Tribune: "Three months ago the mere introduction of a bill to establish universal service in the United States would have been politically unthinkable. The fact that Senator BURKE could lay before the Senate the bill sponsored by the Military Training Camps Association, calling for the registration of 40,000,000 American men and rendering all of them between 21 and 45 legally liable, as needed, for 8 months' service, represents an enormous advance. With the purposes of the bill this paper is wholly in sympathy. We are convinced not only that the Nation should have the power to call on every citizen in its own defense, but that this common obligation should be made plain to all, and made plain now, by some such measure as this one."

New York News: "We think the logic is all on the side of Senator EDWARD R. BURKE (Democrat), of Nebraska, who introduced the compulsory military training bill in the Senate the other day. Senator BURKE remarked in a radio debate the other night that there is no substitute for the strength to throw an aggressor out of the country, or to keep him from ever getting into that country. We see nothing for it but to adopt universal military training of American men for 1 year or 2 years—meaning every American man physically capable of taking such training, the job to begin when he is 19. It will be a fundamental change for this country to undergo. But we are convinced that it will be a change for the better."

Oneonta (N. Y.) Star: "While the days and weeks go marching on the people of the United States are agreed that we must build an Army and Navy. * * * but we are not doing very much about it. We need to start a program of immediate military training for the first men who would be called to support our standing Army, which is woefully small for a world like today's. The United States must prepare."

Ontario (Oreg.) Argus: "This newspaper never before entertained the thought that the time would come when it would voice approval of a program of compulsory military training for American boys. But times have changed. So, too, have the ideas of this publication. So long as there is a threat in the world to the continuation of American liberties, so long it will be necessary for Americans to defend them. So long as defense is needed, so long will training be required. That training should be compulsory and all-inclusive."

Owensboro (Ky.) Messenger: "Americans are called upon to weigh and act upon the most momentous issue that ever faced them. At any moment this country may become the sole torch bearer of western civilization. But America, too, is vulnerable. * * * Our greatest need is trained manpower. Compulsory military training should be instituted at once."

Palestine (Ohio) Leader: "Whatever may have been true in the past, compulsory military training is ineffective unless it has been started in time of peace. Congress will be blind to the most glaring lesson of the present war and negligent in its duty unless it provides now for military training."

Peoria (Ill.) Journal: "There are in the United States several hundred thousand young men who ought to be in the United States Army. They are men who could easily be taught the business of soldiering so that this country would have a backlog of personnel to handle the material which our national-defense program is to create."

Perth Amboy (N. J.) News: "You cannot get prepared overnight. Compulsory military training has always been a subject of controversy in this country. There will be opposition on the part of parents who didn't raise their boys to be soldiers. But, in the event of war, these young men would have a much better chance of surviving it, if they knew something about the business and had been trained for it."

Philadelphia (Pa.) Bulletin: "The idea that every man has a duty and a privilege in protection of his home and country will eventually be translated into a practical law."

Philadelphia (Pa.) Evening Ledger: "What is the use of all these ships, all these intricate machines for the Army, all of the 50,000 airplanes to be built every year, if we are not prepared to man and operate them? * * * Every piece of mechanical equipment must be understood by the men who must make them function. This applies to the simplest gun, the largest tank, the heaviest cannon. Every plane needs not one pilot, one combat crew, but many. All must know something of the job of all the others. * * * We have the men. We are spending billions to produce ships, equipment, and planes. Now it is up to Congress to make some provision for training the millions of men needed to make our defense plan work. It will not work without them. And training cannot be delayed until after hostilities begin."

Phoenix (Ariz.) Republic: "We have, of course, abandoned the idea of an efficient army flying to arms overnight. Fighting men are no longer besieging the recruiting offices. Compulsory military service became less objectionable as the perils of the European democracies seemed to increase. * * * Later an editorial in the New York Times urging compulsory training was given the approval of the President and, after that, of the press generally."

Pompton Lakes (N. J.) Ledger: "No one here believes in sending our men to Europe; but we do want them to find trained men when, after resting up a year or so, they tackle us through Mexico."

Port Jervis (N. Y.) Union: "Is it too much to ask our young people to give a year of their time to their country to be ready to protect it if it is necessary? The conditions that were found at the drafting in the last war ought to be a lesson to America to be prepared with able-bodied young men ready to start out at short notice."

Portland (Maine) Express: "Sentiment in favor of immediate adoption by the United States of the principle of compulsory military training appears to be gaining headway daily. It should! * * * America has the force potential. And for her own security she must convert it into an actual force of trained men—men not only willing but trained and able to serve, if and when the call should come."

Poughkeepsie (N. Y.) Eagle: "Everybody agreed on an arms program? Yes. Action. Let's go. To propose any (compulsory) training plan for peacetime operation would at any time in American history have produced a storm of opposition. Today even those who oppose it give it the gravest consideration."

Poughkeepsie (N. Y.) Star: "A little good old-fashioned discipline, be it imposed within the confines of a rigorous home life or by means of universal military training, can do no harm to an individual, irrespective of his background. The major problem appears to be unification and training, not of a few isolated hundreds of thousands, but of the citizens of America."

Plymouth (Wis.) Review: "In no other program are we demonstrating the characteristic weakness of democracies more than our efforts to secure national defense. * * * The Senators are still afraid they might lose a few pacifist votes."

Raleigh (N. C.) Times: "It is doubtful that anyone taking the C. M. T. C. courses regrets it. And, should war come, the beneficiaries of this instruction will be in a position to adapt themselves quickly to military life. * * * The draftee will be put through suddenly rigorous training, and in this predicament he might well wish that he had undergone previous military training toughening him for his new duties."

Ridgeway (Pa.) Record: "If we are going to fight a war, let's be prepared for it. Compulsory military training savors of dictatorship, but if America is to live as a democracy we must be prepared to fight for it."

Greenville (S. C.) News: "An important first need is that of military training of sufficient young men of military age to enable the Nation to call into service, if need be, a well-trained army of much greater size than the existing force."

Rockford (Ill.) Republic: "We in America should face the facts. We are vulnerable. Speed, in this age of the blitzkrieg, is the essence of liberty. It is imperative that practical steps be taken We need trained manpower. Compulsory military service would be a terrific wrench on the American population, but it should be instituted."

St. Louis (Mo.) Post-Dispatch: "The Burke bill is sponsored by the Military Training Camps Association, and so would seem, on the surface at least, to represent informed opinion in the field of national defense."

St. Louis (Mo.) Star-Times: "The all-important issue before the United States is self-preservation. Against that consideration and no other the Burke-Wadsworth bill must be appraised. If the answer is affirmative, then the lawmakers should not flinch from enactment of this bill. Nor should they be stayed by the sonorous charges that it is antidemocratic. It is in the best democratic tradition to demand that all men share according to their abilities in the protection of free institutions, providing that civilian standards are restored as soon as the danger is passed."

Salem (Ohio) News: "But it is blind not to see that the only way to preserve what is worth cherishing is to do promptly and decisively what seriously needs to be done."

Salem (Oreg.) Journal: "It must become apparent to any thinking person that if we are to have the manpower necessary for adequate defense, we must enforce compulsion of military training."

Salem (Oreg.) Statesman: "Most any veteran of the World War will testify that military training and experience did not make him a militarist * * * there is actually no valid argument against it. Military traning hurts no one; it promotes democracy through fraternity, rather than building a caste system; it helps to build citizenship; it helps to build bodies, and to some boys it is fun, but they know that real war isn't."

Sandusky (Ohio) News: "Military sentiment in this country is growing at a surprising rate. Recent opinion polls indicate that 85 percent of the people think we are not safe from war."

Sanford (N. C.) Herald: "Military training, almost anyone will admit, is almost universally beneficial from the standpoint of physical fitness. It would be an untold improvement to our national health if every able-bodied man in the United States today had a certain amount of such training. If we ever go to war, our present trained armed forces are pitifully small beside the tremendous manpower that will be demanded. Therefore this manpower should have at least minimum military training and knowledge."

San Angelo (Tex.) Standard: "Should the United States immediately invoke compulsory military training? That question, asked of San Angeloans a year ago, would have drawn a chorus of 'noes.' Yesterday the chrous said, 'Yes,' and in no unmistakable tone. * * * Compulsory military training is the most vital factor in the preparations for war. Britain's fate is the best argument for action now, regardless of how foreign to the old American way it may be."

San Bernardino (Calif.) Telegraph: "Even the professional pacifists whose livelihood depends upon getting together a group so stupid as to be willing to pay for assurances of a false security will encounter tough sledding. * * * Compulsory military service means only that our young men would be able to defend themselves and their country if needs be. It does not mean it would necessarily make militarists of them."

Santa Rosa (Calif.) Press-Democrat: "A growing movement is under way for compulsory military training in the United States. * * * The day of peace idealists, no matter how worthy their object, seems shattered. If we are going to survive in a world of force and violence, we, too, must have force of arms to protect ourselves. Any parent, no matter how he or she might grieve over sending a son away to war, would rather have that son adequately trained to defend himself than to send him untrained against legions of expert warriors."

Schenectady (N. Y.) Union Standard: "There are two steps, which, in our opinion, should be taken immediately. Step No. 1 is compulsory military service. Step No. 2 is the mobilization of the country's industrial resources."

Seattle (Wash.) Post-Intelligencer: "Everyone hopes that war can be avoided. But the fact must be faced that the liberties we enjoy were won by battle and may have to be defended the same way. We will have a better chance of avoiding war if we are prepared for that eventuality. And with universal training we will have an infinitely better chance of avoiding defeat in war, with its horrific implications."

Sheridan (Wyo.) Press: "In our opinion, military training is a very definite advantage for any boy, physically and mentally, and any boy who has a chance to get it is fortunate."

Sioux Falls (S. Dak.) Argus: "The compulsory system should be avoided if it can. It smacks too much of the intense regimentation of the nations that are strictly militaristic and whose sole purpose in life seems to be to prepare for aggression."

Spokane (Wash.) Spokesman-Review: "The necessity for instituting a system of universal military training * * * has been so clear from the start of our vast preparedness undertaking that it seemed strange the plan was not suggested at the same time that Congress was asked to authorize unprecedented expansion of armaments."

Springfield (Ohio) News: "The young man who volunteers to fight may happily need only to volunteer to train. Even this training may have to be made, like service in war, a universal rule. In the paying too, the day of conscription is at hand."

Staunton (Va.) Leader: "'Compulsory military training is undemocratic, illiberal,' say some. Are Switzerland, Finland, Holland, Belgium, France, and now England undemocratic, illiberal? It is necessary for America to become militarized to the extent of maintaining a huge army and navy, and the only fair, democratic, effective way to do it is by conscription."

Steubenville (Ohio) Star: "As the war crisis of 1917 proved, preparation of an army cannot be performed in a few months. Soldiering, even then, was beginning to call for specialists. Today, a soldier who has not learned his trade is hopelessly handicapped. Conscription, in the United States and everywhere else, is one of the unpleasant facts of a world at the mercy of unpleasant individuals."

Syracuse (N. Y.) Herald: "The trouble is that today the voluntary system simply isn't working. Unless it begins to work on a large scale in the very near future, some form of universal military service is inevitable. If the voluntary system fails, as is now indicated, we favor the step."

Swensboro (Ky.) Inquirer: "It is imperative that this country take immediate practical steps. Our greatest need is trained manpower. Compulsory military training should be instituted at once. Now is the time to start. We can prepare for war in peacetime."

Teaneck (N. J.) Times: "Our humble opinion is that people are proving themselves alert to the conditions that confront us and intelligently aware of the dangers we face. Preparations must include compulsory military training for all our physically fit men within the proper age limits in the quickest possible time, or everything else we do and every dollar we spend will merely represent wasted effort and money."

Texarkana (Tex.) Gazette: "Indications are that the United States will be compelled to adopt a system of compulsory military training as a measure of national defense, dictated by new conditions in which the whole world is an armed camp."

Topeka (Kans.) Capital: "Some readers may ask, 'Are you opposed to military preparation?' To that we emphatically answer, 'No.' We are not even absolutely opposed to universal compulsory military service; it may become necessary."

Troy (N. Y.) Record: "Any constitution must set up a government able to defend itself. It must have power to use every resource, including property and human lives. Our Constitution does this."

Tucson (Ariz.) Star: "More than 6 months ago the Star said that in case of a German victory we would have to impost universal military training."

Tulsa (Okla.) World: "It is only sensible for a peaceful nation to take logical steps to prepare itself to turn back the threat of aggression. It is only fair for the Nation to expect universal contributions to that effect."

Tupelo (Miss.) Journal: "No nation in the world can defeat us. (But) even a brutal, inferior group, such as the Nazis, can defeat us unless we are trained and unless we have modern defense equipment. We hope that America will move with unprecedented speed in the training of every one of her citizens and in the production of defense instruments."

Union City (Tenn.) Messenger: "Now be it said to the credit of the Nation, since danger faces, a suggestion of compulsory military training is received with almost universal approval. And why not? Better to adopt a military policy than to be caught unprepared to defend and protect our Nation and its institutions."

Urichsville (Ohio) Chevron: "We shall have a military draft law in this country, with large numbers of men enrolled in training. Our people, greatly shaken by recent world events, are determined to make our country, at least, and our hemisphere, if possible, secure from invasion."

Waltham (Mass.) Tribune: "Senator BARKLEY prophesied that no bill for compulsory military training would be passed at this session of Congress. That is a safe prophecy; on the eve of a political campaign no party will advocate the abandonment of a policy which, with one major and one minor exception, has been maintained since the foundation of the Government. Unless the United States becomes directly involved in war, there are little probabilities of any conscription plan. The plan which was so signally successful in the World War will probably be adopted."

Washington (D. C.) Star: "Favorable reaction in Congress to the selective compulsory military training bill sponsored by the Military Training Camps Association of the United States is a most encouraging indication that the legislators finally have made up their minds to deal with this urgent problem before adjournment. The British put into effect a system of compulsory military training, but by that time the war was so close at hand that there was no time in which to raise, train, and equip an effective army. The grievous consequences of that blunder are all too clear today, and it is simply inconceivable that this country should make the same mistake."

Washington (D. C.) Post: "Should the United States have to defend itself with arms in the future, it could expect no undisturbed period in which to prepare. It would need an army of trained men immediately. Such an army can be prepared in only one way—through routine compulsory military training."

Washington (D. C.) Evening Star: "Plainly, the almost incredible success of the Nazi campaign is based primarily on two factors—first, superior equipment, and, second, troops who were better trained in the use of that equipment. The French soldiers were trained—well trained—but not in the type of war they were forced to fight. * * * In the United States we are beginning the task of assembling the instruments of modern war. But in the equally important matter of preparing an adequate reserve of trained manpower we are doing next to nothing. As one reads of the collapse of France, of Marshal Petain's sorrowful admission that the Republic fell for three reasons—lack of equipment, lack of manpower, lack of determination—it is difficult to believe that we, as a nation, can be so indifferent to our own weakness. But the fact remains that no vigorous effort is being made by the administration or by congressional leaders to set up a system of compulsory military training based on the selective draft, the only fair and effective way in which the necessary number of trained men can be secured."

Washington (N. C.) Progress: "Repugnant as is the idea of compulsory military training for American youth, the state of world affairs suggests the wisdom of such a departure for this country. * * * And the sooner we get started on this policy the better."

West Palm Beach (Fla.) Post: "Whether rightly or wrongly, a majority of Americans have reached the conclusion that a victory for Hitler does constitute a threat to this country. * * * It explains why Congress can vote billions for national defense, with scarcely a murmur of disapproval. It reveals why even a proposal for universal military training was received by the country as a matter of course."

Winston-Salem (N. C.) Journal: "A training system which would teach boys how to perform some manual or technical job, efficiently develop their self-reliance and sense of discipline, and keep them out of mischief would go far, not only toward solving our military defense problem but also our crime and vice problems."

Wichita (Kans.) Beacon: "There is coming an increased realization of the necessity of compulsory military training. Behind all the guns and cannon and warships and airplanes there must be trained men if the defense of this Nation is to be effective. * * * The sooner this Nation adopts some form of national military training the more effective will be the national-defense program."

Yonkers (N. Y.) Statesman: "If military training for youth is chosen by America, that, too, will be universal, allowing in either case exceptions which the constituted authorities may find reasonable. Any other method of handling this matter would be following the totalitarian way, not the American way."

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me before he takes his seat?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. One of the factors bearing upon the imminence or necessity of universal service, of course, is the degree of success or failure which the Army and the Navy are experiencing in respect to voluntary enlistments.

As I understood the distinguished Senator from Vermont yesterday when he interrupted the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], he indicated that there is some dispute as to whether or not enlistments are now proceeding at an adequate and satisfactory rate. I understood the Senator to say that he anticipated receiving authentic information upon that subject. I ask him if he now has it, because I think it is very important.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have been looking for that information, but it has not arrived. If the Senator will permit a further answer which is really not responsive, I should like to make this statement:

In the first place, we must have comparables in order to make a comparison. The figures which the Military Affairs Committee has, and which I quoted at the World's Fair, related to the first 5 months of the year, showing a net gain of between 14,000 and 15,000 men. The gross accretion was stated to be approximately 37,000; but taking into account the mortalities that occur through expiration of enlistment and other causes, the net accretion was said to be between 14,000 and 15,000 for the first 5 months. The figures given to me by General Adams, The Adjutant General, were for the first 6 months. I do not suppose the slack is all taken up in the sixth month, but it may be. So we cannot yet draw a conclusion from the divergence in these figures; but there should be this further consideration of the figures, namely, that these are the first enlistments. They are the response of those who are enthusiastic and patriotic, and are apt to step out quickly. If we are dealing with a quota for a much larger army, and have to take our voluntary enlistments from the last 6 months, the 18 months, and so on, I think it is a fair assumption to make that the stimulus for voluntary enlistment will thin out as we proceed with the larger demand.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The able Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] presented figures from The Adjutant General a few weeks ago upon which I based the same conclusion the Senator from Vermont evidently reached as a conclusion, namely, that voluntary enlistments are behind the quota. As I recall, those figures showed an enlistment of 8,000 men in the Army in 30 days, whereas the quota for July and August would be in the neighborhood of 18,000. So I assumed we were correct in saying that voluntary enlistments are not even now keeping up with the quota. But my understanding of the Senator's statement yesterday was that the War Department denies that assumption.

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, yes; definitely.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And says that the voluntary enlistments are up to the quota.

Mr. AUSTIN. Definitely. The Adjutant General stated to me that the enlistments were satisfactory, and that he did not like to have my statement get out, because its effect might be derogatory, might slow down the spirit of volunteers who are yet to be summoned; and if I have made a mistake, I am trying to correct it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The thing which bothers me is that I do not see how the statement of The Adjutant General can be paralleled with The Adjutant General's statement to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I may interrupt, I call the attention of the Senator from Michigan to a statement in this morning's press by no less an authority than Lt. Gen. Hugh A. Drum, in which he said that the haphazard methods we have been following are incapable of creating an adequate force for defense.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does he deal with the specific question? It seems as though we should have an authentic answer as to whether voluntary enlistments today are furnishing an adequate quota.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think we should have the answer, and I am trying to get it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator know whether the Army favors the conscription bill at the present time?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is another question. I asked specifically of General Adams whether he favored this principle, and he said that he did, that he did not want me to understand that his criticism of my statement was an indication of opposition to the principle of the Burke-Wadsworth bill. I believe the Army does not accept it in the very terms it now contains; that it is their purpose to present amendments, and I believe that the differences will be composed, and that a bill will come out which will be an improvement.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me suggest to the Senator from Vermont, in order to make the record clear, that my understanding is that the Army favors this proposition as a principle to be utilized as a method in case of emergency, but I likewise understand that the present task of the Army is to take the scattered forces of the Army over this country and make them into nine fighting divisions, equipped, insofar as is possible, in a modern way, and to have those divisions ready for call on 24-hour notice; and that in addition to that policy there will be some skeleton companies, composed, for example, of a captain and a lieutenant or two, a couple of sergeants and a couple of corporals, and that the new recruits will be put into those skeleton companies for training; that if all of the remainder of the Army personnel were put into the fighting divisions, so-called, there would not be any officers and noncoms available at this time to train a conscripted army, even if we were to start conscription tomorrow morning. They have just so much capacity for training, and during the time they are organizing these 9 or 10 or 12 fighting divisions, ready to go forward at a moment's notice, they could not take the personnel from those divisions to develop personnel from other sources in order to train and equip a conscript army, even if we had conscription.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, if that is offered as a reason for postponement, I wish to make the comment that first there must be registration, which will take time of itself. Second, there must be an administrative set-up created, and that will take time. Third, the poverty of officers for teaching is not so great as is claimed, I think, and under the selective feature of the proposed law, the law could be put into operation gradually and developed from day to day.

Mr. TYDINGS. What I was attempting to show, in the observation I was making, was that those who are prone to feel that the Army should have conscription now, and wonder why, when the men are not coming, they do not ask for conscription, overlook the fact that at this moment it would create a problem which would accentuate the present difficulty rather than aid in a solution. I was not saying that the Army did not favor setting up the machinery and eventually doing what the Senator suggests, but they do not want to do it now because of the reasons I have outlined.

Mr. AUSTIN. We expect to give the Army an opportunity fully to develop its views about this matter.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have placed in the RECORD, following the remarks of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], a statement entitled "A Declaration Against Conscription."

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A DECLARATION AGAINST CONSCRIPTION

The American people are today being deluged by propaganda for military conscription in peacetime. Sincere and distinguished as many of the proponents of conscription may be, and plausible as many of their contentions may seem, we, the undersigned, urge the American people and their representatives in Congress to deliberate with sober caution before permitting such an unprecedented innovation to become a part of our national life.

In our judgment military conscription in peacetime smacks of totalitarianism, and we are convinced that its adoption would be highly dangerous to the spirit and traditions of American democracy. The reasons upon which we support this conviction are as follows:

First, the essential idea underlying military conscription is the major premise of every dictatorship and all totalitarianism. It is the assumption that the individual citizen is but a pawn in the hands of unlimited state power. Conscription has always been abhorrent to free men because it is, in effect, a seizure of a man's body, time, and service by force and under threat of heavy penalty. For generations millions of Europeans have fled their native countries and become loyal and devoted American citizens in order to enjoy, among other things, our freedom from conscription. Universal military service has been and is today the chief weapon by which dictators suppress free conscience among their people, inculcate them with the false ideals of chauvinistic nationalism, and indoctrinate them with belief in the superiority of brute force over morals and ideas. The adoption of conscription among Americans will be the opening wedge for the totalitarian dogma that individual citizens are pawns of the state from birth until death, without any rights which those in positions of power are bound to respect. Americans must not delude themselves with the belief that their democracy will remain unscathed if we adopt the essentially antidemocratic processes which have worked such havoc abroad.

Second, we consider that peacetime conscription is in itself a flagrant negation of democracy. We reject as transparent sophistry the contention that conscription under the name of "selective service" is democratic and that voluntary military service is undemocratic. The "equality" that conscription makes for is akin to the "equality" which prevails among regimented galley slaves. It is no more democratic than any other form of involuntary servitude. Our American conception of democracy signifies vastly more than mere equality, for it also includes the great concepts of liberty and freedom for the individual. Furthermore, we deny that conscription can be justified by the assertion that it prevails in such democracies as England, Sweden, and Switzerland. The conditions we face in United States are in many respects widely different from and not comparable to those prevailing in European nations. For this reason valid conceptions of American democracy and military service must be derived from American history and tradition, not from contemporary European practices. In our view, peacetime conscription and American democracy are quite incompatible.

Third, the adoption of military conscription in peacetime would be a radical departure from historic American tradition. Never before in American history has it been thought necessary to resort to peacetime conscription for purposes of defense. This fact has been one of the truly glorious traditions of our American democracy; in common with most Americans we take profound pride in it, and we deny that the time has now come to abandon this feature of our national life because of the events in Europe, the gravity of which we well recognize. We are confident that the defense purposes enumerated in the Constitution—"to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasion"—can still be met and effectively discharged without resort to peacetime conscription. As ardently concerned for the safety of our beloved Republic as any advocate of universal service can possibly be, we reject the suggestion that to preserve American democracy we must embrace the worst feature of the totalitarian regimes. We deny that free Americans must now, in the name of freedom, submit to peacetime conscription and thereby become regimented vassals of the national state.

Finally, we oppose conscription because of the disruption it will cause in our American way of life, and also because we question its necessity and wisdom as a defense measure. The military regimentation of the entire manpower of our nation will inevitably result in widespread dislocation in business, industry, agriculture, and higher education; and it may prove unnecessary and ineffectual from a military standpoint. Conscription would have been unnecessary in 1917 if we had been raising a force for the defense of our territory rather than an army of 5,000,000 men for service in Europe. Today the asserted need is for substantial expansion in our Army, Navy, and Air Corps. If the personnel need is for highly trained permanent forces sufficient in number to man expertly the new weapons as they are produced, we contend this need can best be met by voluntary enlistments under pay schedules sufficiently attractive to induce the required numbers to enroll. By such a procedure it may well be that the required enlistments could be obtained before the new weapons themselves are ready. This solution for the asserted need would seem to us to be vastly preferable to the alternative of organizing huge forces of partially trained civilians. It would be free of totalitarian semblance, as it would be in keeping with our democratic traditions and conceptions. Moreover, it would be based on a recognition of the military lesson being taught on European battlefields—that comparatively small forces of highly trained soldier mechanics, properly equipped, can defeat many times their number of partially trained civilian conscripts regardless of how courageous the latter may be.

For these reasons, and for others, we appeal to all our fellow Americans who have a zealous regard for the preservation of their democratic institutions to identify themselves with the cause represented in this declaration.

NOMINATION OF MRS. EVELYN ADAMS WHYTE—RECOMMITTAL

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, on yesterday, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, I reported favorably the nomination of Mrs. Evelyn Adams Whyte, of California, to be recorder of the General Land Office—reappointment. There seems to have been some misunderstanding in reference to the nomination and as to the office itself. I ask unanimous consent that the nomination be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FRANK KNOX

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the first nomination on the Executive Calendar.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Frank Knox, of Illinois, to be Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, in the debate which has been proceeding in the Senate during the last 2 days in relation to the nomination of Colonel Knox and Colonel Stimson, and on other occasions, we have heard much said about the isolationist viewpoint. Columnists have bastardized its meaning by their peculiar bent of mind. Before discussing the matter of Colonel Knox's nomination, I wish briefly to say a few words on a subject which is often misquoted, misstated, and misunderstood, to wit, isolation.

The current of history is gaining daily added momentum. We have just heard a discussion in relation to the subject of preparedness, the question of drawing our youth into the Army by force. Six months ago the discussion of such a subject would have been out of order. But, as I have said, the current of history is moving swiftly.

Not only do words and phrases have their meanings changed, but overnight nations are obliterated and changed. New methods come into use in every field of human activity. Life is indeed literally "on the fly."

Consequently there is no place in a national-preparedness program for "ostrich minds." Such folks should be taken from the controls of government. We need men at the controls who can and will build America strong.

The dictionary defines "isolationist" as one who would have his country remain politically aloof from other countries. I repeat, "politically aloof." In other words, he is one who agrees with the original idea of Washington. He would have his country beware of entangling alliances. Washington, it will be remembered, spoke very clearly on this subject, but I want it understood that Washington suggested that we engage in free intercourse with nations, free commerce with all nations.

In his day Washington recognized that Europe had different ideas of life and living, different political ideas, that Europe consisted of a group of nations entangled by treaties, by hatreds, by prejudices. So he suggested that we have no entangling alliances. Let me make it clear that if we had not followed this injunction, we today would be involved in the European conflict. In other words, if we had entered into treaties in relation to our defense, in relation to the war that is now spreading fast over the world, we would be called upon to defend not ourselves but others. We would be called upon to engage in war in case our ally were attacked. Then what would the situation be? What would we fight with? The distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] yesterday again brought a message to our country which I hope every hamlet will be made aware of. He showed that we could not fight. So clearly did he demonstrate it that there should be no question at all about our intervening or mixing up in any quarrel, at least until we are ready.

Let us make it doubly clear that there is nothing in the isolationist doctrine which prohibits the flow of commerce between the nationals of this country and other countries at war. American nationals today are selling airplanes and munitions and supplies to Britain, and note this, to any other nation that can come to our ports and pay for such articles.

Not only the isolationist but everyone else who does not want to get America into war stands for the doctrine that this country as a political entity must not sell munitions or contraband goods to any combatant.

I said that this country must not sell such goods. That does not prohibit the nationals of this country, corporations, or institutions from selling, but this country must not sell. Why? Because if this country sold them it would not only violate the statute law of this Nation but it would violate international law, and it would be equivalent to intervention. It would mean war.

So we revert to the original idea, that an isolationist is one who does not want this country to mix up with other nations in other hemispheres in their political affairs and wars. He is one who wants no entangling alliances with nations in other hemispheres. Why? Because we know that is the road to war, and war would mean what we heard described very clearly and graphically yesterday on the Senate floor. It would mean the ruin of every democratic principle we have, at least temporarily. It would probably mean the submergence on this continent of all democratic concepts, as they are submerged in France. Besides, it would mean loss of life, destruction of property, and probable loss of the great American values.

An isolationist is one who does not want America to become involved in the quarrels of other nations. Now let us make it clear again so there will be no opportunity for anyone to misunderstand. The United States of America as a nation, under the isolationist theory, should not enter into political arrangements, or treaties, with nations in other hemispheres lest such agreements, arrangements, or treaties involve us in Europe's or Asia's quarrels. But, I reiterate, this does not prohibit any of our people from themselves selling for cash anything they possess to any of the combatant nations, nor does it prohibit any war-minded citizen in this country from joining as an individual the forces now fighting in other lands. He can do more than that. If any citizen himself desires to get into war he can give of his own property. He can give his own life. But the isolationist would prohibit this Government from tying up with foreign nations 130,000,000 people who compose this Government, when such action might result in war.

Again let us make it clear that an isolationist is not a pacifist. He is ready to fight if any of America's rights are invaded. The isolationist stands four-square for preparedness and defense. He says to the world, "America for Americans—the American hemisphere for Americans," and he stands four-square for the Monroe Doctrine.

All America is isolationist-minded according to recent polls. All America would send aid "within the law" to the Allies, but all America would not send her ships or her men, to fight on European soil, in Europe's war, unless such a war should become America's war.

In this stand all America shows her common sense, her horse sense. In the first place, we are unprepared. We can not fight battles nowadays with pea shooters because the other fellow will not fight with such weapons.

As this seems to be the sentiment of all America, it would clarify the situation if the President of the United States were to declare our foreign policy to be as stated above, and declare it unequivocally to conform to 99 percent of the sentiment of this country. It would not be a milksop way of putting it, it would be a strong American way of putting it.

America does not want war, but America will prepare herself so that if she is attacked, or her rights and her sphere of action invaded, she will then be able to defend herself. We must be ready then to put into action the saying that the "best defense is an offense."

Mr. President, as I have said, there has been much misunderstanding about the word "isolationist." It has been due in no small part to some of our columnist friends. There is as much misunderstanding about the word "isolationist" as there has been about the word "liberal."

Folks who have been liberal with other people's money, folks who have been careless with American values, folks who have dug up antiquated ideas and outmoded schemes have been called liberals.

Folks who have softened America even as France was made soft, who have taught that loafing, chiseling, and grafting should be indulged have been called liberals.

Yes, all the folks who advocate dressed-up outmoded methods, antiquated tactics, red-tape processes, caste controls have been called liberals.

But, Mr. President, are they? They have not brought about greater freedom, in political matters. A good many of them thought they were doing so, even as France thought so.

Mr. President, the folks who believe in political isolation, as Washington believed in it, have felt that in our own land there should be greater opportunity for the individual to develop, and less regimentation. They have not believed in the caste system which has prevailed under so-called liberal regimes. France had antiquated minds looking after her interests, that is why she is a vassal state today. We do not want such minds looking after America's interests. We want to be strong within. We want the inventive minds to have a chance. We want the great genius that has been dormant in America to express itself again.

Up through the years America waxed strong, due to the fact that the individual knew that he himself had to do the work of building, because there was not available the Government pap which may be had under so-called liberal leadership.

America must awaken to her dependence on self and build herself anew. She must go forth to meet the responsibilities of the present. She must get rid of the rut-ist mind, the mind that becomes set, and remains set. We have had too much of that in our armed forces. We have not had enough men like Billy Mitchell who had vision—to do what? To protect America. No, the rut-ist mind, the ostrich mind, has no place in American defense. We must adventure again, explore again, and get rid of antiquated, outmoded thoughts, actions, and methods. Let the crusading spirit be awakened again in America and we will build its defense.

As I said the other day when speaking in the Senate Chamber in relation to Billy Mitchell, "I pray God that his spirit may enliven and give vision to the men who control the safety of our America."

There have been at the controls of our Government too many men with ostrich minds, men calling themselves liberals. There have been too few isolationists—men who would build America strong.

Mr. President, I have listened to the arguments in relation to the nomination of Colonel Knox, and it seems to me that the issue is flatly presented in this way: What effect upon the country would the appointment of Colonel Knox have? Would the appointment mean war, peace, more preparedness, more defense, more safety?

We all recognize that, unless there is some vital objection, nominations submitted by the Executive of the Nation ordinarily are confirmed by the Senate as a matter of course. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] yesterday presented clearly the obligations of the Senate and the President in this matter. Each has a constitutional field.

The objections we have heard so far are not that Colonel Knox is a Republican but that he thinks as the President does in relation to intervention, or aid to the Allies. To me the fact that he is a Republican should enhance his value.

Lincoln realized that a difference of opinion in his Cabinet made for strength. He wanted independent minds. After listening to the editorials by Colonel Knox which the distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] put into the RECORD a few days ago, I am sure Colonel Knox has an independent mind, such a mind as is needed in the Cabinet of the President.

These editorials of Colonel Knox indicate clearly a grasp upon New Deal policies and their effect upon the Nation. They also show a keen character analysis of our political leaders.

After years of business baiting, this administration has now turned to industry to grind out its defense program; and it seems logical that now, after a woeful lack of defense preparation, the administration should seek the type of leadership represented by men like Colonel Knox.

This brings us to the real objection which has been raised relative to this appointment, the objection that Colonel Knox thinks as the President does in relation to the war situation, or, as it was phrased yesterday, that his appointment would create a war Cabinet. Much has been said on the floor of the Senate which would indicate that possibly Mr. Stimson's views too closely parallel certain administration views which might cause America to intervene. I can find no such degree of parallelism between the views of the President and those of Colonel Knox. An analysis of all the testimony thus far presented does not appear to bear out the conclusion that Colonel Knox is an interventionist. I should say that Colonel Knox is a "preparedist," a man who would prepare. I trust that before I have concluded I shall show why I think he should become a part of the "picture."

The testimony bears out the conclusion that Colonel Knox is sympathetic toward the Allies—now England, and what England represents. I heard him say in the committee room words to this effect: "I would see that England receives munitions and all the things she needs; not that I love England so much, but that there is need for a wall to stand between this Nation and the forces of destruction while we are preparing." In substance, those were his words. In that respect he shares the views of almost 99 percent of the people of this country, who feel that England's Navy has been and will continue to be a line of defense for America against the Nazi, Fascist, and Communist revolution.

Colonel Knox has stated that he is not in favor of violating the law of this country or international law, or doing things which might be construed as intervention or an act of war. He is in favor of seeing that England obtains all the legitimate and humanitarian aid it is possible for us to give her within the law. As has already been indicated, the phrase "within the law" is very important. In other words, he would have England able to buy in this country airplanes, contraband material, and everything she needs from the nationals—not the Government—of this country, provided she pays for them. As a matter of fact, any other combatant nation has the same rights, as I have stated.

We now revert to the principal issue. What effect upon the country would the appointment of Colonel Knox have? It seems likely that the appointment of Colonel Knox would have a healthy effect. This powerful and energetic Chicagoan retains his valuable capacity for getting things done. He retains his capacity for leading the "strenuous life" which he learned from his one-time chief, Col. Teddy Roosevelt. Make no mistake about it; he will need all his tremendous reserve of vitality and all his capacity for strenuous living to perform the tremendous job which will be presented to him.

When we think of this man's appointment, let us remember that he is the man who joined with Teddy Roosevelt to ride up San Juan Hill. These are days when we need men who can speak softly, but who carry a "big stick." I pray that he may be a great instrumentality in providing this Government with such a "big stick."

I do not necessarily agree with Colonel Knox's demand that we should have a two-ocean Navy, although I do believe that our Navy could be infinitely better along some of the lines he has advocated. I believe that in the interest of national solidarity Colonel Knox will at least be able effectively to press for the creation of an invulnerable armada, an armada whose activities would be more closely integrated with our air arm. I do not necessarily concur in every phase of Colonel Knox's foreign policy, but I am impressed by his dynamic plan for the formation of an aviation unit to recruit 10,000 volunteer pilots. This plan was launched weeks ago, and was put over almost immediately.

I am impressed by the fact that Colonel Knox combines the practical experience of a hard-hitting business executive—which we have been lacking for the past 7 years—with the practical experience of a one-time soldier. Colonel Knox is no theorist. The Government has been shot through with theorists. When the United States entered the World War, Colonel Knox enlisted in the Army. He became a major on the western front. When he was mustered out, in 1919, he retained a colonel's commission in the Three Hundred and Sixty-fifth Field Artillery Reserve for the next decade and a half.

Such a man can be a constructive force in aiding the Government to keep out of war and to secure preparedness. He is a man of ability and experience, and apparently his selection results from that very fact. I say "apparently" because some persons claim that these selections were made because of political reasons. I, for one, am reluctant to believe that anyone would play politics in such responsible appointments in trying times such as these. I know that if Colonel Knox should fail to do his part in securing preparedness for the country, he personally would be condemned, and the President would be condemned. If he should secure preparedness for this country, everyone can afford to bestow praise where praise is due.

My concern is not with the political implications of this appointment. I realize that Colonel Knox is faced with a tremendous task. The extent of the task is undoubtedly greater because Colonel Knox will have to start almost from scratch. I realize also that it has been charged that no man will be able completely to accomplish what is now demanded. As a consequence, it may be that Colonel Knox will be placed in the position of pulling someone else's chestnuts out of the fire, so that if he should fail the blame would be laid at his doorstep rather than that of the administration. I hesitate to make such an indictment. I prefer to believe that the Chief Executive is making a conscientious effort to reach out and obtain men of a different political persuasion to do a job which they may be better equipped to do than men of his own political faith. My sole interest in this appointment is to see that Colonel Knox will give leadership, so that our country may be properly looked after and safeguarded.

I met Colonel Knox for the first time in the campaign of 1936. I am satisfied that when he becomes Secretary of the Navy he will use his head. That is more than can be said for some Government officials, who should have been using their heads in recent years. He will not be merely a figure head. He will probably reach out and obtain the ideas of men who do not belong to the Navy clique. He will obtain men with inventive ideas, men with vision. I should not be surprised to see him anticipate much of what is now being considered in Europe, and make our ships more nearly immune to attack by torpedoes and bombs. He will consider new methods, new ways—and probably less expensive ways—to defend this country. He will not be asleep on the job.

In my opinion, the country needs men with such qualities. I believe that Colonel Knox is a man of common sense. I am sure he would not want to get this country into war. He knows that we are unprepared. He knows war, because he was in two wars. He also knows what war would do to this country. I also believe he recognizes the significant fact that the greatest aid which could be given to England would be for America to stay out of the war, so that England, now fighting the battle alone, may buy in this country her arms, munitions, and other goods.

At any rate, I am glad to observe that the Chief Executive has finally arrived at the conclusion that if he is to get anything done he must obtain Republicans to do it. His recognition of this fact confirms what great sections of the country recognized in 1938, and what all the country will recognize and affirm in November 1940.

Mr. President, if I believed for one moment that this appointment was an attempt to foist an impossible job—made impossible by our present woeful lack of preparedness—upon a Republican so that he might then be blamed for a failure to complete our defense program, I could not sanction the appointment. If the appointment were made with the idea that through it there might result an unholy coalition predetermined and bent on war, I could not support it. However, I cannot believe such things; and I, for one, prefer to credit the Chief Executive with good faith. It is inconceivable to me that in these trying times anyone could act on such matters in anything but good faith. The President wants Colonel Knox and Mr. Stimson as members of a preparedness Cabinet. He needs such men to do a man-sized job.

Mr. President, in general it seems to me that the appointment of Col. Frank Knox is a sound move in bolstering confidence in the administration of our vast national-defense program. How important that is! The American people need a restoration of confidence, coupled with the desire to go to work, as suggested yesterday by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], not simply for 40 hours a week, but to go to work unitedly, as a nation, with one great object in mind—to be so prepared that anyone thinking about tackling us would fear the "big stick."

Colonel Knox should bring to the Navy Department both his practical insight into service needs and his executive experience as an outstanding businessman. He is a first-class fighting man, and he is able, trained, and energetic.

Mr. President, I believe that national defense must be neither Republican nor Democratic. If there is any competition between our major political parties with reference to defense, it should be the honest competition of each party attempting to render the fullest measure of leadership and patriotic service.

Our approval or disapproval of the selection of these two Cabinet officials must be based solely on America's best interests. I believe that Colonel Knox's selection will serve those interests.

Mr. President, these are dark days. Out of the shadows must emerge great leadership—leadership which transcends political expediency, leadership which calls lustily for nonpartisan American action on important issues. I believe Colonel Knox can supply such leadership.

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Bulow	Connally	Green

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

SELECTION OF PERSONNEL FOR ENLARGED ARMY

As in legislative session,

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am today introducing a bill which has as its stated purpose to procure a highly selected personnel for a Regular Army of 750,000 men. The bill provides for a compulsory registration of all males between the ages of 21 and 25, from which number would be selected enough men to bring the Regular Army up to a strength of 750,000.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is the Senator's bill compulsory?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Under it all men from 21 to 25 would be registered, and from them there would be selected a sufficient number to recruit the Army up to the strength suggested by the Senator?

Mr. LODGE. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why stop at 25 years of age? I know of many very patriotic people who are older than that and who, seemingly, are interested in military affairs.

Mr. LODGE. The reason I have placed a limitation of from 21 to 25 is in order to avoid the delay which is incident to any wholesale registration. If there were a requirement to register all those between the ages of 18 and 65, it would take a much longer time than if those from 20 to 45 were registered, and, of course, the registration of those from 21 to 25 would take less time. I want to get men to meet the present situation.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas has no desire to quarrel with the Senator from Massachusetts. I want to say for myself, however, that while I hope we will never have war, in the next war, if it should come, I shall not consent to the sending of all the boys to war to be shot to pieces, and leaving at home a lot of the old boys who ought to be right by their side if we should have a war. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend for a moment. Under the rules of the Senate all demonstrations, applause, and conversation on the part of the occupants of the galleries are prohibited. Visitors in the galleries are here as guests of the Senate, and, as guests of the Senate, they will observe the rules of the Senate. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I continue to yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Chair for his admonition to the galleries, but it looks as if every time I get any approval somebody has got to disapprove the approval. [Laughter.]

I wish to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that the boys have not had their chance in life. If when they get out of high school they are thrown into the Army and then sent to the battlefield, they will never have their chance. I am in favor of raising the age limits, when it becomes necessary to raise them, so as to take in some of the old fellows in some of the higher brackets who are sort of loose with their mouths and strong for patriotism, provided somebody else will do the fighting.

Mr. LODGE. I agree with the Senator 100 percent, not only as to those in the higher brackets but I should like, if the Burke bill ever comes up, to strike out the provision for the exemption of Members of Congress. I would take in everybody. But this bill is merely a limited, specific, short-view proposition to bring the Army up to a respectable strength now. It is not a general proposal to establish a military policy over a long period of years. Of course, the Senator from Texas is entirely correct. We ought to distribute the burden so as to cover everybody, rich and poor alike, old and young, and make it as sweeping as we possibly can; but to meet the immediate situation in which the Army is not able to get soldiers, we want to avoid delay, and, Mr. President, we all know that the men who are best fitted to go out and operate military weapons are the men in their early twenties. There can be no argument about that.

I continue my description of the bill.

As I have said, it provides for a compulsory registration of all males between the ages of 21 and 25, from which would be selected enough men to bring the Regular Army up to a strength of 750,000. If the Army attains its expected total of 375,000 under existing law, this would leave a total to be procured by my bill of 375,000 more.

The bill contains provisions for the creation of a reserve from those who have served under its terms. It provides for service for 1 year in time of peace, and for a continuation of service during war.

Men would become liable for military service by lot with selection on the basis of fitness for service.

There is no exemption for public officials contained in the bill.

I think, Mr. President, there is a unanimity of professional opinion that the United States needs an efficient army which is immediately available for field service, such an army, of course, to be used entirely for our own defense. The times call for placing the emphasis on mechanized armies fully equipped and highly trained.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator says an army that is only to be used "for our own defense." Is that what the bill provides?

Mr. LODGE. No; that is my own view. In my opinion, the United States Army and Navy should only be used for the defense of the United States.

Mr. CONNALLY. In no event outside the United States? Would the Senator stop at the seashore?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; certainly not. I use the word "defense" in the general comprehensive sense of defending America and its essential outposts; and, of course, if we see somebody coming at us, naturally we go out and stop them.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator would defend the Western Hemisphere, would he not?

Mr. LODGE. I would defend what I described here the other day as the base area, which is North America, Central America, and the coasts of the Caribbean.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator would not go down to South America?

Mr. LODGE. I doubt whether I would see much point in fighting for the Falkland Islands, off the tip end of South America.

Mr. CONNALLY. How about Colombia, which adjoins the Panama Canal?

Mr. LODGE. That is different.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is getting over into South America now.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; that is correct. That is what I said; I said the coasts of the Caribbean.

Mr. CONNALLY. What about Greenland? Would the Senator regard that as in the Western Hemisphere?

Mr. LODGE. Not only would I regard Greenland as in the Western Hemisphere but also Iceland.

Mr. CONNALLY. Iceland, or Ireland? [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Again the Chair must caution the occupants of the galleries that no laughter, no signs of either approval or disapproval are permitted under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator said that he would use the Army and Navy only for the defense of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought we had already announced here, by solemn legislative act, that we would not permit the transfer of any territory in the Western Hemisphere from one non-American power to another. It might be necessary for us to maintain that doctrine, and I am for maintaining it, with all the armed and naval forces we have and with all of our resources. If we are to maintain that doctrine, it might become necessary for us to use the Army for something other than purely North American self-defense, but for offensive operations as against those who might attack territories in the Western Hemisphere. I did not want the Senator to maneuver himself into a position in which we would have an army which, when it got down the road a certain distance, would have to stop because there was a traffic sign there and it could not go any farther.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no. I am much obliged to the Senator. Not only am I immensely flattered that he should take so much interest in my proposition, but I really appreciate his solicitude that I shall not be lured into an improper position.

There is no real conflict that I can see between us. I used the word "defense" in a general sense. Call it "the preservation of the United States" or any word you want to use; but I do not want to draw the sword except for an American cause. Let me put it that way.

As I was saying, Mr. President, I think the times call for placing the emphasis on mechanized armies that are fully equipped and highly trained, rather than on the development of huge mass armies with relatively little mechanization. If we have learned any lesson from the terrible war in Europe, I think it is that a modern army simply cannot be created after war is begun, and that if we do not actually possess military strength at the outbreak of the war we shall not be given time to develop it.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. I am sure the Senator from Massachusetts will be interested to know that Col. Frederick Palmer, who testified before the Military Affairs Committee the other day, said that only a small percentage of the great German Army was mechanized.

Mr. LODGE. In this particular case I used the word "mechanized" in its broadest sense, to include motorized equipment and all the mechanical appliances. Of course, if tanks alone are to be counted as mechanization, the statement of the Senator from Indiana is correct. If trucks and motor transport are counted as mechanization, I should imagine that almost all of the German soldiers, certainly a great many of them, were transported in motors.

Mr. MINTON. I was surprised to hear from this authority, who was an eye-witness to the operations on the front quite recently, that this small percentage of the great German Army was mechanized.

Mr. LODGE. I think that statement is very interesting.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. KING. Referring to the statement made by the Senator from Indiana, I wonder if he meant that the German Army, when it invaded France and Belgium, had a limited number of tanks. I recall reading that several thousand—perhaps 10,000—tanks were taken into France and into Belgium in the advance of the German Army. It seems to me that if we regard tanks as a part of the mechanized system, the German Army was pretty well mechanized.

Mr. LODGE. It is a question of percentage. A mechanized division contains about 10,000 men; and if you have, let us say, 10 divisions, that is 100,000 men. Out of an army of several million, of course, that is not a very large percentage measured from the standpoint of men; but judging it by its effect on the battlefield and its relative importance from a tactical standpoint, of course, it is very much greater.

The general statement still holds true, however, that in a war in which machinery plays a large part—whether it is tanks, or whether it is trucks, or whether it is electrical devices for recording the range of artillery, or whether it is photography, or whether it is electric welding, or whether it is any one of a hundred different occupations that are essential to the daily routine of a modern army—those things cannot be improvised on short notice; and when I use the term "mechanized" here, I use it in its broadest possible sense to describe our whole civilization. We have a mechanized civilization in time of peace, and that gives us a mechanized army in time of war; and that, I submit, is something that we cannot improvise on short notice.

Mr. President, prolonged studies by the War Department have long fixed 750,000 as the number of men who in all probability would be sufficient, in conjunction with the Navy, to defend America and its essential outposts. This is only a little larger, let me say, than the late Belgian Army. Congress has approved this study, and has appropriated funds to procure the weapons and equipment for an army of this size; and this equipment, as we all know, is supposed to be ready by December 1941 or early in 1942.

It is obvious that this equipment is worthless without men who know how to operate and fight it. There has been, however, a reluctance to procure the men. The plain fact is that we cannot have an army without men. To date, Congress has appropriated funds for an army of 375,000, such an army to be recruited by voluntary enlistment. It is a matter of common knowledge that for numerous reasons men are not enlisting in large numbers. The Army, at the last report I received, was experiencing difficulty in obtaining the men for an army of 280,000. What the result will be in its efforts to grow to 375,000 by voluntary means can only be conjectured; but I call the attention of the Senate to the statement in the press today by Lt. Gen. Hugh Drum, who surely is an authority of the highest standing, that the present—and I quote—"haphazard method" will never produce men adequate for the Army.

It seems to me clear that the voluntary system is not working. Faced with this fact, some persons suggest that men now on the rolls of the Civilian Conservation Corps and other Government relief agencies be placed in the military service. To my mind, to single out boys for combat service simply because they are of moderate financial means is undemocratic and unjust. The only fair way is to raise the necessary troops from all elements of the population, rich and poor alike.

My bill calls for only 375,000 men in addition to what the Army now has. That is a figure which is so small in comparison with the population of the country that it would create no dislocation whatever and would make it possible for the selections to be made almost entirely from men who are without dependents. As I said to the Senator from Texas, it would avoid the tremendous delay which is inevitable if we try to have a registration that embraces the entire male population.

It is my hope that by developing a standing army of 750,000 we may avoid the necessity for a mass draft and conscription of the total manpower of the country later on.

Ideally speaking, a relatively small army consisting of men who are temperamentally, physically, and mentally qualified for the military life is superior to a much larger body recruited in a wholesale higgledy-piggledy fashion, and including many individuals who are not adapted to the military life. We must not, in our bill, take in so much that we put weapons into the hands of the "fifth columnists" in this country. When we give a man military training and make him the power that he becomes by virtue of that training, I think we ought to know something about him; and we ought not to do it on a wholesale, rough-and-ready basis.

I point out that the army which Germany was allowed to have after the Versailles Treaty was limited to 100,000 men. The Allies prohibited Germany from having general conscription. What was the result? The result was that every rear-rank private in the German Army was a man of officer material; and all of those men, I am advised, are officers today.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I wish the Senator would be kind enough to develop the last point just a bit further, if he will. It is a most interesting point, and I think highly significant to the purposes he explains to us.

Mr. LODGE. Has the Senator in mind the difference between a professional standing army and a wholesale conscription?

Mr. DANAHER. I had in mind particularly how the officer material was created by the replacement of 100,000 men periodically, and their extraordinary selectivity in the first place.

Mr. LODGE. What they did is what I have covered in the title of the bill, provide a highly selected personnel. They were limited to an army that was very small, by all previous standards, but they exercised the greatest care in enlisting men in that army, so that every man they took into the army and trained was a man of the utmost merit. They continued along that line, never having anything but the highest quality, which gave them a nucleus, the results of which are apparent to the world today.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I have not heard all of the Senator's explanation of his bill. Are there provisions in the bill as to the method of selection, and providing a proper method for determining, under the selective plan, who would be suitable and who would not be suitable for military service? It seems to me that it would be a very difficult task if there were devolved upon a board the duty of determining the selection, those who are to be brought into the Army and those who are to be excluded.

Mr. LODGE. I agree with the Senator that that is a very important question. The way I approach it is by providing for registration of young men, and then for selection by lot from such registration. Then those who have been selected by lot will receive tests to determine their fitness for service.

Of course, the findings of local boards would be of great importance in a matter of that kind, because while a man's physical qualifications can be described, and he can be given intelligence tests, there is a certain knowledge of a man in his community which a local board could impart. In brief, that is the provision I have made for that particular feature.

Let me say, in conclusion, that the bill is not introduced with any idea of taking a long view. It is introduced with the specific purpose of meeting the present situation. We have provided for the weapons, and we all know we should have men for the weapons, and we are not getting men. This is an attempt to meet that practical situation right now, in July 1940. I do not try in this bill to set up a system of military training for all boys when they reach a certain age. However desirable that may be—and there is much to be said for it—the first duty confronting us is to build up our defenses in this particular year 1940.

I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to introduce the bill, as in legislative session, for reference to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be received, as in legislative session, and referred as requested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The bill (S. 4202) to procure a highly selected personnel for a Regular Army of 750,000, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 874)

Mr. LUCAS obtained the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As in legislative session, the Chair will ask the Senator from Illinois to permit the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the President of the United States.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Andrews	Ellender	Lucas	Sheppard
Ashurst	Frazier	Lundeen	Shipstead
Austin	George	McCarran	Slattery
Bailey	Gerry	McKellar	Smathers

Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Calif.	Reed	Wiley
Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Reynolds
Danaher	King	Russell
Davis	La Follette	Schwartz

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] has been recognized, but the Chair, as in legislative session, was about to lay before the Senate a message from the President of the United States. The clerk will read the message.

The message was read, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

As President of the United States and as Commander in Chief of its armed forces, I come again to the representatives of the people in Congress assembled, to lay before them an extraordinary estimate of funds and authorizations required for the national defense.

In my opinion, it is necessary now that the people of this Nation and their representatives in Congress look at the problem of the national defense with utterly dispassionate realism. Never have we as a nation attempted to define the word "defense" in terms of a specific attack at a certain place at a certain time or with specified land and sea forces. In the long sweep of the century and a half since our defenses have been concentrated and unified under the Constitution, it has been a prime obligation of the President and Commander in Chief promptly to advise the Congress with respect to any world circumstances calling for either increased or diminished defense needs.

From time to time during the last 7 years, I have not failed to advise the people and their representatives of grave dangers threatening the United States and its people, and the institutions of democracy everywhere. From time to time I have availed myself of opportunities to reassert and to implement the right of all the nations of the American hemisphere to freedom from attack or control by any non-American power.

A year and a half ago, on January 4, 1939, in my address to the Congress, I referred to the fact that I had felt it necessary on previous occasions to warn of disturbances abroad, and the need of putting our own house in order in the face of storm signals from across the seas. On that day I said that a war which threatened to envelop the world in flames had been averted, but that it had become increasingly clear that peace was not assured. I said then that all about us raged undeclared wars, military and economic. I said then that all about us were threats of new aggression, military and economic. I said then that the storms from abroad directly challenged three institutions indispensable to Americans—religion, democracy, and international good faith.

Unhappily, many Americans believed that those who thought they foresaw the danger of a great war, were mistaken. Unhappily, those of us who did foresee that danger were right.

A week later, on January 12, 1939, I submitted a program considered by me as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and by my advisers to be a minimum program for the necessities of defense, saying that every American was aware of the peaceful intentions of this Government and of this people, and that every American knew that we have no thought of aggression and no desire for further territory. The Congress granted that request for the minimum program then deemed necessary.

At the beginning of September the storm broke, and on the 21st of that month, in a message to the extraordinary session of the Congress, I said that this Government must lose no time or effort to keep this Nation from being drawn into the war, and I asserted my belief that we would succeed in these efforts. We have succeeded. I believe we shall continue to succeed.

In September last I increased the strength of the Army, Navy, Coast Guard, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation within statutory authorizations made by the Congress. In January 1940 I submitted a Budget to the Congress which included provision for that expansion of personnel, as well as estimates for the national defense, amounting to approximately $2,000,000,000 for the fiscal year 1941.

On May 16, in a message to the Congress, I pointed out that the swift and shocking developments of that time forced every neutral nation to look to its defenses in the light of new factors loosed by the brutal force of modern offensive war. I called attention to the treacherous use of the "fifth column," by which persons supposed to be peaceful visitors were actually a part of an enemy unit of occupation, and called especial attention to the necessity for the protection of the whole American Hemisphere from control, invasion, or domination. I asked at that time for a sum totaling $1,182,000,000 for the national defense.

On May 31, 1940, I again sent a message to the Congress to say that the almost incredible events of the then past 2 weeks in the European conflict had necessitated another enlargement of our military program, and at that time I asked for $1,277,741,170 for the acceleration and development of our military and naval needs as measured in both machines and men.

Again today, in less than 2 months' time, the changes in the world situation are so great and so profound that I must come once again to the Congress to advise concerning new threats, new needs, and the imperative necessity of meeting them. Free men and free women in the United States look to us to defend their freedom against all enemies, foreign and domestic. Those enemies of freedom who hate free institutions now deride democratic governments as weak and inefficient.

We, the free men and women of the United States, with memories of our fathers to inspire us and the hopes of our children to sustain us, are determined to be strong as well as free. The apologists for despotism and those who aid them by whispering defeatism or appeasement assert that because we have not devoted our full energies to arms and to preparation for war that we are now incapable of defense.

I refute that imputation.

We fully understand the threat of the new enslavement in which men may not speak, may not listen, may not think. As these threats become more numerous and their dire meaning more clear, it deepens the determination of the American people to meet them with wholly adequate defense.

We have seen nation after nation, some of them weakened by treachery from within, succumb to the force of the aggressor. We see great nations still gallantly fighting against aggression, encouraged by high hope of ultimate victory.

That we are opposed to war is known not only to every American but to every government in the world. We will not use our arms in a war of aggression; we will not send our men to take part in European wars.

But we will repel aggression against the United States or the Western Hemisphere. The people and their representatives in the Congress know that the threats to our liberties, the threats to our security, the threats against our way of life, the threats to our institutions of religion, of democracy, and of international good faith have increased in number and gravity from month to month, from week to week, and almost from day to day.

It is because of these rapid changes, it is because of the grave danger to democratic institutions, and, above all, it is because of the united will of the entire American people that I come to ask you for a further authorization of $4,848,171,957 for the national defense.

Let no man in this country or anywhere else believe that because we in America still cherish freedom of religion, of speech, of assembly, of the press—that because we maintain our free democratic political institutions by which the Nation after full discussion and debate chooses its representatives and leaders for itself—let no man here or elsewhere believe that we are weak.

The United States is the greatest industrial nation in the world. Its people, as workers and as businessmen, have proved that they can unite in the national interest and that they can bring together the greatest assembly of human skills, of mechanical production, and of national resources ever known in any nation.

The principal lesson of the war up to the present time is that partial defense is inadequate defense.

If the United States is to have any defense, it must have total defense.

We cannot defend ourselves a little here and a little there. We must be able to defend ourselves wholly and at any time.

Our plans for national security, therefore, should cover total defense. I believe that the people of this country are willing to make any sacrifice to attain that end.

After consultation with the War and Navy Departments and the Advisory Commission of the Council of National Defense, I recommend a further program for the national defense. This contemplates the provision of funds and authorizations for the material requirements without which the manpower of the Nation, if called into service, cannot effectively operate, either in the production of arms and goods or their utilization in repelling attack.

In broad outline, our immediate objectives are as follows:

First. To carry forward the naval expansion program designed to build up the Navy to meet any possible combination of hostile naval forces.

Second. To complete the total equipment for a land force of approximately 1,200,000 men, though of course this total of men would not be in the Army in time of peace.

Third. To procure reserve stocks of tanks, guns, artillery, ammunition, and so forth, for another 800,000 men or a total of 2,000,000 men if a mobilization of such a force should become necessary.

Fourth. To provide for manufacturing facilities, public and private, necessary to produce critical items of equipment required for a land force of 2,000,000 men, and to produce the ordnance items required for the aircraft program of the Army and Navy—guns, bombs, armor, bomb sights, and ammunition.

Fifth. Procurement of 15,000 additional planes for the Army and 4,000 for the Navy, complete with necessary spare engines, armaments, and the most modern equipment.

The foregoing program deals exclusively with matériel requirements. The Congress is now considering the enactment of a system of selective training for developing the necessary manpower to operate this matériel and manpower to fill Army noncombat needs. In this way we can make certain that when this modern matériel becomes available, it will be placed in the hands of troops trained, seasoned, and ready, and that replacement matériel can be guaranteed.

I take this occasion to report the excellent progress being made for the procurement of the equipment already ordered under authorization by the Congress. Every week more and more is being delivered. The several branches of the Government are working in close cooperation with each other and with private manufacturers.

We are keeping abreast of developments in strategy, tactics, and technique of warfare, and build our defenses accordingly.

The total amount which I ask of the Congress in order that this program may be carried out with all reasonable speed is $2,161,441,957, which it is estimated would be spent out of the Treasury between now and July 1, 1941, and an additional $2,686,730,000 for contract authorizations.

So great a sum means sacrifice. So large a program means hard work—the participation of the whole country in the total defense of the country. This Nation through sacrifice and work and unity proposes to remain free.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 10, 1940.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Without objection, the message of the President will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2751) to repeal sections 3711, 3712, and 3713 of the Revised Statutes which relate to the purchase in the District of Columbia of coal and wood for public use, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 73) authorizing the printing of the proceedings at the unveiling of the painting depicting the signing of the Constitution of the United States as a document, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

FRANK KNOX

The Senate resumed the consideration of the nomination of Frank Knox, of Illinois, to be Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I presume that what I shall say on the floor of the Senate this afternoon will make little or no difference in connection with the final vote on the confirmation of the nomination of Col. Frank Knox, who has been nominated by the President to be Secretary of the Navy. However, it seems to me that in view of the charges which have been made on the floor of the Senate that this man is an interventionist and a warmonger, and desires to precipitate the Nation into war, at least I should do him justice by correcting the record in the United States Senate, even though it may not influence a single vote.

There is perhaps another reason why I should not delay the vote upon the confirmation of Colonel Knox's nomination. Yesterday on the floor of the Senate we heard condemnation because of delay, red tape, and indecision on the part of certain governmental agencies in dealing with our tremendous defense program. Yet the nomination of Colonel Knox was sent to the Senate on June 20, just 3 weeks ago, and we are just now getting around to the point of voting either to confirm or reject the nomination. We have required 1 week longer to reach a decision upon this very important appointment, in an hour of emergency, than Germany required to overrun the entire nation of Poland.

Mr. President, I have been a Member of the United States Senate for only a very short time. During my incumbency in office representing the State of Illinois I have never heard a measure dealing with our national-defense program or our foreign policy discussed without hearing from some source the statement that what we were doing in the way of changing the Nation's foreign policy or aiding our national defense was placing America on the road to war. I have heard that expression in the United States Senate, and over the radio. I have seen it in the press, and I have heard it on street corners, until I sometimes wonder how I have been able to keep my feet on the ground and not join the chorus of those who cry, "On the road to war," or "Down the road to war," or "This means war." That cry has been going on in this country for the past two years or more; and yet today America is still at peace, notwithstanding the utterances of many who were no doubt sincere in their belief that what the administration was doing at certain times was a step toward war.

During the neutrality debates a year ago I distinctly recall that more than one Senator and more than one newspaper editor, through the news items and editorial columns, stated that if we should repeal the arms embargo it would be the first step toward entering the present European war. All through those debates that school of thought was presented to the American people with such force that letter after letter came to my office from mothers of sons who believed that if we should repeal the arms embargo immediately the sons of America would be marching in the streets, going off to war.

Mr. President, we recall that when we walked through the corridor of this building to hear the President's message delivered at the extraordinary session last year, a group of patriotic ladies surrounded Senators as they passed through the corridor and displayed all types of slogans urging us not to repeal the arms embargo because it would mean immediate war. Yet, notwithstanding the propaganda which went out over the country at that time, we did repeal the arms embargo, and in addition we formulated and placed upon the statute books the cash-and-carry plan.

Throughout these debates we have not heard a single word about the argument which was made a year ago with respect to the repeal of the Embargo Act. Every Senator who has discussed our possible entry into the war has used the Neutrality Act which we passed a year ago as a basis for his argument. He has advised the Senate and the public that it is probably the real reason why we are not in the war at this particular time.

I recall that many Senators voted against the Neutrality Act because they placed the importance of repeal of the arms embargo above that of the cash-and-carry plan; but to my knowledge not one word has been said in the debates on the confirmation of these two men as to what would have happened to the country if we had not repealed the Arms Embargo Act. At this particular moment the entire case of a Senator who voted against the repeal of the embargo and against the cash-and-carry plan rests upon the latter, and not the former.

In the present discussion we hear the words "warmongers" and "interventionists." We hear Senators saying that if Colonel Knox becomes a member of the Cabinet he will attempt to take the country into war.

Mr. President, yesterday the able Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], referring to the President of the United States and the various speeches he has made from time to time upon this very question, quoted from three or four speeches, or at least quoted the titles of them, leaving the impression with the country—as the Repulicans have constantly done—that the President of the United States wants war. I challenge that statement. Anyone who cares to take the time to read carefully the speech which the President of the United States made in October 1937, in the city of Chicago, when he was dedicating a new bridge, will surely understand and appreciate the prescience and statesmanship of President Roosevelt when he made that great speech.

Mr. President, I do not believe I am right all the time. If anyone can show me wherein I am in error, I am always willing to admit my mistake, and to go along with a policy or program which I believe to be right. I have always tried to be big enough to do so. When the President of the United States made that speech in the city of Chicago I said he was wrong. I thought it was a bold and daring thing to do. I did not think he was right, and I did not have any hesitancy in so expressing my views. But, Mr. President, President Roosevelt was so uncannily correct in his analysis of the world situation at that particular time that I take off my hat to him. In view of the remarks made yesterday by the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], let me read exactly what the President said on that occasion.

Among other things, he said:

> It seems to be unfortunately true that the epidemic of world lawlessness is spreading. When an epidemic of political disease starts to spread, the community approves and joins in a quarantine of the patients in order to protect the health of the community against the spread of the disease.
> It is my determination to pursue a policy of peace.

That last statement is always omitted. Those who are constantly condemning the President of the United States for being an aggressor and wanting to get the Nation into war never use anything except the paragraph which I have just read; but I ask the Senate and the country to listen to what President Roosevelt said in 1937, after he made that statement:

> It is my determination to pursue a policy of peace and to adopt every practicable measure to avoid involvement in war. It ought to be inconceivable that in this modern era, and in the face of experience, any nation could be so foolish and ruthless as to run the risk of plunging the whole world into war by invading and violating, in contravention of solemn treaties, the territory of other nations that have done them no real harm and which are too weak to protect themselves adequately. Yet the peace of the world and the welfare and security of every nation is today being threatened by that very thing.

That was said in October 1937. All over this country there rang from the lips of those who were Roosevelt haters, from those who disapproved of his foreign policy, charges that he was using this message at that time for the purpose of getting America into war.

He further said:

> No nation which refuses to exercise forbearance and to respect the freedom and rights of others can long remain strong and retain the confidence and respect of other nations. No nation ever loses its dignity or good standing by conciliating its differences, and by exercising great patience with, and consideration for, the rights of other nations.
> War is a contagion whether it be declared or undeclared. * * *
>
> If civilization is to survive, the principles of the Prince of Peace must be restored. Shattered trust between nations must be revived.

This is the President still speaking:

> Most important of all, the will for peace on the part of peace-loving nations must express itself to the end that nations that may be tempted to violate their agreements and the rights of others will desist from such a cause. There must be positive endeavors to preserve peace.

He closes by saying:

> America hates war. America hopes for peace. Therefore, America actively engages in the search for peace.

Mr. President, I unhesitatingly say that, in my humble opinion, from that day on the President of the United States has acted in the spirit of that last declaration and has actively engaged in the search for peace. His utterances, even in the message which is before the Senate at this very moment, prove that to be so.

I make the prophecy that history will record the unerring judgment of this man, who, as no other individual in this country, saw the approach almost 3 years ago of the present world calamity. He was attempting by that speech to fire the imagination of the American people to such a point that he might recommend even at that time the type and kind of preparation for defense on which we are working feverishly and furiously at this very moment. But the American people were in no mood for that. Mr. President, 6 months ago had the Congress of the United States attempted to put through a $5,000,000,000 program for national defense, the senior Senator from Illinois would not have voted for it, and there could not have been found a dozen Senators, I dare say, on this floor who would have supported such a defense policy even 6 months ago when so many of us thought that the war between Germany and France was nothing more nor less than a "phoney" war.

In the discussion of the question of neutrality, which was argued last year, and since that time the statement that we were on the road to war, made constantly over and over again, has created in this country, in my judgment, more war hysteria than any one thing that has been done.

Mr. President, what did the President of the United States say in his message to the Congress when we met in extraordinary session for the purpose of passing the neutrality bill, when men were crying out at that particular time, "The President is trying to get us into war; whatever he does means war; this fellow Roosevelt, in the White House, is not a peaceful man, he is a warrior." Very well, let us see what he said upon that occasion. He said:

> Let no man or group in any walk of life assume exclusive protectorate over the future well being of America, because I conceive that regardless of party or section, the mantle of peace and of patriotism is wide enough to cover us all. Let no group assume the exclusive label of the peace bloc. We all belong to it.

Yes, Mr. President, we all belong to the peace bloc, as the President of the United States said in the noble and inspiring message which he sent to the Congress of the United States at that time.

What does he say in the message which was just read by the clerk of the Senate with respect to this very matter? May I read one paragraph which I noted in scanning this message hastily a few moments ago? On the road to war. Some have said that the Democratic Party is a war party and that the Republican Party is the party of peace. We all belong, in my humble opinion, to the peace bloc. Mr. President, listen to what the Presidnt has just said—this is hot off the griddle:

That we are opposed to war is known not only to every American, but to every government in the world. We will not use our arms in a war of aggression, we will not send our men to take part in European wars.

That ought to be fairly satisfactory, Mr. President, to every Member of the Senate insofar as the President is concerned because he is directly connected with what we are doing at this particular moment in the confirmation of Col. Frank Knox to be Secretary of the Navy. If Colonel Knox is an interventionist and a warmonger, then, Roosevelt is an interventionist and a warmonger, notwithstanding the constant utterances for peace that he has made in more than one message to the United States Congress and from the platform upon many occasions.

Mr. President, I want it understood that I in nowise reflect upon the integrity or the sincerity of purpose of any Member of this legislation body. I grant every man the right to solve these problems according to the dictates of his own conscience; that is all I expect for myself. It is certainly that we all belong to the peace bloc, and the only difference is, perhaps, the method of approach.

I think that in the Senate we all are alert to the danger which exists to civilization in the Old World. We see at this moment the light burning rather low in practically all of Europe and in certain parts of Asia as well as Africa. I do not believe that any United States Senator will say that what is going on in Europe is not a menace to the democratic civilization of the New World and especially of these United States of America; that is proved beyond a shadow of doubt, because, Mr. President, we have seen in the last 60 days unity of thought, unity of purpose, and unity of action in the United States Senate which cannot be compared with anything in the past since the last great World War. I ask with the utmost sincerity why is it that Senators, regardless of their views as to England or Germany or France or any other nation across the sea, are now advocating almost fervently and passionately the program of defense which means billions of dollars of cost to the taxpayers of America? Why is it that practically every Senator in the last 3 or 4 weeks has voted for every defense measure that has come before the Senate?

Mr. President, have life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness as guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, suddenly become imperiled? Is the security of the citizen threatened? Is the American way of living in danger? Are these fundamental possessions handed down to us by our forefathers amidst blood and tears imperiled in some way? If so, is it not our duty to ascertain from what ominous source the danger appears?

Why are we doing all of this? Why is the country aroused at this particular moment as it has not been, perhaps, since the Civil War?

Is it Poland, which was overrun by the ruthless German machine in 14 days, that we fear?

Is it Czechoslovakia and Austria, which were taken over by the German Reich in a bloodless war?

Is it little Denmark, which only wanted to live out its destiny in peace and quietude, that we fear?

Is it Norway, whose neutrality had not been violated for over a hundred years until Hitler went in?

Is it Holland that we fear—a peace-loving nation which for 147 years never drew the sword?

Certainly it is not Belgium.

Is it France, now prone on her knees, and powerless under the iron heel of the most ruthless dictator in the history of civilization?

Whom do we fear? Is it England? Are we making these preparations for fear of England, with her back to the wall, fighting the last great fight for democracy upon the other side of the ocean? Do we fear England? Do we believe that England somehow will turn, and train her guns and men and her ships toward America's shores and invade us? We have lived with Canada in peace for over a hundred years. We have lived with Great Britain and all her possessions in peace for over a hundred years. Is it Britain that we fear at this hour? If it is, why did we not become excited a year ago, and then appropriate billions upon billions when England was at her peak with her army and her navy, the best—at least the Navy—that the world knows anything about?

No, we do not fear any of those countries. If England now held the position on the international stage she had 1 year ago, with her fleet intact, with peace and security on the isle as it was then, we would not be here considering the confirmation of Colonel Knox and Colonel Stimson. We would be just continuing along the same path that we traveled in the past. No, Mr. President; the one fear that we have—and anyone who is honest must admit it—is the spread of the totalitarian germ from Europe to the Western Hemisphere. Of course, we do not care what type of government they have over across the way, but we do care what kind of a government comes in here through "fifth column" tactics, through subterfuge, and subversive movements, to destroy our God-given rights transmitted to us by the founding fathers.

Mr. President, let it be understood that I hold no brief for England. I have no special affection for the English people. I know they drove a hard bargain at Versailles. I know that there were punitive and disciplinary measures in that treaty which never should have been there; but we can not, at this particular moment, assess the blame of the past. We must look the world, as it is, coldly in the face, and look it in the face with a view of determining what is best for our own national defense and the future welfare of 130,000,000 people.

Yes, the only way, Mr. President, by which the totalitarian germ can be kept from spreading is to continue to have in this country the unity of thought and purpose and action that we have seen here on the floor of the United States Senate in connection with all of the defense movements that we have put through in the Senate. I undertake to say that that is what was in the President's mind when he asked Colonel Knox to become Secretary of the Navy.

On July 4, the President of the United States wrote a letter to the Council Against Intolerance in America, and in that message he said, among other things:

Nothing could be more fitting in this troubled year of 1940 than that we, as Americans, should supplement the Declaration of Independence with a declaration of national unity. The adhesion of every man and woman to such a declaration would insure, as naught else would, the perpetuation of those free institutions which have been the source of all of our greatness as a Nation and our happiness as individuals.

Mr. President, the stream of thought running through that message to the Council Against Intolerance in America was the same stream of thought that coursed through the brain of President Roosevelt when he asked for the appointment of Col. Frank Knox to become Secretary of the Navy. When the call for duty came, what did Knox do? What did he say? Here is the statement that he issued, as is shown in the records of the proceedings before the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Colonel Knox made the following statement. Listen to this. I wish every Senator could hear this statement, especially those who have judged this man in advance. I challenge any individual who wants to be entirely fair and impartial to read the record made before the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I do not see how a single man who does so can vote against his confirmation.

He said this:

National defense is not a partisan question. It should have the united support of the people regardless of party. Congress in the past few weeks has acted with substantial unanimity on every national-defense proposal.

The administration of the Navy Department is in no sense political.

"The administration of the Navy Department is in no sense political."

The Navy knows no party. At a time of tremendous naval expansion it is vital that its management shall be wholly nonpolitical. The President has asked me to serve as Secretary of the Navy on that basis and on that basis—

On that basis—

I have accepted.

I firmly believe that in a time of danger to our country each of us must do whatever he can to meet that danger. As good citizens we must serve in whatever capacity is prescribed for us.

We are in danger now because we are inadequately prepared. The President has said I can help him. If I can help him prepare us for any emergency I must do so. What happens to me is unimportant. If I should be cast into the discard a few months later, the only questions I must answer to myself are these: "Did I do my duty? Did I do it well?"

It was not months later that he was cast into the discard. It was only a day or two afterward when he was read out of the Republican Party by John Hamilton and his coterie of sycophants up at the Philadelphia convention.

Mr. President, that statement was made by a man who for 45 years promoted the principles of the Republican Party in this Republic. That statement of patriotism was made by a man who was the candidate for Vice President on the Republican ticket 4 years ago. That statement was made by a man who was a delegate at large from the State of Illinois to the Republican convention recently held in the city of Philadelphia. Notwithstanding that background of Republicanism, notwithstanding the fact that he is recognized as one of the 15 leaders of the Republican Party in this country, or at least he was until the recent Republican convention, this man, in my judgment—and I say it from a heart chisled with sincerity—placed his patriotism and service to his country above partisanship when he made that acceptance.

What had he to gain, other than the approbation of his own conscience, when he made that great decision, Mr. President? Today he stands in the eyes of many as an individual without a party, but a man who, in my opinion, will live in this country, as a result of his high patriotic ideals, when party labels are long forgotten.

Politics? It was not a matter of politics with Frank Knox. Of course I know that Frank Knox has been against the Democratic Party. Do I know it? I ought to; I live in Illinois. I know that he does not believe in a number of things that this administration has done. I know all about the editorial policy which he followed in 1936 against this administration. But domestic issues sink into insignificance at this particular moment, when the world is on fire and when patriots are needed, Mr. President.

At the recent Springfield, Ill., convention of the Republican Party Frank Knox was present. That convention put a plank in its platform which said, "The Democratic Party stands for war and internationalism, and the Republican Party stands for peace and Americanism." They placed the mantle of peace and Americanism upon their political shoulders, and laid the blood of the sword upon the brow of the Democratic Party. Frank Knox would have no part of that pusillanimous piece of political diatribe, and he went back to Chicago the next day and wrote an editorial condemning that very thing. We all belong to the peace bloc, Mr. President; and the party which attempts to inject into politics this question of defense, before it gets through, will be doomed to defeat.

Mr. President, if I wanted to play politics at this particular moment with this appointment, no one in the Senate would have a better opportunity of doing it, and a more justifiable one, if I may put it in that way. If I wanted to play mean, puny politics in connection with this appointment, I could do it, because 2 days after I was nominated as United States Senator in the primary in Illinois in 1938, a flaming editorial appeared in Frank Knox's paper, the Chicago Daily News, behind whose editorial policy he stands, opposing my election in the fall and he told the State what a great fellow my opponent was.

Politics! If I could not rise in a great emergency of this kind above political consideration, I would expect to lose whatever respect and confidence the people of my State have bestowed upon me in sending me to the United States Senate. As one who is required under the Constitution of the United States to vote either for confirmation or against, I am a party to this action, and I wish to rise to the high plane of patriotism on which the President of the United States and Frank Knox stand at this particular moment. In doing that I do not want others to believe that I am reflecting on their judgment, upon what they may do; that is their own business. But I have a very strong feeling about this whole matter, in view of the record of the past. Roosevelt will long be remembered as rising above what Knox tried to do to him in 1936, issuing to him a challenge of patriotism; and Frank Knox was big enough to forget the past and accept that challenge of patriotism. The Senator from Illinois wants to be in the same category, so far as this great question of national defense is concerned.

It is said Frank Knox is a war monger, that he is an interventionist. What is an interventionist? Frank Knox gave as clear a definition of what an interventionist is before the Committee on Naval Affairs as Mr. Webster, or Mr. Hyde, the writer on international law, has given. Hyde, in his work on international law, says:

Intervention is sometimes by a written notice to the country intended to be coerced or by an international congress or conference, but coercion actual or intended is essential to constitute an act of intervention, and the term is usually understood as importing an armed interference.

What did Knox say about that? In the Senate committee hearing, on July 3, the Senator from Illinois read into the hearing a statement made by the distinguished Senator from Montana on June 20, and requested Colonel Knox to define the term "interventionist" as he understood it. He said:

I conceive in broad terms "interventionist" means intervening by force, and I am against that.

I said further:

If I understand it correctly, you say now to the committee and the country that an interventionist, in your opinion, is one who advocates the intermingling in a foreign debacle such as is going on now through the force of arms?

Colonel Knox replied, "That is right."

I further said, "And you are unalterably opposed to it, as you have testified, time and time again before the committee?"

Colonel Knox's reply was "Yes."

On June 20 the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] made a statement on the floor of the Senate which I wish to read into the RECORD at this particular time. He made this statement about Stimson and Knox:

Both of them have justly earned the high regard of the American people. Both of them are men of ability. Both of them are men of high character. I do not doubt the patriotism of either one of them, although I very violently disagree with some of their views. Each one of them has a right to his own opinion. But, Mr. President, I shall vote against their confirmation because they are both interventionists, not secretly, not clandestinely, but openly. The writings and speeches of both of them conclusively show that they favor a policy of American intervention. They are for war or for acts which amount to war and are certain to precipitate war.

Mr. President, I want first to commend the distinguished Senator from Missouri when he said what he did, that he wished it distinctly understood that his vote would not be cast because he believed for a moment that either of these men has been in treasonable or semitreasonable correspondence with any foreign power, or subjected to the improper influence of any foreign power, or because he was objecting to their political views, or to the fact that both are ultra-reactionaries in their politics.

Mr. President, that is a frank statement, it is a statement which is not based upon speculation and conjecture, it is a statement which does not convict anyone upon innuendo. It is a frank statement as to why the Senator is against these men.

I propose to take the allegations of the Senator from Missouri briefly and prove conclusively to any fair-minded person and prudent man who wants to decide the issue on the record that Frank Knox is not an interventionist; furthermore, that he has said nothing which amounts to an act of war, or which amounts to an act which could precipitate us into the war.

Mr. President, I dislike very much to burden the Senate, but I honestly believe that a grave injustice has been done to Colonel Knox throughout the country by statements which have been made to the effect that he is a warmonger and an interventionist, and is likely to precipitate us into war, that he had a feeling we should intervene and send our boys to Europe to fight as combatants on land or on the sea or in the air in the European war. Before our committee he used a speech which he made at Cleveland last year as a basis of the entire philosophy of his foreign policy, not only then, but in the days to follow, so far as his editorial policy was concerned. He started out by saying:

I am one of those who refuse to believe we will actively participate in this new war—certainly not to the extent of sending an army overseas. And if we do not do that, all these trumped up fears of a wartime dictatorship and the destruction of both our democratic institutions and our free-enterprise economy are fantastically unreal.

* * * * * * *

With the wisdom that comes from experience, we know that the phrases, "a war to preserve democracy," or "a war to end all wars" were afterthoughts—rhetorical incitements to our war spirit. We will not fall for this form of incitement so readily again. We are far more in the mood to heed the wise words of Washington who, in his Farewell Address, adjured us in disputes with other nations to think of our own country first. So much for the contrast of our state of mind in 1917 and in 1939.

Again an editorial dated September 7, 1939, was inserted in the RECORD, an editorial entitled "Keeping Us Out of War." In that he said, among other things:

We must keep out of this war. It comes first as a whisper of a half-believed hope in the hearts of millions.

We must keep out! It finds expression in the columns of the newspapers, on the air, and from the rostrum. This cry knows no partisanship.

We must keep out! It wells up from the whole people—North, South, East, and West. It comes from the factory and the farm. From the young and the old. From the poor and the rich.

And it thunders at the door of the White House, where sits the man in whose hands rests very largely the decision.

Last Sunday night that man, in reassuring, stirring terms, reiterated this universal hope when he said:

"I hope the United States will keep out of this war. I believe that it will. And I give you assurances that every effort of your Government will be directed toward that end."

You know, Mr. President, that this hope can only be realized if you have at your back the united people of the country.

Mr. President, that is the basis of my plea on the floor of the Senate in connection with this appointment.

We know that you know this for two reasons. First, because in the same speech from which we have just quoted you urged that partisanship and selfishness be adjourned; and second, because it was precisely in this way that you met the crisis of 1933.

Again, in an editorial of November 3, 1939, entitled "The Time to Think Is Now," he said, among other things:

What can be demonstrated, in fact has been repeatedly, is that those who advocated repeal are as vigorously opposed to the United States entering the war as are the champions of an embargo. There is no war party in the United States.

That follows out the message the President read to the Congress last year when we met here in extraordinary session.

Again, in an editorial that was introduced into the RECORD, dated April 11, entitled "The Scroll Unfolds," Frank Knox said:

Why do our public men, disregarding the multiplied evidences that American sympathy is overwhelmingly with those who fight against such dictatorships as those of Hitler and Stalin, seek after the applause of the timid few who tremble before the ruthlessness of a bloody-handed tyrant, and would shush every utterance that told in simple words of American abhorrence of the Stalin-Hitler alliance, and its brutal inhumanity, injustice, and rapine, practiced at the expense of those who cannot defend themselves?

We are not called upon to fight. We do not expect to have to fight. God grant that it is not because we are afraid to fight—that way lies war. But national self-respect calls upon us to speak, as we have always spoken, without fear, when our national sensibilities have been deeply touched. Has that fearlessness for the right gone out of us?

I could read other editorials by Frank Knox written up to the very day he appeared before the committee and testified, which carried along the same philosophy so far as he was concerned, with respect to the present European war.

This is what he said about the Monroe Doctrine:

Shall we permit the practical transfer of political and military control over islands in the Caribbean Sea to pass from French into German hands?

The Monroe Doctrine, about the only clearly defined foreign policy we have, negatives such a change.

The safety of the Panama Canal, the uninterrupted operation of which is vital to our national defense, forbids it.

Congressional action, not 10 days ago, specifically declares against such a change in sovereignty.

It is clear that we must act—and act promptly.

* * * * * * *

Furthermore, in the new world created by new and undreamed of dangers, we, here in the Americas, must begin to think hemispherically.

Our danger is a common danger and our defense must be a mutual defense. In what better way could be begun this new mode of thought than meeting the first tangible danger by common action?

Again speaking of unity of purpose and unity of thought.

In the hearings on the question of sending boys across the sea to pull out of the fire the chestnuts of some foreign nation, what Colonel Knox said was definite and certain. Of course, it seems to me that all this talk about sending boys to Europe is more or less childish, because I do not know where we could send them at the present time. We would have to lease a field from Hitler on which to have them land, or on which they could fight somewhere, because England has more men than she can take care of at the present time. What England needs is materials and supplies, not men.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], on page 20 of the proceedings in questioning Colonel Knox, said:

Senator HOLT. You would not favor sending any of our boys to Europe under any circumstances in the present crisis?

Colonel KNOX. That is right.

Senator HOLT. Even if the vital interests of the United States can best be served by sending our boys over there?

Colonel KNOX. Let me say this again, so there will be no doubt about it. My position has consistently been from the first that we ought to aid them in a moral and economic way, never in manpower.

Senator HOLT. If the moral and economic way would not be sufficient for them to win, would you feel that we should go the rest of the way?

Colonel KNOX. No.

Senator HOLT. You do not?

Colonel KNOX. No.

Then, again, on page 24 of the proceedings, when the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] was questioning Colonel Knox, the following colloquy took place:

Senator JOHNSON. The term "short of war," as you understand it—I am not speaking as to how others understand it, but as you understand it—"short of war" will mean doing anything you can do to aid the Allies, as you express it, and stopping when you reach the point where it may be necessary for our own military assistance?

Colonel KNOX. Yes; that is correct.

Senator JOHNSON. Now, you would not go to war under any circumstances in this particular misadventure that is occurring in Europe, would you?

Colonel KNOX. That is right.

Senator JOHNSON. You never, on any occasion, would attempt to send our boys, as we term it, abroad in a European controversy?

Colonel KNOX. That is right.

Mr. President, on the same day I had occasion to examine Colonel Knox as to what he thought a warmonger was, because he had been charged on the floor of the Senate and throughout the press of the country with being one. I read to him the statement of the Senator from West Virginia upon the floor of the Senate, when he said:

> These two appointments ought to be particularly pleasing to the warmongers, to those who think we ought to go to war; to those who think that isolation means putting our heads in the sand.

I asked Colonel Knox to elaborate and expand upon that statement if he cared so to do, and he said this:

> Colonel KNOX. As I understand the term, it implies a man who seeks to involve his country into war, who thinks war is, under the circumstances, desirable. That is not my position.
> Senator LUCAS. A warmonger and an interventionist, then, practically mean one and the same thing?
> Colonel KNOX. Practically.

So, Mr. President, Senators who will take the speeches, or the editorials, or the statements made by Colonel Knox before the Senate committee and analyze them fairly and impartially will be compelled to give him the benefit of the doubt upon the question of intervention and warmongering. They will be compelled to vote for confirmation upon this occasion. Of course, if Senators are prejudiced against him, it would make no difference what type or kind of evidence he might give; but if they are open to conviction, as American jurors should be in a great case of this kind, when unanimity of thought and action is so necessary for the preservation of the Nation, it seems to me that they should be big enough to give this man the benefit of the doubt upon the question of the confirmation of his nomination.

Mr. President, it was charged, at least by insinuation and innuendo, that Colonel Knox had holdings in South America and had made commitments to foreign governments before he was nominated by the President. That is emphatically denied in the record. Not only that, but he took the necessary precaution to dispose of every share of stock he had—and the amount was negligible—in any corporation in this country that was involved in the making of implements and munitions of war. In other words, he comes before the United States Senate upon this record with absolutely clean hands, as a patriot, wanting to serve his country in time of need.

Mr. President, in conclusion let me say that I shall vote for the confirmation of Frank Knox. He has the experience, the drive, and the capacity to speed full steam ahead in one of our crucial periods. He will get things done in this emergency regardless of red tape and delay. If the Senate refused to confirm this man, I say with the utmost sincerity that Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini would be the two real victors in this battle. It would give them comfort and encouragement. Yes; it would inspire and hearten the Nazi and Fascist agents in this country to continue their dastardly and diabolical "fifth column" tactics that we know exist within this Nation.

Yes, Mr. President, he has been in two wars. He was in the war of 1898 with Teddy Roosevelt and his Rough Riders. Colonel Knox was in the last war, doing duty overseas.

Mr. President, that record has been made; it is one of honor and respect; yet, regardless of the heroic deeds he may have performed in line of duty in those two great emergencies, I honestly feel that what Frank Knox is doing at this particular time is just as high and noble and patriotic as any service he has ever performed in his long public life as a citizen and a soldier of this great Republic.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I have listened with special interest to the vigorous, eloquent, and convincing address of the able senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] in support of the confirmation of the nomination of Col. Frank Knox. Yesterday I would have voted against confirmation because I honestly believed that he was selected to form a war Cabinet. Today I shall vote to confirm his nomination.

In addition to the able Senator's unanswerable argument, I have been tremendously heartened and reassured by one small sentence in the President's message just read to the Senate in which he said:

> We will not use our arms in a war of aggression; we will not send our men to take part in European wars.

As I interpret this important sentence, the despised, so-called isolationists have won a notable victory. On this historic day the noninterventionists welcome the President into their ranks.

Harry Woodring, a courageous statesman, the beloved former Governor of my native State of Kansas, and one of the greatest Secretaries of War who ever sat in a President's Cabinet, has not preached preparedness and nonintervention in vain.

Last night Governor Woodring spoke these significant words in a great gathering to welcome him home. I read from the Times Herald, quoting Secretary Woodring:

> If reaction from my leaving the War Department as a known noninterventionist has caused modification of some policies and sobered some of those provocative and meddling advisers of the administration who would strip our own defenses, then I regret that I had only one set of guts to sacrifice on the altar of public service.

Many of us in the Senate say "Amen" to that notable statement by Secretary Woodring.

I thank the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. I appreciate very much what the Senator from Colorado has said in regard to my remarks. I do not quite follow him about having everyone coming into the isolationist camp.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I did not say that, Mr. President. I said the noninterventionist ranks. I did not say anything about isolationist camp.

Mr. LUCAS. I have never been able to find anyone on the floor of the United States Senate in making a public utterance, neither have I ever found anyone in the corridors of the Capitol, nor have I ever found any Senator in the lobby, with whom I have discussed the European war, who wanted to intervene. I challenge the Senator from Colorado to make a careful analysis and an exhaustive study of the speeches that have been made by the President of the United States, a number of excerpts from which I have just read. I contend that the President has been the champion of the peace bloc.

He foresaw with an unerring eye the calamity which has descended on the world at the present time, and he was one of the few who did. He was unable to convince me that he was right. He was unable to convince the Senator from Colorado that he was a right at the time in predicting what is now going on throughout the world.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. In answer to the Senator from Illinois, I will say that I have read every word the President has spoken on this great subject; but actions have spoken louder and more eloquently than words. Actions prior to the present time have convinced me of the view I have held, that intervention is a very dangerous policy of the present administration.

Mr. LUCAS. I certainly do not disagree with the distinguished Senator upon the question of intervention. I have never given anyone the slightest intimation that I was for it in any manner, shape, or form; and all my utterances during the past 3 or 4 years will bear out that statement. I want the Senator to know that I am grateful for his change of viewpoint in connection with this matter, because I am tremendously interested in it. I honestly feel, from the bottom of my heart, that Frank Knox has really accepted this appointment as a call to duty in a time of great emergency and stress. Certainly nothing in the record could convince any fair and reasonable man that Colonel Knox is an interventionist.

I thank the Senate.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I rise for the same reason the Senator from Illinois rose, but to take an entirely opposite view. I know that no votes will be changed. I have no such result in mind; but I do feel that the RECORD should be made very clear and complete as to these appointments.

I hold no personal ill will in any degree against Colonel Knox; but I feel that his appointment as Secretary of the Navy would be dangerous. I feel that I have a constitutional duty to oppose the confirmation of nominations of those who I believe would be dangerous to the peace and welfare of my country.

A man may be appointed to the Cabinet for a number of reasons. First, did he give money to the campaign? Many members of the Cabinet in the past have been appointed for that reason and that reason alone. I am sure that Colonel Knox is not in that class. He may be called upon to buy a campaign book in 1940, when he is in the Cabinet, but so far he has not contributed to the campaign fund and is being rewarded therefor. He has not been appointed for faithful party service.

The second reason a man may be named to the Cabinet is that he may have specific qualifications in a particular department which would make him an extraordinary Cabinet official. Colonel Knox said—and correctly—that he has had no experience whatever in the Navy, in building naval vessels, or in naval affairs.

COLONEL KNOX ON DOMESTIC AFFAIRS

We must bear in mind that this is an important appointment in a particular emergency. Therefore we must look for some other reason why he might be named to the Cabinet. I do not say the reasons mentioned are my reasons for such an appointment. Let us consider his viewpoint on domestic issues. How has Colonel Knox stood on domestic issues? Was he appointed for that reason? I shall let the Senate be the judge. I myself will not make the decision. I wish to read what Colonel Knox has said—not what the Senator from West Virginia, RUSH HOLT, is saying, but what Colonel Knox has said:

Mr. Roosevelt is a strange figure in the American scene. He has squandered the savings and future earnings of not merely a part of our people but all our people. He has broken practically every pledge he has ever made to the people.

That is the statement of the new Cabinet member. Let me repeat what I have previously said on the floor of the Senate. Surely the President would not appoint a man who would not speak the truth. He must want a man who has good judgment, because we need men of good judgment in the Cabinet. This is what Colonel Knox said:

Mr. Roosevelt is a strange figure in the American scene. He has squandered the savings and the future earnings of not merely a part of our people—but all our people. He has broken practically every pledge he has ever made to the people. He has driven the people into another depression at a cost of 10,000,000 jobs and at a loss of some $30,000,000,000 in the market value of securities owned by approximately 12,500,000 stockholders. He has weakened the banking structure of the Nation where some 48,000,000 of our people have deposited their savings. He has weakened the insurance companies with their 66,000,000 policyholders. He is using the social-security funds for the daily running expenses of his administration and as security for the appropriated savings is dropping I O U's into special funds in the United States Treasury.

This is the new Cabinet official, who I am sure is a truthful man. Speaking about the President, he said:

He has openly taunted the people about their constitutional rights, and he has ridiculed the Supreme Court of the United States by adding to its membership a common scold, and a Ku Kluxer to boot.

The reason why I am reading this is that we want to know why Colonel Knox is appointed at this particular time, and we want to see if his viewpoint on domestc affairs dovetails with that of the President so that the President desired to name him. Colonel Knox continues:

The President, though posing as both, is neither a true Democrat nor a true liberal—

I want some Democrats who are for the colonel to defend the President against such an attack. This is what Colonel Knox said:

The President, though posing as both, is neither a true Democrat nor a true liberal, but an aristrocratic dilettante—

That is a word which I had to look up in the dictionary. I did not know what the word "dilettante" meant. Perhaps some Senators do not know what it means. I looked it up in the dictionary. According to Webster's dictionary, a dilletante is:

A dabbler in art matters; a superficial amateur.

I am not saying this. This is the statement of a man who the President feels has enough judgment to be in his Cabinet. He would not be in mine, but the President wants him in his Cabinet. He says that the President is—

An aristocratic dilettante with radical leanings and an inordinate appetite for personal power. He has sought and received at the hands of a craven Congress—

He loves us. [Laughter.]

He has sought and received, at the hands of a craven Congress, personal powers over the economic life of the American people which he admits are inherently dangerous to our liberties and which are comparable only to the personal powers of Europe's dictators.

By his misguided efforts at price fixing, wage fixing, and other monopolistic practices, and by his philosophy of scarcity he delayed for 2 long years our natural recovery, which, indeed, began only after the Supreme Court had declared these efforts unconstitutional.

He has upset our monetary stability, clipped our currency, and diluted our gold reserve with silver.

By arbitrary grants of Federal funds he has corrupted the sovereignty of the States and undermined the home rule of local governments.

For the benefit of Senators who may have entered the Chamber since I started to speak, let me say that I am reading what Colonel Knox said about the President.

He has erected a multitude of alphabetical agencies and sent among us swarms of bureaucrats to harass us and devour our earnings.

Without solving either the problem of unemployment or the problem of relief he is wasting the people's substance in extravagant and unnecessary experiments, thus placing an excessive strain of taxes and an excessive burden of debt not only upon us but our children.

In his efforts to secure reelection he has set up a Nation-wide Tammany machine, lending aid and comfort to the most vicious elements in the local politics of our great cities.

While preaching benevolence and extolling freedom, he has heartlessly authorized or permitted his henchmen to try to frighten or coerce the poor and the unprotected into giving him their votes.

In urging the enactment of laws which he knew to be of doubtful constitutionality, he has ignored the true spirit of his oath of office that he would, to the best of his ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States.

Let me make this emphatically clear. I am sure that the President would appoint a man who would tell the truth. Colonel Knox has said that the President would not pay any attention to his oath. This is what Colonel Knox says:

He has callously repudiated not only his own preelection promises but the solemn pledges of his party and the covenant of the Federal Government with the holders of its bonds.

In his reckless disregard of our basic liberties and his ill-considered impatience with our form of government, nothing will check him save a crushing defeat at the polls.

In a few moments I intend again to introduce Colonel Knox to the various members of the Cabinet. I have found some new quotations about them.

COLONEL KNOX CALLS PRESIDENT A "TORY"

This is a clipping from a speech in Boston, the home of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts:

PRESIDENT A "TORY," COLONEL KNOX ASSERTS—PUBLISHER, IN FIRST SPEECH AS AN AVOWED CANDIDATE, CALLS NEW DEAL "SMOKE SCREEN"—CHARGES ABUSE OF POWER—"NEVER HAD PATIENCE WITH IDEA THAT ROOSEVELT MEANS WELL," HE SAYS AT BOSTON

BOSTON, February 12.—Col. Frank Knox, in his first address as an avowed candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination, charged the New Deal tonight with abusing power and the public trust.

He hurled back at administration leaders the charge of "Toryism" and asserted that President Roosevelt sought "to undermine the confidence of the people in business leadership to the end that they may place their trust in political leadership."

Colonel Knox, Chicago and Manchester, N. H., publisher, spoke at the Lincoln Day meeting of the Middlesex Club.

Just before the meeting, reporters asked him if he were a candidate.

"Yes. I filed this morning in Springfield," he replied, referring to the Illinois State primary.

For his platform, Colonel Knox referred reporters to his speeches of the past month in which he has denounced the New Deal as "autocratic" and as destroying fundamental principles of the Constitution.

"I never did have any patience with this idea that the New Deal is all 'phony' but that Roosevelt means well," Colonel Knox said.

Colonel Knox, in his speech tonight, asserted that the President, by taking over legislative powers, had broken a balance of power which the Constitution established to protect individual freedom.

"History," he added, "makes it clear that complete power in the hands of one man or one group of men is the prelude to an era of arbitrary and capricious government; therefore I am against the government of men which has been set up by Mr. Roosevelt. I am in favor of a return to a government of laws.

"I am convinced the men and women who now seek to perpetuate the liberties guaranteed to them by the Constitution are the true liberals of the time. To me, the New Deal is essentially a Tory movement, and Mr. Roosevelt, seeking encroachment upon the liberties of the people behind a smoke screen of false liberalism, is the arch-Tory of them all."

As I say, I want to see why Colonel Knox was nominated. I want to see if he was nominated because of his viewpoint on domestic affairs.

This is from a speech which Colonel Knox made in Los Angeles. He was so sure of his position that he did not want to be misunderstood. Here is what he said, and I quote him again:

With a full sense of the meaning of my words, I ask, Are such acts in accord with the sacred oath taken not only to defend and to protect but to preserve the Constitution?

Then he becomes literary for a moment and asks:

Upon what food does this, our Caesar, feed?

Speaking of the President—

What madness has seized upon him? Does he not see how dangerously close this comes to conspiracy to break down our institutions of government?

Mr. President, I want to be sure that no Democrat will think I am saying these things. I do not believe them; but Colonel Knox, a very truthful man and now named by the President as a member of his Cabinet, has called the President a conspirator to break down our institutions of government. Of course, I am sure that when the Senate confirms Colonel Knox it will stamp its imprimatur on that statement and say it is correct.

Now, what does Colonel Knox think about it? Let me read further. I read this once before, but I think it is worth repeating.

Collectivists of every sort are supporting Mr. Roosevelt. That is natural. For at the root of his philosophy lies the view, shared alike by Communists and Fascists, that conditions have suddenly changed fundamentally, and that, in consequence, individual liberty under democracy, as hitherto practiced in this country, is no longer either desirable or feasible.

Colonel Knox said further:

Many people are confused about Mr. Roosevelt—

I admit some of us are confused; I will go that far—

Many people are confused about Mr. Roosevelt because his tactics are confusing, and are meant to be confusing. He knows very well where he is going. It is toward a kind of coercive collectivism—call it socialism or national socialism, or what you will. But, as a matter of tactics—

I want to make it clear that this is Colonel Knox speaking; it is not RUSH HOLT.

But, as a matter of tactics—

Speaking of the President—

he will not avow this aim. And to reach it he is ready to nod, smile, agree, assert, evade, deny, distort, distract—

I am not half way through yet [laughter]— dally, retreat, startle, dazzle, juggle, sidestep, and circumvent.

He says the President in order to reach his aim "is ready to nod, smile, agree, assert, evade, deny, distort, distract, dally, retreat, startle, dazzle, juggle, sidestep, and circumvent."

I continue the quotation:

Our leader, incidentally, is a showman. He likes to astonish. He likes to keep people guessing.

He kept Frank Knox guessing for 6 months before he gave him this appointment—

He has a taste for the novel, the dramatic, the grandiose. He is strongly attracted by such vast notions as harnessing the tides at Passamaquoddy, planting a thousand-mile belt of trees in the wind-swept western prairies, digging a gigantic ship canal across Florida.

That was before the Congress stepped in the way. Colonel Knox knows whom the President gathers around him. I again quote from Colonel Knox:

In the past it has been customary for a President to gather around him, as his advisers after election, outstanding members of his party—men who helped nominate him and who fought for him in his campaign. But "our leader" has turned his party into a one-man affair. He has brushed aside the outstanding Democrats.

Now, there seem to be no outstanding Democrats fit to be Secretary of the Navy—

His general staff consists of Prof. Rexford Guy Tugwell, a sly social revolutionary; Henry Wallace, a farm-journal editor with a messianic complex; Harold Ickes, a reformer who imagines he is the only honest man in the world [laughter]; Jim Farley, an unscrupulous Tammany boss; John Lewis, a ruthless and ambitious labor leader—

I must not forget Miss Perkins—

Miss Perkins and Harry Hopkins, social workers with a bias against businessmen.

I desire a little later on to indicate what Colonel Knox thinks of the men he is going to sit with in the Cabinet. I want to introduce them to each other so that they will know each other better. I shall refer to that in a moment; but let me go ahead with Colonel Knox' words about the President:

Yes; "our leader" knows where he is going. He is devoted to the cause. He is disposing the forces. He is timing the attacks. Anything that increases his personal power, or that tends to break down the independence of individuals or groups that might oppose him, he favors. The C. C. C., a larger Army and Navy, a swollen Federal bureaucracy, Federal social-security laws, Federal relief, Federal public works, a managed currency—managed by him—and huge personal funds to spend as he likes—power over money, power over people—these fit his aim.

Meanwhile, anyone—

I do not think very many Members of the Senate would say this—

Meanwhile, anyone who brings him an attractive scheme to flatter the momentary hates or fears of the crowd, or to intensify class feeling, or to take money from those who are earning it and give it to those who are not, or to attract attention dramatically to "our leader," or to spend large sums under his personal direction, is assured of a sympathetic audience.

I shall refer to a couple of more quotations about the President. I have many others, but I do not desire to take the time of the Senate to read them all, and I am sure the President and Colonel Knox will become better acquainted as they meet in the Cabinet gatherings. Here is something else Colonel Knox has said:

When will the President find out that he cannot indefinitely be all things to all men? He cannot effectively boast of his democracy, while at the same time reaching out for unprecedented personal powers—powers which in other hands, as he has himself ingenuously admitted, would endanger the people's liberties. He cannot, while practicing collectivism, pose as the savior of capitalism. He cannot appear one day as a radical, the next as a conservative—and expect anyone to take him seriously.

The colonel must have taken him seriously when the President called him in and asked him to become a member of the Cabinet. But I will continue reading what Colonel Knox thinks of the President. This is the last quotation at this time:

A characteristic of the autocrat, as Kipling pointed out, is that he promises right, but brings wrong. So was it, only too lately, abroad. So has it been, all too lately, here.

For President Roosevelt is without doubt—

I want the Senate to note this statement. This is the new beloved member of the Cabinet speaking:

For President Roosevelt is without doubt the greatest autocrat in the history of this country.

After all this, the President must have had a pretty large throat for swallowing. But let me continue. This is not RUSH HOLT speaking; it is Frank Knox:

Behind the pleasant voice and the gay smile is the grasping hand.

Mr. President, you can determine for yourself what he means by that. I shall not do so at this time, because certainly I do not want to delay any more than I have to the proceedings of the Senate. I think, however, it would be unwise not to introduce the different members of the Cabinet to Colonel Knox in the language of Colonel Knox himself. He is going to sit in the Cabinet room with Secretaries Hull, Morgenthau, Wallace, Ickes, Farley, Perkins, Hopkins, and Jackson. He is going to sit also with Secretary Stimson. He has not said much about Secretary Stimson, but I will quote some of the things he has said about the other members of the President's Cabinet. They should make it interesting when they all sit down at the same table.

KNOX APPRAISES CABINET

I now give a thumbnail sketch of the Cabinet as seen by the newest Cabinet officer, Col. Frank Knox. First, here is what he said about Secretary Hull—I am not responsible for these statements:

Mr. Hull is honest and well-meaning but weak. He will never rank among our great Secretaries of State.

Will Colonel Knox, when he attends his first Cabinet meeting, say, "How are you, Mr. Secretary? I am glad to meet you, but you will never be one of our great Secretaries of State"? I want to provide a little background so that they may introduce each other as Colonel Knox goes into his first Cabinet meeting.

Next, he will meet Secretary Morgenthau. Here is what he said about Secretary Morgenthau:

Henry Morgenthau is out of his depth.

When Colonel Knox goes to his first Cabinet meeting, will he say, "How are you, Mr. Secretary Morgenthau? I am glad to meet you, but you are just out of your depth"?

Referring to members of the Cabinet having a meeting, Colonel Knox said:

Somebody, probably not Mr. Morgenthau, had a bright idea.

In other words, Henry Morgenthau was not very smart; Mr. Knox did not give him credit for having any bright ideas at that time.

Then Colonel Knox will meet Secretary Wallace, and I will only repeat what I said a moment ago. He said that Mr. Wallace was "a farm-journal editor with a Messianic complex."

This will be a good one when he goes up to meet "old Ick" down there at the Cabinet meeting—Secretary Ickes. That will really be a good one, because this is what he said about him:

Harold Ickes, a reformer who imagines he is the only honest man in the world.

I am sure that when he goes up to meet Secretary Ickes in the Cabinet he will say, "How are you, Honest Harold?" And then he calls him a "stalwart of invective."

I do not think Jim Farley will be in the Cabinet very long, from all indications. I do not say this, but this is what the new Secretary of the Navy thinks of Jim Farley, as I mentioned a moment ago. He said he was "an unscrupulous Tammany boss." I disagree. He said of Miss Perkins—now, this will be lovely when he meets Miss Perkins—he said Miss Perkins is "a social worker with a bias against businessmen." He also used the same expression about Harry Hopkins, but he said Harry Hopkins is "a social spiritualist." [Laughter.] Well, I think he is just about right on that, only I do not think the statement is quite direct enough. You should hear what I call him.

This is what he said about the Attorney General. When he calls him up on the telephone to get an opinion I am sure it will be very lovely, because he said this about Bob Jackson:

Secretary Jackson is "a get-while-the-getting-is-good boy." [Laughter.]

That is all. There are only two other members left—Secretary Stimson and Secretary Knox; but I am sure the members of the Cabinet will get along better after I have introduced them to each other.

Let us see who else there is. Of course, as Secretary of the Navy, Colonel Knox will have to deal with Tom Corcoran. The Members of the Senate know that; do they not? Sometimes you have to deal with Mr. Corcoran. This is what Colonel Knox said about Tom Corcoran. He said he is "head man among the whispering brigade"; and a moment ago I mentioned the fact that I am sure at one of these receptions, when he sits down with the Supreme Court, he will meet Mr. Justice Black, and this is what he said about Justice Black. I mentioned it a moment ago. He said he is—

A common scold and a Ku Kluxer, to boot.

[Laughter.]

So it will be very lovely when these men sit down together at the Cabinet meetings. I will leave it to the Senate, after reading those things, to decide whether or not Colonel Knox was appointed because of his viewpoint on domestic affairs. He must have been appointed because of his viewpoint on foreign affairs. He does not like our State Department adviser. This is what he says about him:

Mr. Bullitt—

Of course, he is the one who does most of the advising. He says:

Mr. Bullitt himself would be the last to challenge the validity of that judgment in the light of his experience in Moscow. He must now have accepted the appointment to the vacant Embassy at Paris with a sense of deep relief. For in 3 years he has not been able to effect a settlement of vital Russo-American questions in such a manner as to earn the plaudits of his country. * * *

The reason for the failure is obvious. The Russians expected more of Mr. Bullitt, by virtue of his alleged sympathy with their cause, than they would have expected from a disinterested or avowedly unsympathetic ambassador.

Of the conduct of the State Department, he said:

In his negotiations with foreign powers, Mr. Roosevelt has not been fortunate. He muffed his chance with France and Britain in the spring of 1933. Two months later he laughingly broke up the London Economic Conference, and with it the world's hopes of speedy recovery from the depression. He has done nothing about the war debts. His off-and-on efforts at dollar-pound stabilization have got nowhere. Under him, our foreign trade, and indeed our foreign relations in general, have fallen to a new low. His Russian policy is a fizzle. His far-eastern policy is a naught.

The State Department under Roosevelt is not exactly a tower of strength. Mr. Hull is honest and well-meaning, but weak.

He will never rank among our great Secretaries of State. The President's diplomatic appointments have been equally feeble. Mr. Bingham in London and Mr. Strauss in Paris have been notable chiefly for their ill health, which has incapacitated them for months on end. Mr. Bullitt, first in Moscow, now in Paris, is a jolly amateur, a playboy. Mr. Bowers, in Madrid, spent most of his time writing books. Since the civil war broke out in Spain, with its many complications for the United States, he has been cruising safely on an American warship in the Bay of Biscay.

Mr. Roosevelt was a member of the memorable Wilson administration, which, in trying to keep us out of war, got us into it. He is by nature an experimenter. He likes to try new things. He is no more bound by precedent than by his own statements. Caution, with him, is something to be thrown to the winds. His hand on the tiller of a little sailboat may be skillful enough. But, judging by the zigzag course he has steered in the last 3½ years, his hand on the tiller of the ship of state is amazingly erratic. It is bad enough to have for President in time of peace a man who is overconfident, incautious, self-willed, uncertain, and unreliable. In time of war it would be disastrous.

But, now, let us see. Let us get down to the real reason for the appointment of Colonel Knox.

Colonel Knox was appointed because of his views on foreign affairs. This book called The American White Paper is supposed to have administration sponsorship. It is supposed to be the real viewpoint of the administration on foreign affairs. Colonel Knox once before was called to the White House; and it says:

Colonel Knox was called by the President to the White House to act as "mere window dressing."

Is he today being called to the Cabinet to act as "mere window dressing"? Of course, others can answer that question as well as I can.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

But, going into his viewpoint on the subject of foreign affairs, let me say frankly that after Colonel Knox got through testifying he almost agreed with us isolationists; and I am still an isolationist. I am not ashamed of it—not at all. Let me quote the words of Colonel Knox himself; not his interpretation, but his words on foreign affairs. This is what he said:

The primary duty of those charged with the conduct of our relations with the rest of the world is the protection, at whatever cost, of the vital interests of the United States.

If these vital interests can best be served by aloofness from any participation in the crucial struggle now in progress in Europe, then we should remain aloof and inactive.

If, however, our vital interests are involved and we will be critically and perhaps disastrously affected by a defeat of the Allies, and a victory for Germany, then indifference to the outcome and pursuit of a policy of rigid isolation not only is cowardly and despicable, but is as well a betrayal of our vital interests.

I questioned Colonel Knox about that. I said, "Would not the defeat of England affect our vital interests?" He said, "Most assuredly." I asked him if the defeat of the Allies would not affect our vital interests, and he said it would. In his own statement he said that if the vital interests of the United States were so affected, we should not remain aloof and he said the vital interests of the United States should be protected at any cost. I asked him, "Including war?" He said, "Including war, most certainly, to protect the vital interests"; and he said that our vital interests were at stake in the war in Europe, and then later hedged on his statement.

In his testimony he said we had given all the aid we could to the Allies; but he made this statement in his newspaper, and I think it is important. He tried to explain what it meant, but to me it states in plain English what it means. This is what he said:

Here is no qualified declaration; here is no limited pledge of assistance to those who are fighting the battle of freedom. All that we have, that they need to win that fight, will be given.

Let me repeat the last sentence:

All that we have, that they need to win that fight, will be given.

"All that we have" means boys. That is what it means. It means first to send them all the materials necessary; and then, if they are not enough, it means and it can unquestionably mean only one thing. "All that we have" means all, and "all that we have" means our troops, regardless of whether he says that he would not send troops across the ocean; and we can find that viewpoint expressed elsewhere. There is an outstanding point in that statement; but Senators talk about a speech he made in Cleveland and the Senator from Illinois has referred to it. Let me quote another speech that he made in Cleveland; not the one he gave to the committee, but the one I looked up and got in his own book. This is what he said, speaking at Cleveland:

May I say in passing the thing that perhaps will shock you. We hope, and some of us earnestly believe, that if another European war comes we can hold ourselves aloof and not be dragged into its turmoil, its suffering, and its cost of treasure and life. I share that hope, but it is without great conviction because what is happening in Europe, obvious to anyone who chooses to see, is a death grapple between two principles of government, the principle of democracy and principle of dictatorship. This is what I have in mind to say: It may come to some of you with a shock, that if that conflict is joined, if that battle begins and there is peril that the democracies of Europe are going under——

KNOX SAID "WE WILL BE IN"

Let me interpolate here that there is not a man in the Senate who does not think there is peril of the democracies going under. We know there is peril of the democracies going under; but this is what Colonel Knox said:

It may come to some of you with a shock, that if that conflict is joined, if that battle begins and there is peril that the democracies of Europe are going under, we will be in that war on the side of democracy, whether we choose to be or not.

That is Colonel Knox.

Let me continue, and then I will comment on this statement. These are the words of Colonel Knox:

We cannot see the democratic principles go down without a certain knowledge that having defeated those principles in the Old World the victors there will cross the ocean to challenge them here.

We will be in the war, he says, if the challenge is against the democracies, and they are in peril; and I do not believe there is a man on the floor of the Senate today who will not say that the democracies are in peril.

Those are the words of the colonel on foreign affairs in Cleveland, just as much as the words that were read before. And what else did he advocate? Not only did he declare that this war was a war of liberty, and that the vital interests of America were tied up in it, but he advocated in his newspaper the extension of credit to the allied nations. Let me quote his exact words:

If, as is entirely possible, we lend other and more positive assistance to the Allies, through modifications of credit requirements, the supply of munitions and foodstuffs, when Allied credit is exhausted—and then financial assistance, it will not be because we love England as our mother country, nor out of gratitude to France because of something that happened 150 years ago, but wholly because it is against our vital interests to have Germany emerge from this war with complete domination of both land and sea in the Eastern Hemisphere.

ADVOCATES REPEAL OF JOHNSON ACT

The last part is not important; but he does say that we would lend financial assistance to the Allies, and he specifically said so in his newspaper; and I asked him in the committee whether he did not favor the repeal of the Johnson Act.

Here is the exact statement:

Senator HOLT. Colonel, you have never advocated the extension of credit to England and to France, according to your statement; is that correct?
Colonel KNOX. No; that isn't correct.
Senator HOLT. You have advocated it?
Colonel KNOX. I have not. I said I had no objection to it if they were in desperate straits, and needed our help to that extent.
Senator HOLT. Wouldn't that be an advocacy of credit?
Colonel KNOX. It would.
Senator HOLT. And you would favor, if they need our money, extending credit to them?
Colonel KNOX. If they are in a desperate situation, and some of our money would help them to resist and prolong a war, and give us a better opportunity to get ready ourselves, I would be willing to give them the money; I wouldn't lend it to them.

Then later he said that he did not know that it was necessary. But his paper has been harping for the repeal of the Johnson Act, to make Uncle Sam "Uncle Sap" once again. The repeal of the Johnson Act is one thing in which some are interested. He wants to repeal that act and allow these defaulting nations once again to come here and get money from us to fight the war over in Europe, with America needing all the money it can get right here, with the thousands and millions of unemployed and many others not on relief upon whom we could spend the money for our betterment.

ADVOCATES REPEAL OF NEUTRALITY ACT

He also advocated the repeal of the Neutrality Act, not just the repeal of part of it, but the repeal of the Neutrality Act. What did that mean? It meant sending our ships—it could mean nothing else—into the war zone. He said that could be controlled by Executive order. But he knows definitely, as we all do, that Executive order does not stop the transportation of supplies to nations in war, as was the case in the last war, as was so ably said by the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] yesterday. Colonel Knox advocated repeal of the Neutrality Act, and repeal means allowing our ships to go into the war zone, possibly to be sunk.

I asked him if that did not mean allowing American citizens to travel anywhere at their own risk, and he said "Yes." Here is the testimony:

Senator HOLT. You agree with the sentiment of allowing Americans to go anywhere any time on any ship?
Colonel KNOX. That is an inherent right.
Senator HOLT. Do you agree with that right?
Colonel KNOX. We abridged that right by act of legislation.
Senator HOLT. Do you think we should go back to that?
Colonel KNOX. We should repeal the neutrality law.

Allowing American citizens to go anywhere at their own risk, and then have one of them killed, and, as I stated on the floor of the Senate at other times, from that would be the spark that would cause a declaration of war itself.

A moment ago I spoke about the vital interests, and this is what Colonel Knox had said as to how far we should go to protect our vital interests. He said that our vital interests were at stake in the war in Europe. That is what he said:

The primary duty of those charged with the conduct of our relations with the rest of the world is the protection at whatever cost of the vital interests of the United States.

"At whatever cost." In those three words lies many a coffin. In those three words lies possible war, whether they say so or not. He himself said that vital interests were tied up in the war, and he said we should protect those interests at "whatever cost." Of course, he did make a number of statements which I was very glad to hear. I think, frankly, we made a more definite isolationist out of him than he was when the hearings opened. But his past record has been consistent, regardless of the statements of the Senator from Illinois, and he has been an interventionist as I define intervention. Speaking of intervention, some think it possible to intervene in a contest by standing in a window and throwing rocks at people on the outside, and not expect to get into a fight. You cannot safely be halfway in and halfway out.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. BONE. In connection with the doctrine of the freedom of the seas, I wish to read a line or two from a colloquy before the committee dealing with the question of the use of belligerent waters by our own vessels:

Senator BONE. Colonel, may I ask what part do you believe the sinking of our vessel played in getting us into the World War?
Colonel KNOX. A great deal.
Senator BONE. It was a major factor, was it not?
Colonel KNOX. I think it was.
Senator BONE. So that when a vessel, flying the American flag, entered waters teeming with submarines, she was in immediate danger of being sunk?
Colonel KNOX. That is true.

In the face of that record Colonel Knox wants these vessels to again enter belligerent waters, and his argument in that behalf is that to surrender that right is to surrender a vital American right, and he characterizes a vital American right as a right worth sustaining by war. I think that record is plain enough, even for the gentleman whom he identifies as a "craven Congressman."

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, this is an exact quotation about the repeal of the Neutrality Act. This is the exact language of Colonel Knox:

It has repeatedly said, since the repeal, that the whole law should never have been enacted and should best be repealed now.

He speaks about the Daily News supporting repeal. The actual repeal itself was supported by that paper.

"A FEARFULLY GRAVE DECISION"

Before the Committee on Naval Affairs he said we were doing everything we could to help the Allies; that there was nothing else to be done; we were giving all the aid we could possibly give; but this is what he said on the 28th day of May 1940 in his paper, speaking about the destruction of Leopold's army in Belgium and the invasion of France. These are Colonel Knox's own words:

When that hour strikes—

If anyone wants the whole statement, I shall be glad to put it in the RECORD, but he speaks about the hour in which those nations now called Allies would fail—

When that hour strikes—and nothing but a miracle can prevent it—only a cowardly shrinking from facing the truth, a weak and imbecile refusal to confront stark reality would explain, but not condone, a failure of the leadership of America to tell the American people that a fearfully grave decision must be made.

I wish to repeat that. Perhaps I had better read the first two paragraphs so that there will be no question about it. This is what he said:

We are looking today upon the threatened collapse of European civilization.
It is literally impossible to exaggerate the seriousness of the Allied situation produced by the unconditional surrender of King Leopold's army in Belgium, which leaves the left wing of the French and British Army in Flanders open to the swift onslaught of Hitler's tanks, armored cars, and bombers.
News of the utter destruction or the surrender of the encircled armies, betrayed by the treachery of a weak king-commander, and cut off from supplies of ammunition and food, cannot be long delayed.
When that hour strikes—and nothing but a miracle can prevent it—only a cowardly shrinking from facing the truth, a weak and imbecile refusal to confront stark reality would explain, but not condone, a failure of the leadership of America to tell the American people that a fearfully grave decision must be made.

What did he mean by a fearfully grave decision? Before the committee he said that we have given all the aid we can. There is only one implication from that statement about a fearfully grave decision. He said then:

If we become convinced that France and Britain will be defeated without our assistance, are we going to help them, or are we to stand by and permit Germany to become dominant on both land and sea in Europe?

That is the important part. He said that we had given every assistance possible, and then he said:

If we become convinced that France and Britain will be defeated without our assistance, are we going to help them, or are we to stand by and permit Germany to become dominant on both land and sea in Europe?

If we have done everything we can, what did he mean by helping them more? There is only one avenue left along which to help them, and that means sending boys. That is the only avenue left if we continue to go in further. Is that the fearfully grave decision of which he speaks?

Of course, it is not yet proper to say that we will send boys over there, just as the Senator from Illinois said that no one wanted to send boys across. As late as February and March 1917 the very men who got this country into the World War were telling the people of this country that they were not going to war in Europe. What did Secretary Lansing say in 1915? That the people were not educated to go into the war at that time. Then in 1916 he made statements saying that we were not going into the war.

Some of us said last fall that the repeal of the arms embargo was a step toward war. We did not say it was a declaration of war; we said it was a step toward war, as it was. The President himself had said at Chautauqua, quite truly, that it was a day by day decision that would lead us into war, and the day by day decisions have all been in the direction of intervention and involvement in the war.

APPOINTMENT OF ADVOCATE OF WAR

The people are not quite enough "educated" to get this country into war; it is too close to an election to get them into war; but there are some men in this country who want us to go to war. Why did the President of the United States appoint as chief economist to the National Defense Council Mr. Stacy May, shortly after Stacy May made the statement that we should declare war against Germany?

Why was such an individual appointed at that time? The man who is economist of the Council of National Defense went on record publicly asking for a declaration of war against Germany.

There is no need to try to be smug and hide behind the facts. There is a movement to take us into war. The same old slogan is being used. The only reason why we have not come closer to it today than some of us feel we seem to be is the fact that no actual overt incident affecting America has occurred which would take us into war, but let an overt incident happen which affects America, let a spark occur that would set off the dynamite, and we would see how close we really are to war. Today some persons are trying to break down the defense against such overt incidents occurring. You do not always go into war by choice; you may go into war even if you desire not to go into it. Why create possibilities? If you send ships overseas, and they are sunk, if you open the avenue so one of them could be sunk, war would probably result. There is no one within the sound of my voice who does not know that if an overt incident were to occur America might become inflamed toward war overnight. America has not developed to that point yet, but do not fool yourselves; do not believe that the sentiment is not being spread by an interventionist group for such a reaction.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The other night a public-forum discussion occurred. One of the speakers was Colonel Breckenridge. The colonel proceeded to declare war right then and there. He said, "If I had the power to declare war, I would declare war tonight." As I understand, he is not very far away from the administration.

WAR ADVOCATE SAYS "APPOINTMENT MAGNIFICENT"

Mr. HOLT. Let me say what Colonel Breckenridge said about the appointment of Colonel Knox. He said, "His appointment is magnificent." The man of whom the Senator from Minnesota speaks, when questioned about the appointment of Colonel Knox in New York the day following the appointment, made the statement that Knox's appointment was magnificent. Of course, it is magnificent to all those who would involve us in intervention. I should like to have a single Senator rise on the floor of the Senate and name one interventionist, one individual who has asked for a declaration of war, who has protested against the appointment of Colonel Knox or the appointment of Colonel Stimson. Why is it that they say, "These appointments are magnificent"?

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] referred to the fact that some one spoke of the Cabinet as being a war Cabinet. Let me say that the English themselves seem to know that. This data was given to the Senate Monday by me. In discussing Colonel Stimson's appointment day before yesterday I stated in the RECORD that we all know that his appointment was made because, as Colonel Knox said, "The viewpoints are in accord with those of the President." They have discussed the question with the President, and they agree on the question of foreign policy as it affects the Navy. Does the President want to repeal the Neutrality Act? Does he desire the destruction of the Johnson Act? Does he feel our vital interests are at stake now? If so does he feel that we should intervene at whatever cost when our vital interests were affected?

Let us realize one thing. It is said, "No; we have not made a declaration of war yet." I hope we never do. But step by step we are taking actions that are bringing us close to the brink, and it is too dangerous to play on the avenue to war. I know and you all know that the appointment of Colonel Stimson and the appointment of Colonel Knox to be members of the President's Cabinet was a gesture toward intervention, when the Allies and others needed to have their morale bolstered by America.

I do not condemn the nominees personally when I say that. They have their viewpoint. But I do not think their viewpoint expresses the viewpoint of America, which wants to stay out of this war, and does not want to experiment and play around in Europe at the expense of the boys of America.

So far as I am concerned, I shall use the same judgment that the Senator from Illinois used. He said he was going to resolve the question of doubt in favor of Colonel Knox. I am going to resolve the question of doubt in favor of the American boys, the boys who would have to die as the result of a policy of intervention—a policy which is not publicly stated but privately made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Frank Knox to be Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Capper	Gillette	Johnson, Colo.
Andrews	Caraway	Green	King
Ashurst	Chandler	Guffey	La Follette
Austin	Chavez	Gurney	Lodge
Bailey	Clark, Idaho	Hale	Lucas
Barbour	Clark, Mo.	Harrison	Lundeen
Barkley	Connally	Hatch	McCarran
Bilbo	Danaher	Hayden	McKellar
Bone	Davis	Herring	McNary
Bridges	Downey	Hill	Maloney
Bulow	Ellender	Holman	Mead
Burke	George	Holt	Miller
Byrd	Gerry	Hughes	Minton
Byrnes	Gibson	Johnson, Calif.	Murray
Neely	Radcliffe	Shipstead	Tobey
Norris	Reed	Smith	Townsend
Nye	Reynolds	Stewart	Vandenberg
O'Mahoney	Russell	Taft	Van Nuys
Overton	Schwartz	Thomas, Idaho	Walsh
Pepper	Schwellenbach	Thomas, Okla.	White
Pittman	Sheppard	Thomas, Utah	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Frank Knox to be Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am informed that if present and voting he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote I should vote "nay." I withhold my vote.

Mr. LUCAS (when Mr. SLATTERY's name was called). My colleague [Mr. SLATTERY] is unavoidably detained on important public business. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MEAD (when Mr. WAGNER's name was called). My colleague the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is unavoidably absent. If he were present he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FRAZIER. On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. If the Senator from Alabama were present he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote I should vote "nay." I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] is absent on account of public business. Were he present he would vote "yea."

Mr. HILL. My colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] is absent on important public business.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], who is unavoidably detained. If he were present and voting he would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote I should vote "yea." I withhold my vote.

Mr. BYRD. My colleague, the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is unavoidably absent. Were he present he would vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. My colleague [Mr. TRUMAN] is necessarily absent. I am not advised how he would vote if present.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS]. These Senators are necessarily absent. If the Senator from Montana were present and voting he would vote "nay"; and if the Senator from New Jersey were present and voting he would vote "yea."

I also announce that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] is unavoidably detained. If present, he would vote "yea."

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY] is unavoidably detained.

The result was announced—yeas 66, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—66

So the nomination of Frank Knox, of Illinois, to be Secretary of the Navy was confirmed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of Colonel Knox's nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be immediately notified.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably the nominations of sundry citizens for appointment in the Foreign and Diplomatic Service of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

POSTMASTERS

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the remaining nominations on the calendar be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Marine Corps.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations in the Marine Corps be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Marine Corps are confirmed en bloc.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO REPORT DURING RECESS OR ADJOURNMENT

The Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Appropriations Committee and other Senate committees be authorized to submit reports during any recess or adjournment of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMPOSITION OF NAVY AND NAVAL CONSTRUCTION

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2051, House bill 10100, to establish the composition of the United States Navy, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, with amendments.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to offer a brief explanation of the bill.

This is the fourth naval bill which the Committee on Naval Affairs has reported to the Senate this year.

The first bill authorized an expansion of approximately 11 percent, and increased the authorized number of naval airplanes to 4,500.

The second bill increased the number of naval airplanes to 10,000, authorized the creation of facilities to train 16,000 naval aviators, and authorized the construction of additional naval air bases, both continental and overseas.

The third bill authorized the speeding up of naval shipbuilding and the procurement of naval airplanes. It authorized the Secretary of the Navy to negotiate contracts for vessels and planes, and removed the statutory limitation with respect to the cost of vessels and naval construction projects.

The Committee on Naval Affairs in its report recommending the passage of the first naval expansion bill, the 11 percent increase bill, stated:

> It is true that we would be more secure if we maintained a fleet in the Pacific and a fleet in the Atlantic, each superior to any which could be brought against it. In the future we may have to consider the possibility of building and maintaining two fleets.

That statement was written in the early part of the present session before the situation in Europe became so alarming from the standpoint of our own security as it is today. The bill now before the Senate would authorize the building in the immediate future of such an increase in our Navy as would enable us to have a fleet in the Atlantic and a fleet in the Pacific.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator says the result to which he refers is to be achieved in the near future. Can the Senator indicate when we may hope to complete the program to which he now addresses himself?

Mr. WALSH. Not, possibly, before 1946.

Mr. VANDENBERG. So up until 1946 it would not be a bad idea, would it, to maintain in the Far East a diplomatic attitude as reasonably friendly as possible?

Mr. WALSH. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The total authorizations for the Navy, including those in this bill, will be approximately $10,000,000,000, will they not?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, and I will come to that directly.

Mr. President, the authorized under-age tonnage of the Navy today is 1,724,480 tons. This bill proposes an increase of approximately 70 percent in that tonnage; namely, an increase of 1,325,000 tons.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I desire to ask whether or not the appropriations which heretofore have been made at the present session and the last session and the previous session are not sufficient to occupy fully the facilities which the Government has and which it may acquire before it enters upon the program which the bill now under consideration calls for?

Mr. WALSH. It is my information that the money already appropriated will necessitate the use of all the private and public shipbuilding facilities this country now has. We have already, in addition to those facilities, appropriated substantial sums of money to enlarge existing facilities.

Mr. KING. Then, if I may make a further inquiry, the appropriation which is authorized by this bill will probably not be drawn upon for 1 or 2 years?

Mr. WALSH. I understand a request is to be made for an appropriation from the present Congress to provide additional facilities which will make possible commencing next year the building of some of the ships provided for by the pending bill.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator refer to facilities provided in the bill which is now under consideration?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

I may briefly state what the pending bill provides:

First. It increases the authorized composition of the United States Navy in underage combatant vessels by 1,325,000 tons.

Second. It authorizes an appropriation of $150,000,000 for essential equipment and facilities at either private or naval establishments for building or equipping any complete naval vessel or portion thereof heretofore authorized, or authorized by this bill.

Third. It authorizes an appropriation of $65,000,000 for essential equipment and facilities for the manufacture of ordnance material or munitions at either private or naval establishments.

Fourth. It authorizes an appropriation of $35,000,000 for the expansion of facilities for the production of armor at either private or naval establishments.

Fifth. It authorizes the President to acquire and convert or to undertake the construction of—

(a) Patrol, escort, and miscellaneous craft as may be necessary to supplement the tonnages heretofore authorized or authorized by this bill.

(b) One hundred thousand tons of auxiliary vessels.

Sixth. It provides that no vessel, ship, or boat—except ships' boats—now in the United States Navy or being built for the Navy shall be disposed of by sale or otherwise except as is now provided by law.

Seventh. It increases the number of useful naval airplanes from not more than 10,000 to a total of 15,000, and provides that this total may be exceeded if, in the judgment of the President, this number is not sufficient to meet the needs of the national defense.

I now call attention to costs. The estimated cost of the construction of the vessels authorized by this bill is $3,760,000,000; the cost of additional shipbuilding, armor, and ordnance facilities is $250,000,000, making the estimated total cost of the bill, exclusive of planes, $4,010,000,000.

Now, as to the estimated cost of airplanes. The estimated cost of procuring the additional planes authorized by this bill—and that is optional, of course—is $600,000,000. So the total estimated cost of this bill, if all the authorizations are translated into appropriations, is $4,610,000,000.

The estimated costs of procuring the additional planes, ordnance equipment, and personnel, and the estimated cost of constructing the additional aviation facilities authorized by the act approved June 15, 1940, are as follows:

(a) For additional planes, $1,150,000,000.

(b) For additional shore facilities, $410,000,000.

(c) For training of pilots, $90,000,000.

(d) For procurement and training of additional personnel, $300,000,000.

(e) For ordnance equipment, bombs, torpedoes, ammunition, and so forth, $300,000,000.

Making a total of $2,250,000,000.

The additional appropriations required to complete the large number of vessels now under construction are $2,800,000,000.

The gross total is $9,660,000,000.

So if for every vessel now being constructed and every naval plane heretofore authorized the necessary appropriations are made, and all the planes authorized by this bill and all the increases in the Navy authorized by this bill are translated into appropriations, the total cost to this country between now and 1946, which is the earliest time when this program can be completed, will be $9,660,000,000.

The Navy Department is authorized to spend, approximately, $10,000,000 during the next 6 years for the construction of naval vessels and naval airplanes and for additional shore facilities. This figure of $10,000,000 is in addition to the annual maintenance appropriation which will be required, and it is also exclusive of the cost of replacement of naval vessels and naval aircraft which will become over-age or obsolete during the next 6 years. In other words, these figures do not include the maintenance cost that will continue from year to year. Furthermore, they have nothing to do with and do not relate to the replacement of vessels which will become obsolete and require replacement in the future.

As the Senate knows, whether a naval vessel is over-age or under-age is determined by law, and the Navy Department, without any further authorization, can come before the Appropriations Committee and ask for a replacement of battleships, cruisers, destroyers, submarines, or aircraft which have become over-age by reason of having been in use for a given number of years—26 years in the case of battleships, 20 years in the case of cruisers, 16 years in the case of destroyers, and 13 years in the case of submarines.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WALSH. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. Do the figures given by the Senator relate only to the authorization made for the Navy?

Mr. WALSH. That is all.

Mr. GEORGE. They do not include anything for the Army?

Mr. WALSH. Nothing whatsoever.

Mr. GEORGE. Not even for the Air Service?

Mr. WALSH. Not even for the Air Service of the Army. They relate simply to vessels and aircraft for the Navy and Marine Corps, solely and alone, and to the establishment also of naval bases and the increasing of the facilities for constructing naval vessels and aircraft at expanded navy yards and expanded private yards.

Mr. GEORGE. The recommendations submitted in the President's message today are, of course, additional to the amount which the Senator has mentioned?

Mr. WALSH. Yes. These are additional authorizations.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. DOWNEY. Unless the Senator intends to cover the subject later, I should like to inquire about the number of personnel now in the Navy and how much of an increase will be required by the completion of the program now under way. I also should like to have the Senator tell us whether, in his opinion, conscription will be required to build up the personnel of the Navy?

Mr. WALSH. The present personnel of the Navy is, for the Regular Navy, 10,817 officers and 139,060 enlisted men. The number of retired officers on active duty—men who have been retired, and have been called back because of the emergency—is 527. In the Naval Reserve there are 15,216 officers and 40,204 men. The Reserve personnel on active duty, however, is but 2,437 officers and 4,886 men. This number includes aviation cadets and Fleet Reserve and Naval Reserve men. So the number of officers now on active duty is approximately 13,000. The number of enlisted men on active duty is approximately 143,000 or 144,000. The appropriation bill of this year authorized an increase in the enlisted personnel to 170,000.

The Senator asks me what will be the increase in the personnel. I can answer him only indirectly. The increase that we are proposing is an increase of 70 percent in the size of our Navy; so it would follow that there would be a 70-percent increase in the number of enlisted men and in the number of officers. I understand that approximately 17,000 officers and 226,500 men are required for the Navy now built and building. I assume that a 70-percent increase in officers and men over the figures given will be required for the expansion authorized by the present bill.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DANAHER. I should like to direct the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to section 8 of the pending bill.

Mr. WALSH. Pardon me: In the figures I gave the Senator from California, I gave him only the number of officers and enlisted men in the Navy. I should have added the number of officers and enlisted men in the Marine Corps; and I will add those now, so that they may be connected.

In the regular Marine Corps there are 1,336 officers, 139 warrant officers, and 26,450 enlisted men. In the Marine Corps Reserve there are 1,128 officers, 17 warrant officers, and 15,000 enlisted men. Of aviation cadets there are 42. The number of retired officers on active duty is 89, and 6 warrant officers. The number of Reserve officers on active duty is 270, 1 warrant officer, and 94 enlisted men.

That means a total of approximately 27,000 men now, but in the appropriation bill of this year provision was made for increasing that number by 9,000, so that we shall have in the Marine Corps an enlisted personnel of approximately 36,000.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield to me while I point out——

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. DOWNEY. I merely want to point out to the Senator that my question also asked him to discuss his opinion of the necessity of increasing the personnel in the Navy through some sort of conscription plan, such as we are discussing for the Army.

Mr. WALSH. The Navy, unlike the Army, has had practically no trouble in enlistments, and that is true also of the Marine Corps. For some reason or other, which I assume Senators have detected in their applications for appointment to the Naval Academy, there seems to be much more willingness to enlist in the Navy than in the Army. I have observed it, as we all have, in our applications for both academies. I have observed, as probably all Senators have observed, that the number of applicants for appointment to the Naval Academy is at least three or four times as great as for the Military Academy; and I am sorry to say that I have observed—it is only personal—rather a reluctance on the part of our young men to enlist in the Army. That, however, is only personal observation, and perhaps conversation, rather than figures or statistics. I judge, from the figures presented here, that I am probably mistaken in that conclusion; but that situation at least does not apply to the Navy, and I do not think there is any doubt whatever that we can get all the enlistments that the Navy needs; and, of course, its needs increase as new ships are commissioned. The present number of 170,000 enlisted men authorized for the Navy in the next fiscal year will be ample, in my opinion; but the new vessels that are coming forth and being commissioned each year will require increased personnel, and we are training men now for that purpose.

The serious problem, the real problem, is the matter of pilots for airplanes. As the Senator knows, in the previous bill which came from this committee provision was made for increasing our aviation schools, so that, instead of having only one school, that at Pensacola, we shall have several others for training purposes; and instead of training 150 a month, we hope to turn out 400 trained pilots per month. The time for training has been reduced from a year to about 8 months. Also, the Navy proposes to reduce the requirements for admission to the aviation training schools from a full college requirement to 2 years of college, and that will be quite an advantage.

I am pleased to say that so far as the Navy is concerned there is no question about filling up our needs, and there seems to be a rather popular appeal for the Navy. Of course, as the Senator knows, for an ambitious boy there is very much greater opportunity for advancement in the Navy than in the Army. A young man who is mechanically inclined, and goes to the Navy schools, can rapidly increase his compensation from the $31 a month he gets in the beginning up to $80, $90, $100, $120, or even as high as $150 a month, and that is an inducement; and a large number of the young men are not only going to the Navy schools, taking advantage of all the educational facilities we have, but they are taking correspondence courses and attending classes on the ships with their officers and showing a disposition to advance themselves and progress.

Since I have been in contact with the Navy, I think I have been more impressed with the personnel of the enlisted men than with anything else in the Navy, even more than with the officers; and that is saying a good deal, because I think the Navy has a very high quality of personnel. But Senators would be proud of the enlisted personnel in the Navy if they knew them as I happen to know them, and as the officers speak of them.

Only yesterday I made a trip down the river on one of the mosquito fleet boats, the only one we have here. It is at the navy yard, and I am sure Senators would be interested to go down and see it. I took the trip down to Mount Vernon in this boat, which ordinarily goes at the rate of about 27 knots and can speed up to 45 or 47 knots. The boat was manned entirely by enlisted men.

There was an officer in command, but all the mechanical work of running the boat was done by the enlisted men; and I assume probably they are paid a substantial wage, perhaps ninety or one hundred dollars a month.

I cannot speak too highly of the enlisted men of the Navy. I have never heard an officer speak of them who has not spoken in the most eulogistic terms of their devotion, their zeal, their intelligence, and their pride in their positions. Officer after officer has said to me, "We just could not exist without the spirit of the enlisted men." That is why I have a great deal of confidence in the personnel of our Navy; and after all, as I have said before on the floor of the Senate, it is not steel that wins naval battles; it is the capacity, the ability, the spirit, and the courage of the men who man the guns.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, if I may interpolate a few words there, the statement the Senator from Massachusetts has made is very, very encouraging; and our Navy is a very bright spot in our national defense. I think we are all very happy over it; and we here in the Senate give a great deal of credit to the chairman of our Naval Affairs Committee for the very able way in which the affairs of the Navy have been carried on.

May I ask the Senator a further question? I assume that the remarks he has made as to the personnel of the Navy apply equally to the Marine Corps.

Mr. WALSH. Yes. In the Marine Corps, however, advancement is not as rapid as it is in the Navy. There is a real problem there. It has not the opportunity for advancement that exists in the Navy. The members of the Marine Corps are soldiers, and they have only the advancement that the Army has, and it is very limited. Their wages on the average, as the Senator knows, are less than those of men in the Navy—as more of them are in the lower-pay grades. They are, however, supplied with their clothes. The marine must look spick-and-span. In this country he is a good deal on dress parade, and a man who, besides his duties as a soldier, acts as guard, and so forth.

But we have provided, in one of the bills before the committee—a bill which I shall later take up—to increase the number of first-class privates in the Marine Corps from 40 percent to 50 percent. We increased it 2 years ago from 25 to 40 percent, and we increase it in this bill from 40 to 50 percent; and we are also providing for the same wages to be paid young marines who are working on planes, doing the mechanical work on planes, that are paid to naval enlisted men. That will be some inducement, but I have been very much disturbed about the fact that, for example, when I was on the west coast and inspected the fleet, and when I have been at other places, I have asked the guard of marines who extend the courtesy of honoring guests who come to the vessels of the fleet, to raise their hands, those who would seek reenlistment, and I have been very much surprised to find that very few of them reenlist.

That is a disadvantage, and yet it is somewhat of an advantage. By reason of their occupation and the nature of their work, in time of war, as the Senators know, they are the ones who must leave the ships and go ashore and begin the attack ashore. They must be the soldiers on board the vessels of the Navy; and that kind of service requires young men, while in the Navy a man may be 35 or 40 years of age, and be mechanically inclined, and be just as useful as if he were 21 or 24 years of age.

So the turn-over in the Marine Corps, while it is very rapid, has that one single advantage, and I have personally interested myself in finding some way to induce these men to remain longer, and to provide for some system of promotion, which I hope we will be able to work out.

Senators will be interested to know, too, that the Navy Department recently, much against my judgment—I was not consulted, of course—increased the period of enlistment to 6 years from 4 years. I was reluctant to think it was a wise move. I was afraid it would result in a decrease in enlistments, taking 6 years from a boy's life, from 18 to 24, being a pretty valuable gift to his country. But there has been no diminution in enlistments.

Mr. DOWNEY. Does that relate to the Marine Corps, or the Navy?

Mr. WALSH. Just to the Navy, I think. So enthusiastic was I about the enlisted men and their devotion to duty and their capacity that in making a speech not long ago before the Daughters of the American Revolution, when referring to the personnel of the Navy and the enlisted men, I said to them:

> You never should meet an enlisted man on the street without going up and shaking his hand and thanking him that he was for $31 a month giving 6 years of his life in training to protect you and me, our lives, our homes, our fortunes, our institutions.

In the Marine Corps the personnel is quite different from that in the Navy. The Marine Corps personnel is a finer physical group. The marines are all fine appearing, solid, substantial physical types, and their training is the training of a soldier. I would say that man for man, from the physical standpoint, the Marine Corps would make a better showing and a better appearance, but I do not think they are any better in their love of their work, their devotion to duty, than the enlisted men in the Navy, or as good.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. DOWNEY. Does a first-class marine receive $31 a month?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; he gets that as a reward of merit. Very few of them get that until after they have been in the service for some time. They begin at $21 and then they can go up to $36. Up to last year only 25 percent of the privates could be privates first class, then it was raised to 40 percent, and this year it is being increased to 50 percent, as an inducement to the men to render meritorious service. Twenty-one dollars is pretty low pay.

I wish to tell a story about some enlisted men. Before I had the position I now occupy, or before I was known as occupying this position, I was on a boat in Newport with some friends and wanted to go over to visit a destroyer where there was an officer whom I knew, and whom I wanted to visit. I hailed a naval barge that was passing, told them who I was, and asked if they would take me over. I got on the barge and was taken to the ship. When I left the barge I threw $2 at the four men on the barge for their kindness in taking me over. Two or three days afterward the commanding officer sent me the $2. The boys had turned it in, because it was against the regulations to accept such a gift. Of course, I could send them cigarettes, as I did afterward. But I thought that was indicative of a high sense of honor and of character and loyalty, and it impressed me very much. I could give many such illustrations.

Seventy to eighty percent of the enlisted men in the Navy send home to their folks money out of their scanty pay. So we have every reason to feel proud of our Navy. I am very happy to say these things publicly, because I think our people have a natural affection for these Navy men, and I like to have them know it is not misplaced, that the Navy is deserving of the best that can be said of it.

As I have said before, so far as the officers are concerned, there is no body of men in the United States, in any profession, who study more and are required to study more to improve themselves, and to pass examinations which recur every 7 years, than the naval officers. There are the medical and the legal professions and the ministry, but no other profession requires the exacting hours of work and study the Navy requires. Man after man at the Navy Post Graduate School has told me that he has not known a single night he was free, except occasionally Saturday night. The intensity of their studies is very remarkable. I have been very much impressed.

No man completes his work or his effort to improve himself in the Navy until he gets to the grade of admiral, then he folds his arms and takes it easy, as he probably is entitled to.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further comment?

Mr. WALSH. I am very glad to.

Mr. DOWNEY. I first wish to say that what the Senator has said has been intensely interesting to me, and I believe to most of the Senators present.

I have recently been informed that in the Army only about 10 percent of the privates become what they call first-class privates, entitled to $30 a month. I would suggest that if the Army could somewhat follow the principle now being suggested by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, and increase the percentage of first-class privates along the lines indicated by the Senator, it would be a very wise thing.

Mr. WALSH. I think so, too. There is this difference between the Army and the Navy. The naval officers live with their men. They are all on shipboard together. They come in contact morning, noon, and night. They do not mess together, but there is a friendliness and an intimacy that does not interfere with discipline, but makes for a common bond.

I was surprised not long ago to have someone tell me that he had picked up some Marines coming from Quantico, who were thumbing for a ride. They told him they had never yet had an officer refuse to give them a ride, that their officers bring them back to the post frequently. This treatment outside of the post shows a good spirit. The moment an officer gets out on the highway, he is no longer an officer, so far as associating with the men is concerned.

I wish to say one other thing, and I say it only for our consideration, and not in criticism. I suspect there is a feeling that the inadequacy of the Army and the lack of modern mechanism and complete preparation, for which we are all to blame, has had a deterrent effect on enlistments in the Army. I suspect that from things which have been said to me. I do not repeat them in criticism, but I am trying to make a contrast between the two services.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I should like to direct the Senator's attention to section 8 of the bill, and with that section before the Senator, I wish to read two sentences from the committee report dealing with that particular section. The committee advises us:

> Ten thousand airplanes is the number required for our Navy now built and building.

The concluding sentence of the committee report dealing with section 8 states:

> The committee are of the opinion that an authorization for 15,000 useful naval airplanes is justified at this time.

That the total of 15,000 includes the 10,000 referred to in the report?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. That is correct?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. The committee having concluded that an authorization of 15,000 is justified at this time, will the Senator please explain the remaining language of the section, which reads:

> Provided, That if, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, the total number of airplanes authorized herein is not sufficient to meet the needs of the national defense, he may, with the approval of the President, make such plans for procurement as the situation may demand.

Let me say to the Senator that I know of no other bill, though my research, I admit, has been scant, that contains such a clause, and I should be happy if the Senator would explain whether that is the language of the committee, and what they intend by it.

Mr. WALSH. One of the difficulties we have had with all of these bills, including the one before us, was not to have the construction program get too far away from the Congress. I think that is what the Senator has in mind. We have guarded that situation very much in the legislation. I thought at times that if we kept making these sweeping authorizations, the Committee on Naval Affairs might as well go out of business, there would be nothing for us to do, that all the Navy would have to do would be to go and get the money. So an effort has been made to limit the number of payments. In one other bill, at least, similar language is used, and the Navy construe their authorization to be the number indicated, the same language being employed.

The reason for the legislation is that there was an assumption that Congress might adjourn for 6 months, and if there really was a crisis developing in this country, or a threatened crisis of much more severity than we anticipate now, this sweeping power should be given to the President.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Sentor yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. The power, let me say to the Senator, is not being given to the President. But, above all, the Senator does not expect that the 15,000 planes herein authorized will be built during the next 6 months, does he?

Mr. WALSH. No. The proviso reads, "with the approval of the President."

Mr. DANAHER. Yes, I understand it says "with the approval of the "President." But it goes on to say that if the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy is to the effect that this authorization is not sufficient, he may, with the approval of the President, make plans for additional procurement.

The Congress certainly is perfectly acquiescent in granting naval defense appropriations, is it not?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. And it is expected, of course, that this new bill will be passed?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. And by it we are increasing the authorization from 10,000 planes, which we do not even now have, to 15,000 planes, which we will not have in 6 months.

Mr. WALSH. That is true.

Mr. DANAHER. Is there any reason why we should not strike out the language beginning with "Provided," in section 8, on the ground that if and when there be a need demonstrated, the Congress will readily acquiesce and give the Navy whatever it requires?

Mr. WALSH. That proviso was added in the House. We accepted it in the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate. It was inserted in the House because the Army has exactly the same authority to build unlimited numbers of planes for 2 years. We have sinned on the side of being too liberal. I do not desire to make comparisons, but we have had a good deal of difficulty in holding back the Navy from demanding the extreme authorizations that have been granted to the Army, the Navy's coworker in the field of national defense.

I personally have no objection to that language going out of the bill. We cannot build before another session more than 15,000 planes. But I wish to say that whenever we have inserted a number, as in this case, the Navy Department has construed that number to be the limitation.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me point out to the Senator that, in the very sincere judgment of several earnest Senators, there has been much justifiable criticism of an attitude of mind on the part of the Secretary of the Navy whose nomination was confirmed only this afternoon. Now we find language to the effect that if, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, the total number of airplanes is not sufficient to meet the needs of the national defense, certain things shall be done. Let me point out to the Senator that there is no definition provided of the term "national defense." Let me point out further that when we passed Public, No. 671, less than a month ago, we talked then in terms of defense of the United States.

Mr. President, there is a difference, and I submit to the Senator from Massachusetts himself that he demonstrated his own views on the subject of what is national defense in a splendid speech he made here a few days ago. What may be the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, now incumbent, as to national defense and what may be necessary for the defense of the United States may easily take two very different and widely divergent lines and may be judged from two very different and opposed points of view.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, there is always the further step of proving before the Committee on Appropriations the need and the requirement in order to get the necessary amount of money. The committee, of course, also had that in mind. Furthermore, it is to be assumed that the Secretary of the Navy, whoever he may be, will be reasonable and will not enter upon an expensive and extravagant program of building planes which are not absolutely needed for national defense. The President himself spoke about 50,000 planes, as the Senator from Connecticut knows.

I have felt that the Congress at this time ought not to put itself in such a position that the Navy Department or the War Department could accuse it of being responsible for not building up the national defense. One former Cabinet officer has attempted to place some blame on the Congress without justification.

Of course, he is a candidate for office, and that may explain why he takes such a position. But I have felt that we ought not to put the Congress in such a position that someone could say, "We asked for this, and Congress did not give it to us. The Congress is therefore responsible. We wanted these vessels, and Congress did not give us the appropriation for which we asked."

Before adjournment I shall try to have a complete record of all that has been done by the Naval Affairs Committee during the time I have been chairman of it, going back to 1934, and during the time when the late Senator Trammell was chairman, to show that we have provided everything for which the Navy has asked.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from Massachusetts that, as I recall, the distinguished Senator from Connecticut made a speech about 2 or 3 weeks ago in which he bemoaned the fact that we had not made greater military and naval appropriations. Now he wants to strike out the proviso which would authorize the Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President, to secure additional planes. Before he could obtain them he would have to get the Appropriations Committee to provide the money, of course.

The country wants this program speeded up. We all want it speeded up. I do not think the proviso ought to go out of the bill. For God's sake, let us let the Navy proceed and build these planes; and if 10,000 planes are not enough, let us provide 15,000 or 25,000, if it is necessary for the defense of the country. The Secretary of the Navy and the President are not going to have those planes built unless they think it is necessary, and the Congress is not going to give them the money unless it thinks it is necessary. I am not in favor of hampering or hog-tying or hobbling the Navy and the War Department. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut should be rejected and that the proviso should stay in the bill.

I commend the Senator from Massachusetts. He has always been in favor of an adequate navy. For myself, I have always been classed as a big navy man. A year and a half ago I spoke in this Chamber and pointed out that sooner or later we would have to have a two-ocean navy, a navy which could dominate the Atlantic—we cannot depend on the Canal entirely—and another navy capable of dominating the Pacific. Then, when we get that sort of a Navy, if we want to make faces at Europe, we can do it; and if we want to tell the Japs what we think of them, we can do it. I understand that this bill gives us a two-ocean navy.

Mr. WALSH. This bill provides what the Senator has advocated and what I advocated 3 years ago, a proposal which was received with very much criticism at the time.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes, there was criticism all over the country. But it is not criticized now. Our people today want a two-ocean navy. This bill will give us a two-ocean navy, and for God's sake let us go on and get it, and not tie the Navy and the Army in the matter of appropriations.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield for a moment again?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me point out that the Senator from Massachusetts has frankly and honestly admitted that we do not have 10,000 planes now for the Navy. This very bill will increase the authorization limit to 15,000 planes, and that is quite all right. We are all in favor of that, because it is coincident with and collateral to the program which is outlined in the bill.

Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts has stated "we will not get the 15,000 planes in the next 6 months." We will not get them in 18 months, as a matter of fact. But the Congress will be back here, and if and when plans needed for additional aircraft expansion, for naval expansion, or any other expansion, are required, the whole situation can be submitted to the Congress, and the Congress will then be able to be in a position properly to evaluate the program and, of course, will provide the money if the Navy Department needs it.

I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for his courtesy.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I will finish the discussion of this question by reading for the information of the Senate the composition of the Navy when this program is completed. It is very interesting:

Composition of Navy when program is completed: When the vessels authorized by the present bill are completed in 1946 or 1947, the United States Navy will be composed of vessels approximately as follows:

Battleships	35
Aircraft carriers	20
Cruisers	88
Destroyers	378
Submarines	180
Total	701

We have now 301 vessels in commission and 72 out of commission. Only 150 of these vessels are under-age. We have about 137 vessels building. Then those in this bill, which would be completed by 1947, would give us a total of 701 vessels, which will be almost 100 percent increase over the present naval strength as of March 1, this year.

Of the above, the following vessels will be over-age in 1947:

Battleships	13
Aircraft carriers	2
Cruisers	10
Destroyers	123
Submarines	74
Total	222

One of the difficulties of the naval program is that all the time vessels are becoming over-age and have to be replaced.

The following combatant vessels were under construction on July 5, 1940. These are the latest figures:

Battleships	10
Aircraft carriers	5
Cruisers	21
Destroyers	61
Submarines	40
Total	137

I think that completes the information.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have been very much interested and I congratulate the Senator from Massachusetts.

What, if anything, is the Navy doing toward putting on more than one shift? We talk about building ships for 1946, but if we were to have a war in 1942 or 1943 those ships would not be of much utility. Why does not the Navy require the contractors to put on a double shift, or why do we not put on double shifts in our navy yards? We have many navy yards, have we not?

Mr. WALSH. In some instances it is being done, but only in connection with essential vessels and certain essential items.

Mr. CONNALLY. They are all essential, or we ought not to spend any money for them.

Mr. WALSH. I am now giving my own opinion. I do not know what the answer of the Navy Department would be, except that it has not yet been done.

Mr. CONNALLY. It ought to be done.

Mr. WALSH. I agree with the Senator, but one of the difficulties is the overtime.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am talking about two or three shifts.

Mr. WALSH. Draftsmen, designers, and specialists of various kinds are very difficult to obtain. In fact, we are draining personnel from our private yards into our navy yards for the purpose of obtaining specially skilled and highly trained experts. We can obtain enough common labor, but one of the difficulties is to obtain enough specialists to carry on certain types of work.

Let me say to the Senator that I am in accord with his view. I know that the Navy is contemplating taking such steps as fast as possible, but one of the handicaps is that which I have mentioned. Furthermore, persons are being trained in schools to qualify them for this specialized work.

Mr. CONNALLY. Some of the personnel may require such training; but the best training on earth is to put a man to work at a job. He then learns it. I certainly think the Army and the Navy ought to put on at least two, and if possible, three shifts a day. Several million men are unemployed throughout the country, and we are still pursuing the old way of building ships.

Mr. WALSH. What the Senator suggests is being done, but not to the sweeping extent which the Senator from Texas, myself, and others would like to see.

Mr. CONNALLY. It ought to be done.

Mr. WALSH. There are some difficulties, and time is required to develop and work out the program.

However, I understand that it is the purpose and intention of the Navy Department to do as the Senator suggests. As the Senator knows, in a previous bill speeding up construction we have given the Navy Department unlimited authority in that direction. We provided that overtime should not be paid on jobs for which persons could be found to do the work. I am sure the Senator agrees with that policy.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. That policy is now a matter of law. I thank the Senator for his observation.

Mr. CONNALLY. I hope the Senator will do his best to wake up some of the sleepy old admirals and put them to work.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I notice that the schedule which the Senator read calls for 180 submarines by 1946.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is that enough submarines for a two-ocean navy?

Mr. WALSH. The bill was drafted by the Navy Department on the basis and theory that that number would be sufficient, but we are now developing a small 70-foot motor torpedo boat and other small boats. There is one now at the navy yard, and I think it is leaving tomorrow. It would be well worth while for every Senator to see it. It is thought that such vessels would to some extent take the place of submarines.

The President has a very excellent idea in this connection. He does not believe so much in a large number of big, clumsy, slow-moving ships as in an overwhelming number of small, speedy vessels. I concur in his view in that respect. I was informed that Germany now has operating 400 fast-moving mosquito-fleet vessels. Their speed is only 33 knots, as against our speed of 45 knots. Yesterday I rode down to Mount Vernon in one of the boats, part of the way at 45 knots.

That type of vessel is a very remarkable new development. It first appeared in the Mediterranean 2 years ago under the Italians, at the time of their fight with Ethiopia. Perhaps the Senator read the story, which indicated how surprised the British were to find a cluster of torpedo boats running all around them. Of course, they did not open fire on them, but the demonstration was a revelation at any rate. It is said that Germany has 400 such boats in operation.

A couple of evenings ago I either read or heard on the radio a remarkable story of destruction of commercial vessels by such fast-moving, speedy boats. The same naval officer who gave me the information about the 400 boats told me that since 1938 Germany had had 6,000 men employed in building this single type of vessel. Having been deprived under the treaty of the opportunity to build large cruisers and battleships, she has concentrated on submarines and smaller vessels.

The Senator has raised a question which I cannot answer. I can only say that this is the Navy Department's bill. I think there is a movement—which I am disposed to favor—toward an overwhelming number of small, swift-moving craft which carry a few torpedoes, and which can go out of our harbors and prevent any raids being made or any attempts to land on our shores, supplementing the fleet itself at some distance from land. I think the Senator has raised a question which I should like to look into.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the importance of the small boats, and yet they are surface boats. They are frail. They are bound to be frail.

Mr. WALSH. And they will not last very long.

Mr. BARKLEY. They will not last very long. They must be frail, because they are only about 70 feet long.

Mr. WALSH. I think most of them are wooden boats.

Mr. BARKLEY. In view of the effective depredations which have been made by submarines, both in the World War and in this war, I think we should not neglect that phase of the matter. The submarines are able to slip up on their prey. That does not appeal to me as a sportsman-like way to fight, but still we must deal with conditions and not with theories. It rather struck me that 180 submarines for two oceans is a small number. I appreciate the fact that I am not an expert on either submarines or surface craft, but it seems to me important that there should be enough submarines, as a part of our Navy, to meet all requirements in any sort of naval warfare.

Mr. WALSH. Amplifying what the Senator says, when we learn, as the statistics show, that Italy alone has over 100 submarines, the number seems small.

Mr. BARKLEY. It seems to me small.

Mr. WALSH. I am somewhat surprised to find that the able Senator from Kentucky, who knows so much about general legislation, is so familiar with technical naval terms and has so much technical knowledge of the Navy. I required a long time to obtain what knowledge I have, and I am surprised to see that the Senator's questions indicate a familiarity with the subject equal to that of any member of the committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have learned much on the subject of naval construction from the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am interested in the observations made by the Senator from Kentucky. As the Senator may recall—I have forgotten whether or not he was on the Naval Affairs Committee at that time—for several years I was a member of the Naval Affairs Committee. I believed that those in charge of the Navy were a little too inert, a little too old-fashioned, and I was so out of patience with them that I resigned from the committee, having other assignments, of course.

The point I wish to make is that we had an investigation as to the efficacy—indeed, the imperative necessity—of submarines. I had Admiral Sims and Rear Admiral Fullam appear before the committee. The head of the Navy—I shall not mention his name—and others were resistant to the proposal that the Navy should have a considerable number of submarines and airplanes.

Mr. WALSH. Was this after the World War?

Mr. KING. This was immediately after the World War. Admiral Sims testified as to the importance of submarines, and challenged attention to the fact that the British Fleet had to flee, as the Senator will recall, and take refuge in Scapa Flow after the battle of Skagerrak because the submarines were too much of a menace. Notwithstanding the great fleet which the British had, they had to flee and take refuge at Scapa Flow. Admiral Sims stated that one of the imperative needs of the Navy was the submarine, and that we must build more submarines.

I offered a resolution to create a bureau of submarines and a bureau of airplanes. It did not meet with favor in the Navy Department. The Navy Department officials were "sold" on the battleship and the big cruiser, and they were indifferent to the new method of warfare; namely, the submarine and the airplane.

I am glad to see that there has been an awakening, and that we are beginning to appreciate the fact that we must have submarines. They are an indispensable part of the Navy.

I rose particularly to inquire of the Senator whether or not recent investigations have demonstrated that the battleship and the battle cruiser are playing as important a part in naval warfare as it was believed they were called upon to perform a number of years ago, before we had the submarine and the airplane.

Mr. WALSH. There has been no real test as yet. The battleship's value would depend to a great extent upon the result of an open fight between two fleets at sea. If that occurred, I am convinced from my investigations of the subject that the battleship would be found indispensable if the opposing fleet had battleships.

As I have said before, the battleship is a fortress at sea. An airplane carrier is a landing field at sea. The battleship has the heaviest guns that can be carried; it has the longest range guns; and it is like moving a fort that is on land, in a harbor, out into the middle of the sea. When the attack comes the battleship is the most deadly and destructive of all.

If other fleets did not contain battleships it might not be necessary for our fleet to contain battleships; but, however powerful and effective our fleet might be, if the enemy had a battleship or two it could raise havoc, because it could stand far away from the reach of our guns, and pour its fire into our fleet, and destroy it.

Mr. KING. I noticed in the newspapers a few nights ago that in the case of a French battleship in the harbor of Oran, or perhaps at Alexandria—I have forgotten which—a brave Englishman in a little motorboat took a depth bomb and discharged it under the stern of the battleship, and so ruined it that it partially sank.

Mr. WALSH. I understand that the ship was aground, and could not move.

I will ask the members of the committee whether I am correct in the statement which was made before our committee that no battleship yet has been destroyed by a bomb dropped from the air. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] says I am correct in that statement. We went into that subject. Cruisers have been so destroyed. The armor plate on the battleship and its defenses against airplane and bombing attacks are very great. Of course, the weakest of all our vessels from the standpoint of their own defense are the airplane carriers, because they are lightly constructed, carry a heavy load, and have great speed.

I should say that up-to-date events show that we cannot discard the battleship.

Mr. KING. I rose primarily to support the view expressed by the Senator from Kentucky as to the importance of the submarine. I cannot forget the very clear and concise and strong testimony of Admiral Sims, who was one of the greatest naval men of his day. I do not know whether we have his equal now or not.

Mr. WALSH. I detected in the early days—not so much recently, especially with the lessons of the World War—a disposition on the part of the men who went up through the Navy and became admirals to have an affection, which I suppose was natural, and a fondness for the weapons they themselves used. Most admirals, of course, came from the fleet, where battleships are considered supreme, and therefore there was a little reluctance on their part to accept the value of the submarine, or even the airplane. I am happy to say that that is all gone now.

Mr. KING. Admiral Sims, of course, was overseas, as the Senator knows. He had charge of our fleet, and I think he brought new life into the British Navy, and the result of his fine work made an important contribution to the ending of the war.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. In confirmation of what the Senator from Massachusetts said about the value of the battleship and heavy armor, were not all those aspects vindicated in the recent battle between the English Fleet and the French Fleet? Were not the French vessels put out of business by the heavy armament and the heavy artillery of the British Fleet?

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from Texas is absolutely right.

Mr. CONNALLY. They were not put out of business by the airplane.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DANAHER. A few minutes since, when the Senator from Massachusetts so graciously yielded to me, we did not have at hand the exact number of planes which the Navy now has; but the committee's report sets forth in two paragraphs exactly what the situation is. I ask unanimous consent that that part of the report be printed in the RECORD at this point for ready reference.

Mr. WALSH. I shall be very happy to have that done.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Planes: One thousand seven hundred and eighty-six useful naval airplanes were on hand on June 1, 1940. Of this number approximately 1,367 were useful combatant planes.

The committee were informed that the Navy Department's airplane-procurement program contemplated approaching the present authorized limit by July 1, 1942.

Mr. WALSH. I ask now to have action taken on the amendments reported by the committee. There are only a few of them. Then there are two or three other measures, which will take only a short time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 2, line 23, after the word "authorized", to strike out "$50,000,000" and insert "$65,000,000", and in line 25, after the word "material", to strike out "at either private or naval establishments, which shall include the authority to purchase land at such locations as the Secretary of the Navy with the approval of the President may deem best suited to the purpose, erect buildings thereon, and acquire the necessary machinery and equipment, and $20,000,000 for the expansion of facilities, which shall include the authority to acquire land and erect buildings for the production of armor at either private or naval establishments" and insert "or munitions at either private or naval establishments, and $35,000,000 for the expansion of facilities for the production of armor at either private or naval establishments. The authority herein granted for essential equipment and facilities, and for the expansion of facilities, shall include the authority to acquire lands at such locations as the Secretary of the Navy with the approval of the President may deem best suited to the purpose, erect buildings, and acquire the necessary machinery and equipment", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to effectuate the purposes of this Act, including not to exceed $150,000,000 for essential equipment and facilities at either private or naval establishments for building or equipping any complete naval vessel or portion thereof herein or heretofore authorized, $65,000,000 for essential equipment and facilities for the manufacture of ordnance material or munitions at either private or naval establishments, and $35,000,000 for the expansion of facilities for the production of armor at either private or naval establishments. The authority herein granted for essential equipment and facilities, and for the expansion of facilities, shall include the authority to acquire lands at such locations as the Secretary of the Navy with the approval of the President may deem best suited to the purpose, erect buildings, and acquire the necessary machinery and equipment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 24, after the word "Patrol", to insert "escort, and miscellaneous", and in line 25, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$25,000,000" and insert "$50,000,000", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. The President of the United States is hereby further authorized to acquire and convert or to undertake the construction of—

(a) Patrol, escort, and miscellaneous craft at a total cost not to exceed $50,000,000; and

(b) One hundred thousand tons of auxiliary vessels of such size, type, and design as he may consider best suited for the purposes of national defense.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 14, after the word "boat", to insert "(except ships' boats)", and in line 17, after the word "scrapped", to strike out "without the consent of the Congress" and insert "except as now provided by law", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. No vessel, ship, or boat (except ships' boats) now in the United States Navy or being built or hereafter built therefor shall be disposed of by sale or otherwise, or be chartered or scrapped, except as now provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments. The bill, as amended, is now before the Senate for disposition.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have nothing more to say.

COMMON SENSE NATIONAL DEFENSE, NOT MADNESS AND HYSTERIA

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, before any action is taken on the bill, I wish to say—and I am not relying upon my own judgment in the matter; I have talked to many experts—that it is my belief that if we took the appropriation for some of these great capital ships and used it in the construction of airplanes and submarines and small, swift surface craft we should be greatly strengthening the defense of America.

ADMIRAL SIMS AND BATTLESHIPS

I cannot forget the statement Admiral Sims made, which has been referred to so many times, that the safest place for battleships in the next war is just as far up the Mississippi River as possible. I still believe he knew what he was talking about.

SECRETARY EDISON AND THE NAVY

I remember that not long ago the Secretary of the Navy of the United States gave us a report in which he admitted that our ships were not ready for battle, and that they would have to be rebuilt and somewhat reconstructed in order to meet the menace of the warplane. I do not want to enter into any debate about the matter, and I am sure it is not necessary, but I want to be on record on this subject.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] spoke about the bright spot. I believe he referred to the Navy as the bright spot.

Mr. WALSH. The personnel of the Navy.

Mr. LUNDEEN. And the personnel; and we are glad about that. We are happy about that; but let us see to it that the air force of America is not our blind spot.

For 25 years I have advocated a separate department of the Air Service in the United States. I introduced the first bill on the subject in 1919, and I was supported in it by Brig. Gen. Billy Mitchell, the greatest of them all. We still have the Air Service split up and scattered around among these great services. They are doing very well, of course; but the French, the Italians, the great British Empire, the German Reich, and Japan all have separate departments of the Air Service—all of them.

DEPARTMENT OF THE AIR SERVICE

We should have a separate department of the Air Service. We are coming to that in the not distant future. Why not now? Why always have hindsight; why not a little vision and a little foresight?

THE GREAT MADNESS

Mr. President, we are appropriating $10,000,000,000 for the Navy, more billions for the Army and the Air Service until we approach $20,000,000,000 in this great madness. So far as 1940 and 1941 are concerned, these huge sums will avail us nothing. It will all end in a great financial debacle—no real planning—no blueprints for the future—only fumbling in the past. I am for common-sense national defense. I am not for madness and hysteria—that will not take us anywhere. I cannot rid myself of the feeling that we are building for offensive warfare—not for defense, but offense. I am against that sort of building.

We must heed the lessons of the second World War in Europe. The war plane has all but driven the surface navy off the sea. We ought to be able to see that by now. The only real sea defense is to achieve supremacy of the air and then the Navy can operate and function, but without that air supremacy the Navy is driven into hiding.

In view of the statements which have been made today, I believe that swifter, smaller vessels filling our harbors and swarming the sea about our coasts would constitute a great measure of safety. I believe in that. I am not sure that I should want to dispense with all our battleships, but I am afraid we are overdoing that part of our naval defense. I am afraid we are still back in the days of yesterday a little too much.

ERICSSON AND THE MONITOR

I remember reading that when Ericsson came to the Navy with his Monitor, the Navy scoffed at it. The President had to rescue the situation. We must look into the future. We must try to have a little vision. Certainly we ought to study the lessons of this war, the great second World War. I think the airplane has shown the world a new picture of warfare.

Certainly we must not rely on one form of defense. I am not advocating that; but I think we should emphasize the Air Service more than we have. We should unify it, take it away from the jealousy of the Army and the Navy and the Marine Corps and the Coast Guard, and all that sort of thing, and put it in one great department. I absolutely agree with the able Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] when he talks about the submarine. Certainly the submarine justified itself in the first World War, and it is very destructive now.

MORE WAR PLANES, LESS SUPERDREADNAUGHTS

I am not relying upon my judgment as a layman but on talks I have had with admirals, generals, and our eagles of the air who have been kind enough to give me information. If I had my way about it I should like to turn one or two of these superdreadnaughts into just as many airplanes, submarines, and sea sleds as the money would provide for—more war planes, more submarines, and more faster and smaller vessels that will increase the safety of our country.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I previously had a colloquy with the Senator from Massachusetts with reference to the language on page 4, line 23, and I move as an amendment that the proviso beginning at that place be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the proviso beginning in line 23 on page 4, down to and including line 2, on page 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 10100) was read the third time, and passed.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF TRAVEL IN THE UNITED STATES

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6884) to encourage travel in the United States, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BILBO. At the request of and on behalf of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. BAILEY], I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mrs. CARAWAY, Mr. BILBO, and Mr. VANDENBERG conferees on the part of the Senate.

USE OF OBSOLETE NAVAL VESSELS AS TARGETS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2056, Senate bill 3008.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3008) to authorize the President of the United States to dispose of certain public vessels, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President, be, and he is hereby, authorized to use as targets for experimental firings vessels of the United States Navy stricken from the Navy Register pursuant to the act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat. 296; 34 U. S. C., sec. 491): Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall first determine that the interests of the Government would be best served thereby: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall make an annual report to the Congress of all vessels disposed of under the provisions of this act.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there should be a brief explanation of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. A reading of the bill states its purpose. It provides:

That the Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President, be, and he is hereby, authorized to use as targets for experimental firings vessels of the United States Navy stricken from the Navy Register pursuant to the act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat. 296; 34 U. S. C., sec. 491): Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall first determine that the interests of the Government would be best served thereby: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall make an annual report to the Congress of all vessels disposed of under the provisions of this act.

Under the act of 1882 a board sits in judgment and determines what vessels are obsolete and cannot be repaired, or are no longer useful. Then it requires that they should be offered for sale and sold at auction. This measure would permit vessels which are half burned, or are useless, when a certificate is filed by the Secretary of the Navy, and with the approval of the President, to be used for target purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSTRUCTION OF GRAVING DRYDOCK IN NEW YORK HARBOR

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2048, Senate bill 4165.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4165) to provide, in cooperation with the Port of New York Authority, for the construction in New York Harbor of a graving drydock large enough to accommodate the largest naval ships built or building, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 3, line 3, to strike out "size" and insert "site", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to consider such proposals as may be made by the Port of New York Authority to provide an adequate site in New York Harbor or its vicinity and to construct or cause to be constructed thereon a graving drydock and facilities appurtenant thereto, under the powers and jurisdiction conferred upon said authority by the compact of April 30, 1921, between the State of New York and the State of New Jersey (42 Stat. 174), consented to by the Sixty-seventh Congress of the United States (42 Stat. 174), to purchase, construct, lease and/or operate a drydock in the port of New York district and under the powers conferred on said authority by the comprehensive plan for the development of the port of New York, adopted under and pursuant to the aforesaid compact by the States of New York and New Jersey, which comprehensive plan was consented to by the Sixty-seventh Congress of the United States (42 Stat. 822), and, in the event that a proposal satisfactory to the Secretary of the Navy is received, to submit, subject to approval of the President, to the Congress, an estimate for an appropriation of an amount equal to one-half the cost of said drydock and facilities appurtenant thereto, including the cost of any land acquired therefor, but in any event not to exceed $7,000,000, which shall be available for the purposes and subject to the limitations hereinafter stated.

SEC. 2. The location of the proposed drydock and its appurtenances shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Navy.

SEC. 3. Any amount appropriated under the authority contained in this act shall be available only for the construction of a graving drydock with dimensions and structural strength sufficient, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy, to accommodate the largest naval or merchant vessel built or building, together with an adequate site therefor, and shop, transportation, weight handling, and other incidental appurtenances and facilities, according to designs and general plans and specifications to be submitted with said proposal by the Port of New York Authority (hereinafter called the port authority) as a part thereof.

SEC. 4. (a) Any amount appropriated under the authority contained in this act shall be available for payments on account of a contract to be negotiated and entered into between the Secretary of the Navy and the port authority for the purposes herein stated.

(b) The contract so negotiated shall require the port authority to construct or cause to be constructed the graving drydock and to provide the appurtenances and facilities contemplated by the accepted proposal, to be completed and ready for use within such a time as may be specified in said contract by the Secretary of the Navy, without risk or expense to the United States, except as herein provided, and in accordance with plans and specifications to be approved by the Secretary of the Navy or at his direction by the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks.

(c) From and after the time said graving drydock and drydock facilities are ready for use, priority service shall be given in the drydock, or by means of other drydock facilities of the operator thereof acceptable to the Secretary of the Navy, to naval and other public vessels of the United States and to commercial vessels owned by the United States or by any corporation of which the majority of the stock is owned by the United States. The charges for docking such vessels shall be the actual direct operating costs plus a predetermined allowance for profit and overhead charges, which overhead charges shall not include any interest or amortization upon the amount appropriated by the United States under this act and paid to the port authority on account of the contract to be negotiated and entered into between the Secretary of the Navy and the port authority as aforesaid.

(d) In time of war or national emergency, as declared by the President of the United States, the United States shall have exclusive priority for the use of said graving drydock and appurtenances.

(e) The said graving drydock and appurtenances shall be owned by the port authority, but may be leased to such private operator or operators as may, in the judgment of the commissioners of the port authority, be best suited to operate and maintain said drydock. The drydock shall be maintained continuously to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy.

SEC. 5. There is authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to effectuate the purposes of this act.

SEC. 6. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent and in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby suspended during the period in which such provisions of this act are in effect to the extent of such inconsistency or conflict.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there are so few Senators present that I think this bill should go over until tomorrow.

Mr. WALSH. I shall be very happy to have it go over. It is understood the measure will be the first business for tomorrow in case the Senate takes a recess?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

DE SOTO NATIONAL FOREST

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4119, which is an emergency defense measure, which has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, and has the unqualified approval of the Department of Agriculture and the War Department. The purpose is to transfer 65,000 acres from the De Soto National Forest to the War Department, upon the request of the War Department to the Secretary of Agriculture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4119) to provide for the transfer of certain land in the De Soto National Forest to the Secretary of War for use for military purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, after the word "select", to strike out the period and insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That in the event the area transferred pursuant to the provisions of this act shall cease to be used for military purposes, it shall revert to its former national-forest status", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon request of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to transfer to the Secretary of War, for military purposes, such tracts of land, not in excess of 65,000 acres, contiguous to the Camp Shelby State Military Reservation, Miss., and now included within the limits of the De Soto National Forest, Miss., as the Secretary of War may select: Provided, That in the event the area transferred pursuant to the provisions of this act shall cease to be used for military purposes, it shall revert to its former national-forest status.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry. Is this property located in Mississippi?

Mr. BILBO. It is.

Mr. McNARY. It is owned by the Government?

Mr. BILBO. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. The bill provides for a transfer from one agency to another?

Mr. BILBO. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. It does not involve any consideration?

Mr. BILBO. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COL. DONALD H. CONNOLLY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Presiding Officer of the Senate be authorized to affix his signature to Senate Joint Resolution 283, which has been passed by the House and is on the Speaker's desk, but he cannot sign it until it goes back into the House after the consideration of the Hatch bill. It is important that this be done so that the President may appoint Col. Donald H. Connolly Administrator of Civil Aeronautics.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADMISSION OF CERTAIN PERSONS TO ST. ELIZABETHS HOSPITAL

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the amendments adopted by the Senate to H. R. 9576, relating to the admission to St. Elizabeths Hospital of persons resident or domiciled in the Virgin Islands of the United States, were, in identical language, incorporated as a part of section 3 of the "Emergency Relief Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1941," which has become a law.

Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the passage of H. R. 9576, together with the vote ordering the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill, and the votes agreeing to the committee amendments, may be respectively reconsidered, and that the amendments be disagreed to.

If the consent is given, the bill may be passed without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, July 11, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JULY 10, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Herschel M. Reed, pastor of the Greenfield Christian Church, Greenfield, Ind., offered the following prayer:

Our most gracious Heavenly Father, we are grateful to Thee because we are citizens of this, a great country. We pray this morning that Thou wilt guide the actions and the decisions of this group, upon whose shoulders rest such tremendous responsibilities. Wilt Thou, our Father, have a vote in their decisions, and grant that in the hours that are so heavy upon us we may not fail to look to Thee, because we know that when nations forget Thee they fall. So wilt Thou guide the actions of this body, and wilt Thou bless each and every one, that they may serve Thee and serve their country, to the end that there may be experienced by us all eternal freedom, which we prize so highly, and the love of American citizenship, that is to us so great because that privilege was given us by men who sought freedom to worship Thee. Wilt Thou bless this body. In the name of Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Saviour, our hope. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 29. An act to authorize the use of certain facilities of national parks and national monuments for elementary-school purposes;

S. 2018. An act for the relief of Nile Shaw and Edgar C. Bardin; and

S. 3131. An act to extend the benefits of the United States Employees' Compensation Act to members of the Officers' Reserve Corps and of the Enlisted Reserve Corps of the Army who were physically injured in line of duty while performing active duty or engaged in authorized training between dates of February 28, 1925, and July 15, 1939, both inclusive, and for other purposes.

MARINE AND WAR-RISK INSURANCE

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 582) making an appropriation to enable the United States Maritime Commission to establish the marine and war-risk insurance fund.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. TABER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, as I understand, this is a bill to provide a revolving fund of $40,000,000 to take care of the operations of the Bland Act, which was passed here a couple of weeks ago. I wonder if the gentleman from Virginia will not explain the bill somewhat, so the Members may know about it.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Briefly, Mr. Speaker, the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 was amended by the act of June 29, 1940, authorizing the United States Maritime Commission to provide marine insurance and reinsurance for American vessels and their cargoes and crews. It authorizes a revolving fund. This $40,000,000 is the beginning of that revolving fund, and it will likely be the only amount required to be appropriated. The purpose of it is to provide insurance on American vessels and cargoes and crews which cannot be secured in the ordinary insurance market.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Is not this another New Deal adventure, setting up the Government in the insurance business in competition with private industry? I realize there are times when there are hazards and probably Government insurance is wanted that Lloyd's will not come over here and do some insuring, but the fact is that we in this act of 1940 have set the Government up in the insurance business.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No; the gentleman is not right.

Mr. RICH. I am right.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman is very positive in his opinion, and doubtless nothing I can say would change his ideas.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. As I understand, this is the situation: The American companies at the time of the World War were able to provide hardly anything in the nature of insurance. We had this type of insurance on a much broader scale at that time, and it was operated so that it covered other than American bottoms. This is confined to American bottoms. To start with, we have an insurance capacity, as far as the vessels are concerned, of approximately $4,500,000 on any given vessel, and approximately $5,000,000 on any cargo, exclusive of this Government insurance. It has been customary for Lloyd's to carry most of this insurance in the past, but they are limited at the present time. They have $45,000,000 deposited here. This does not put the Government in competition with private business, but only supplements it.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If the gentleman will permit, the law specifically provides that the Maritime Commission shall not take advantage of this Government insurance if they can get private insurance coverage.

Mr. TABER. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That to enable the United States Maritime Commission to establish the marine and war-risk insurance fund as authorized by and in accordance with title II of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended by the act entitled "An act to amend the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, to provide for marine war-risk insurance and reinsurance and for marine-risk insurance, and for other purposes," approved June 29, 1940, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $40,000,000, of which not to exceed $150,000 may be expended by the Commission for personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, traveling expenses, printing and binding, and other necessary administrative expenses: Provided, That expenses incurred in the temporary employment of experts in marine insurance, including attorneys, in connection with the investigation and settlement of claims shall not be considered as administrative expenses hereunder.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROCEEDINGS AT UNVEILING OF PAINTING OF SIGNING OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Printing, I report back favorably (Rept. No. 2744) a resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 73

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the proceedings, held in the rotunda of the United States Capitol at the unveiling of the painting depicting the scene of the signing of the Constitution of the United States, be printed, with illustrations, in such form and style as may be directed by the Joint Committee on Printing, as a House document; and that 2,000,000 copies be printed, of which 500,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 1,500,000 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives.

With the following committee amendments:

Line 7, strike out "two million" and insert "five hundred thousand."

Line 8, strike out "five hundred" and insert "one hundred and twenty-five."

Line 9, strike out "one million five hundred" and insert "three hundred and seventy-five."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a suggested program for National Aviation Day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

TRANSCONTINENTAL FLIGHT OF STRATOLINER

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, yesterday there crossed the continent a T. W. A. stratoliner from California to New York. The flight was made in approximately 12 hours' time, at an altitude of about 17,000 feet, and with an average speed of between 240 and 250 miles an hour.

Thus another noteworthy achievement is added to the thrilling and progressive transportation story of this Nation.

We in the United States of America lead the world in the advancement of civil aviation. Fortunate are we, as citizens of this Republic, to possess a great air-transport industry in times of peace; and if in times of war this country faces peril, we will be able to call on this growing network of air lines from the standpoint of more adequate national defense.

Onward and upward are the flight orders of America. [Applause.]

SMALL-BUSINESS MEN'S ASSOCIATIONS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced this morning a resolution (H. Res. 548) authorizing the appointment of a special House committee to conduct a research survey of the problems of independent small-business enterprises and their relationship to reemployment and the national-defense program. I hope the resolution will receive consideration, for I believe such an investigation is of real importance for more reasons than one.

I have introduced this resolution for several reasons. In the first place—because it is the intention of the President and the Democratic Party to assist the honest-to-God small-business man who, unfortunately, is being used now as a cat's-paw by some racketeers and Republican politicians who, under the new power-interest party will stop at nothing to utilize every avenue of publicity in charging, despite the progress that has been made under the Democratic administration, that the small-business man has been forgotten.

I have in my possession several bulletins issued by the National Small Business Men's Association, with headquarters in New York, Chicago, and several other cities, which so-called association is now being used by the big interests and the Republican Party to circulate lies and falsehoods for the purpose of injuring the administration. An honest investigation of this so-called businessmen's association, whose publicity releases do not, strange to say, carry the signatures of its officers—or, indeed, any other names—will disclose the fact that a few racketeers heading this organization are being financed by the Republican Party. I have been reliably informed that over $50,000 has already been turned over to them for the spreading of false propaganda even against this Congress and the administration of our great President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

All the resolution aims to accomplish is to obtain actual facts as to how the small-business man may be aided and assisted and most assertedly not principally to investigate the bunk National Small Business Men's Association.

The extent to which the Republicans will go is made evident by the full-page advertisement appearing in today's issue of the Washington Star. Two of the three signers are former members of Congress, namely, John O'Connor, of New York, and Samuel B. Pettengill, of Indiana. The latter gentleman, though at one time elected as a Democrat, is, I know, in the employ of the Dawes Oil Co., and is being used as a publicity man for the Republican Party.

In fact, even during the time he served in Congress, I was satisfied as to his tie-up, which, since he is out of Congress, has been definitely established. The less I say as to my former colleague, Mr. O'Connor, who called my attention to the advertisement, the better. I asked him, however, whether he paid for the advertisement, and he replied in the negative, and knowing that Mr. Pettengill did not pay for it, I would like to know just who did foot the bill and how much has been allowed them by the Republicans.

If the Republicans, by utilizing the names of former Democratic Members of Congress in the dissemination of this false propaganda, hope to gain the election, they have another guess coming. The people know how and by whom Mr. Willkie was nominated and for what purpose, and they are far too smart to follow the dictates of the Wall Street power and banking interests. The latter gentry are the very ones that, by general discrimination and by deliberate and willful violation of the Antitrust Act, are responsible for the condition of the small-business men of the country. And it is they who have denied them aid in any way to save them from destruction. Their unfair tactics will not only be resented but will be condemned by the American people who have, with the exception of the Wall Street manipulators, the utmost confidence in President Roosevelt, who has accomplished so much in the last 7 years and who saved these same big bankers and industrial leaders from destruction by the crash of the Republican Hoover administration. Today every financial report discloses that thousands of large corporations have made more in 1939 and 1940 than at any time in their entire history, and that these profits are being made at the expense of the small-business man whom we are going to try to honestly aid, so that in the future no private secret agreements can be entered into to their detriment.

The resolution covers 10 major phases into which I desire the committee to conduct its inquiry:

First. The extent and character of the problems of small-business men.

Second. Their relationship to employment.

Third. Their relationship to national defense.

Fourth. The extent to which these problems and those of small farm owners may be interrelated.

Fifth. Their causes, relationship, and effects upon the general economic conditions of the country.

Sixth. The comparative status of the financial resources of independent small businesses as a class today, compared with 25 years ago.

Seventh. The present need for equity capital on the part of small-business enterprises, its available sources through private channels, the chief causes, if any, that tend to restrain the flow of private capital into such enterprises.

Eighth. What means, if any, may be devised under democratic procedure, for the presenting annually to and keeping the Congress advised on the true national small-business viewpoint on governmental affairs.

Ninth. To examine into any or all small-business organizations and associations professing or purporting to represent small-business enterprises and to determine their means and method of financial support and the identity of their financial backers or contributors; and Tenth. All other questions in relation thereto that would aid Congress in remedial legislation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY] may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two particulars: First, by inserting an address by the Reverend Thomas B. Cannon, Society of Jesus, on the Story of the Jesuit Missions; and, secondly, by inserting a radio address by Mr. Frederick E. Hassler, of New York City; and, Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a radio address of George E. Ernenwein, of the United States Federation of Postal Clerks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

BOULDER CANYON PROJECT ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. HILL, acting chairman of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 9877), authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate and to put into effect charges for electrical energy generated at Boulder Dam, providing for the application of revenues from said project, authorizing the operation of the Boulder power plant by the United States directly or through agents, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a poem printed in one of the newspapers of my district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in reference to House Joint Resolution 520.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on two subjects, one a letter from the Regional Forester of my district, addressed to me, and in the other extension to include some excerpts on the nomination of Mr. Willkie.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include an editorial from the Omaha World-Herald entitled "When France Awoke."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

W. P. A. MURALS

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call to the attention of the House and the country a situation that has developed in the W. P. A., which indicates that the investigation we have had was not as thorough as it ought to have been. The heading of the newspaper article states, Four protests charge W. P. A. murals are communistic, and these protests come from the Women's International Aeronautics Association, the Flatbush Chamber of Commerce, and Floyd Bennett Post of the American Legion. They declare that the Wright Brothers at Kitty Hawk are shown in Russian peasant costumes and that prominently displayed is a "red" statue of Joseph Stalin, with a fallen aviator at his feet.

I am glad that Colonel Somervell, the W. P. A. Administrator at New York City, has at last started out to clean up this situation. It is a situation that has been a disgrace to the American Government for a long time. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include a speech delivered by John H. Connaughton, general counsel for the National Vegetable Growers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NEWARK (N. J.) AIRPORT

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, on June 7 I brought to the attention of the Congress of the United States the unequitable, unfair, and unjust closing by the Civil Aeronautics Authority of the Newark Airport in New Jersey, and the removal therefrom by the major air lines to LaGuardia Field, in New York. I pointed out at that time the advantages of the Newark Airport over the LaGuardia Field, since which time, and according to the public press, the air lines which were forced to remove by the action of the Civil Aeronautics Authority have admitted to a loss of approximately 20 percent of their air-line business, due to weather conditions, fog, and inaccessibility by air of the LaGuardia Field under such inclement weather conditions, as well as the inadvisability of use because of inaccessibility to air lines at the New York field by New Jersey residents.

It is most gratifying to note the air lines, realizing their error, are again contemplating and will, in all probability, start the use of Newark Airport within a week, provided the Civil Aeronautics Authority will admit their error and allow the opening of the field.

Also located at port of Newark, N. J., is another expenditure on the part of the Federal Government and of taxpayers' money, as represented by the old Army-Navy base of World War days. In 1917 the Federal Government, recognizing Port Newark's 4,000 feet of northern water front and its easy accessibility to the Atlantic Ocean, and yet its safety behind the coast defense of the port of New York, constructed the largest Army base and shipyard on the Atlantic coast. Twenty thousand men were employed in this area during the war, and constructed 118 steel ships. Ten thousand more men were employed at the Army base adjacent to this area. There still stand at that plot 25,000 creosoted piles, representing an investment by the Federal Government of approximately $500,000. This area is served by 3 railroads, is adjacent to the Newark Airport, within 20 minutes by truck of the port of New York and New York City, is within a short distance of the Federal Shipbuilding Co., now constructing many destroyers for the United States Navy, and is in many other ways a perfect location for the erection of the Navy's contemplated dry dock on the North Atlantic coast as appropriated by this Congress this year.

I have this day introduced a resolution calling on the Navy Department to negotiate with the city of Newark for the use of the port of Newark for that purpose and to thereby realize on the $500,000 investment now there and to save the taxpayers that much on an additional expenditure at some other location. I hope it will be given favorable consideration.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include some excerpts from books on economics.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include a letter therein.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include an address by James Scott Kemper, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, delivered June 30, 1940.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for indefinite leave of absence for my colleague the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER] who has been called home on account of the serious illness of his mother.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

POLITICAL RACKETEERING

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute, and to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules, called attention to what he considered to be some racketeering activity. Any Member of the House who is interested in real expert racketeering along political lines should read the article by Mr. Flynn in the current number of Collier's Weekly, telling about the activities of the Kelly-Nash machine in the city of Chicago, the home city of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]. The gentleman from Mississippi so often talks about utility. If you want to get some real——

Mr. RANKIN rose.

Mr. HOFFMAN. A point of order, Mr. Speaker; the gentleman is not in order.

Mr. RANKIN. But the gentleman referred to me.

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; I referred to the gentleman from Mississippi. The gentleman represents 4,000 people down there, and my district has 80,000 votes; but you read that Collier's Weekly article, if you want some real information about how funds collected from vice gambling by Democratic officeholders is used for political purposes. How much of that money will be used at the Democratic convention next week?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM OF 1932

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the plank in the Democratic platform of 1932 about undue bureaucracy. Mr. Speaker, you promised to eliminate departments and consolidate bureaus. Let me read this plank of the platform, I quote:

> We advocate an immediate and drastic reduction of Government expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices, consolidating departments and bureaus, and eliminating extravagances to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 percent in the cost of Federal Government—

And so forth. What has been the result? You have established more bureaus and put on the Government pay roll more people than were ever on the Government pay roll at any one particular time, not excepting the World War.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. No; I cannot yield at this time.

The number of Government employees December 31, 1932, was 568,345, and December 31, 1939, the number of Government employees amounted to 932,305, so that instead of decreasing Government bureaus and Government employees 25 percent you have increased employees 60.9 percent and established more bureaus twice over than any three other past administrations. No woodpecker ever put more holes in a plank than the Democratic Party has shot into that plank. Where is there any honesty in promising to do a thing in a party platform and then doing exactly the opposite? Will the American people always be fooled? Will the politician continue to humbug the American voter? I say "No"; the people will protest these promises in November. "You can fool some of the people some of the time, but you cannot fool all the people all the time." America will repudiate a dishonest politician. In November America will do it. They will win with Willkie.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

SURPLUS-PROFITS TAX

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. THOMAS F. FORD addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to incorporate a resolution of the State federation of labor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in connection with the P. W. A. and to insert a short editorial from the Evening Star of yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MARSHALL was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address by Gen. Charles G. Dawes, former Vice President of the United States, delivered by him on June 19, 1940, on the subject of preparedness.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PURCHASE OF COAL AND WOOD FOR PUBLIC USE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 2751) to repeal sections 3711, 3712, and 3713 of the Revised Statutes which relate to the purchase in the District of Columbia of coal and wood for public use, and for other purposes with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, lines 9 and 10, strike out "Public, No. 453, Seventy-fifth Congress" and insert "52 Stat. 139."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain what this is all about?

Mr. COCHRAN. When this bill passed the House there was reference made to the public law number. The Senate amendment cites the statute rather than the number of the public law. That is all there is to it.

Mr. MICHENER. It is a mere formality, correcting the citation?

Mr. COCHRAN. That is all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF ACT TO PREVENT PERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 3046, with Mr. MCCORMACK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, one thing I am afraid of about this bill is that it will be used as a club to intimidate uninformed voters to keep them away from the polls.

I am for clean politics, I am for clean elections, and I practice what I preach. [Applause.] I am rather of the opinion that you are going a long way here toward totalitarianism in intimidating the voters of this country, closing the mouth of everyone who deals with a governmental agency—State or Federal—and leaving the hired henchmen of the utilities unrestrained. I expect to offer an amendment to make this law apply to the employees of public utilities; and if the friends of the Power Trust vote it down, then I shall vote against the bill.

I notice in the paper this morning a headline which says that Mr. Wendell Willkie, the new candidate for President, comes out and condemns the investigation of the utilities' telegraphic campaign at the Philadelphia convention.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. No; I am sorry I cannot yield. I am not surprised that Mr. Willkie, who comes out in favor of this bill as it is written, does not want the same rule applied to those employees and those hired henchmen, those "fifth coumnists" of public utilities that carried on the "blitzkrieg" at Philadelphia a few nights ago. He wants to close the mouth of everyone who deals with his State or Federal Government, but leave the corrupt hirelings of this utility fascisti free to do to the American people what they did to the Republican Party at Philadelphia.

One of the most unusual things I have ever known was the way former President Hoover was treated at that convention. I said then, and I say now, that Mr. Hoover made the greatest speech ever delivered before a Republican convention. He might as well have been speaking out here in Statuary Hall. For some reason, in some mysterious manner, it seems that the "fifth column" had got in its work. I am told by people who were there that the condition of the loud speaker was such that, although we heard his speech all over the country, they could not hear it in the convention hall well enough to understand him. In addition to that, although it was July—and when you warm an old-guard Republican above 32° F., he commences to smother—yet they turned on the heat during Mr. Hoover's speech in the convention, I am told, and made it so uncomfortably hot that those people who wanted to hear him could not do so with any degree of comfort.

That was one of the demonstrations of the "fifth column" technique used by this utility Fascisti. I will point out more later.

You Old Guard Republicans from Michigan, Illinois, and Pennsylvania who are prating about clean politics and then opposing this provision to curb the most corrupt influence America has ever seen are merely keeping the word of promise to the ear and breaking it to the hope of the honest voters you are supposed to represent. In 1920, when these predatory interests bought a seat in the United States Senate for a man by the name of Newberry from Michigan, I heard Mr. Newberry say that his campaign expenses in the Republican primary amounted to $196,000. It was so rotten that the Senate threw him out. You do not touch a man like that. You refuse to vote to curb those corrupt influences, although your party is the latest victim of their "fifth column" tactics, having paid the death penalty at Philadelphia.

Remember the people of Michigan are paying "through the nose" to maintain this Power Trust Fascisti, this supergovernment, that through these useless holding companies is trying to get control of every State government, every legislature, every public service commission, and is now trying to get control of the Federal Government. In 1938 the people of Michigan were overcharged $40,030,420 for electricity, according to the T. V. A. rates; $49,415,023, according to the Tacoma, Wash., rates; and $47,596,533, according to the Ontario rates, just across the border.

Again the utilities in Illinois, under the leadership of Samuel Insull, whom Wendell Willkie succeeded as the Hitler of the Power Trust, bought a seat in the United States Senate for a man named Smith, a few years ago. They spent hundreds of thousands of dollars to control that election. But the Senate treated him just as it did Newberry; it threw him out, or refused to let him take his seat.

Remember that in 1938 the people of Illinois were overcharged for electric lights and power $69,915,257, according to the T. V. A. rates; $85,480,273, according to the Tacoma rates; and $79,735,032, according to the Ontario rates. The utilities in Illinois could afford to buy a seat in the Senate if they could get away with it.

They had a vote-buying, ballot-stuffing contest in Pennsylvania between a man by the name of George Wharton Pepper—I had not heard of him in years until he showed up on the floor of the Philadelphia convention the other night—and a man by the name of William S. Vare, a few years ago. Vare was the Republican boss from Pennsylvania. He sat right there in the front row in the Sixty-seventh Congress and told a Member from Pennsylvania, "You will not come back to the next Congress because you did not vote the way I told you." And he kept his promise; the man was retired—he was not renominated. Vare and Pepper put on an old-fashioned Republican campaign. Pepper's crowd spent $500,000 trying to get him nominated, and the Vare crowd spent about $900,000, with the result that Vare was declared nominated by about $400,000 majority. The Republican Governor of Pennsylvania, for whom the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] probably voted, sent Vare's commission down here with this notation, "Partly bought and partly stolen."

The Senate refused to seat Vare.

About that time the Republican administration sent the marines to Nicaragua, as they said, "to see that they held honest elections" down there. One progressive Republican Senator, who has since quit the party, said, "Why in the heck didn't they send them to Philadelphia or Pittsburgh?"

Of course, Pepper and Vare did not put up all that money. The utilities put up most of it, if not all of it. Why not? They had $100,000,000 worth of real estate that was escaping taxation in Pennsylvania—large office buildings that they were using or collecting rent on. They were getting out light. Besides the record shows that in 1938 the electric-light and power consumers in Pennsylvania paid overcharges amounting to $72,513,570, according to the T. V. A. rates, $105,004,244 according to the Tacoma rates, and $76,835,607 according to the Ontario rates. Although electricity can be generated by Pennsylvania coal, oil, or water power and distributed all over the State at the T. V. A. rates, the Tacoma rates, or the Ontario rates without loss on legitimate investments.

But this bill does not reach these corruptionists. You are leaving them footloose and free to participate in the coming campaign.

If you Republicans—if there are any left—would hold a convention and nominate Herbert Hoover for President on the Republican ticket, he would get twice as many votes as Wendell Willkie in every single State in the Union. And the Democrats would beat both of them. [Applause.]

Mr. O'BRIEN. Would the gentleman vote for him?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman asks me if I would vote for Herbert Hoover against Wendell Willkie? If they were the only two candidates, I would have to vote for Hoover.

They tell you that they made us pay from ten to twenty million dollars more than that property was worth in the Tennessee Valley, and offer that as an evidence of Mr. Willkie's ability. I know we paid all it was worth, and probably more. I was consulted in advance and I said, "Yes; let us get their loathsome hands out of the pockets of the people of northern Mississippi and northern Alabama and Tennessee." If a thug comes into your office and puts a gun to your head and says, "Give me part of the money in your cash drawer or I will take it all," you are going to give him what he asks for.

We had to take it because the power companies were robbing the people of Tennessee of over $7,000,000 a year, the people of Alabama $7,000,000, and the people of Mississippi $4,600,000 a year in overcharges for electric lights and power.

Understand this same Commonwealth & Southern still has its hands in the pockets of the people of south Mississippi and of central and southern Alabama. But the people in the area where these facilities were purchased will save at least $10,000,000 a year on their rates, and at the same time pay these properties out in a few years.

But the Power Trust still has its hands in the pockets of the people in every other State in the Union and is taking from them about $1,000,000,000, or more, in overcharges every year, for which they get nothing in return. These overcharges are in addition to reasonable returns on legitimate investments.

Between September 12, 1926, and June 30, 1933, the Commonwealth & Southern, of which Wendell Willkie was president, was buying practically the entire output of electricity at Muscle Shoals. That was during the Republican administration. During that time it purchased 2,367,043,931 kilowatt-hours, for which it paid $4,818,476.73, or an average of 2.04 mills a kilowatt-hour.

During the first 11 months of the fiscal year 1940 the T. V. A. sold 3,347,059,822 kilowatt-hours of electricity, wholesale, for $13,816,700.62, or an average of 4.13 mills a kilowatt-hour—or more than twice as much per kilowatt-hour as the Republican administration sold this power at wholesale to this Commonwealth & Southern from 1926 to 1933.

During the time the Commonwealth & Southern was buying this power at 2.04 mills a kilowatt-hour it was selling it to the residential consumers in that area at the following rates:

First 30 kilowatt-hours a month, 10 cents a kilowatt-hour.
Next 170 kilowatt-hours a month, 8 cents a kilowatt-hour.
Next 300 kilowatt-hours a month, 7 cents a kilowatt-hour.
Next 350 kilowatt-hours a month, 6 cents a kilowatt-hour.
Excess, 5 cents a kilowatt-hour.

Today this same power, for which the Government is getting 4.13 mills a kilowatt-hour wholesale, instead of 2.04 mills a kilowatt-hour, is being sold to the residential consumers at the T. V. A. yardstick rates, which are as follows:

First 50 kilowatt-hours a month, 3 cents a kilowatt-hour.
Next 150 kilowatt-hours a month, 2 cents a kilowatt-hour.
Next 200 kilowatt-hours a month, 1 cent a kilowatt-hour.
Next 1,000 kilowatt-hours a month, 4 mills a kilowatt-hour.
Excess, 7½ mills a kilowatt-hour.

The residential rates at Tacoma, Wash., are as follows:

First 20 kilowatt-hours a month, 4½ cents a kilowatt-hour.
Next 400 kilowatt-hours a month, 1 cent a kilowatt-hour.
Excess, one-half cent per kilowatt-hour.

The average Ontario residential rates are as follows:

First 50 kilowatt-hours a month, 1.8 cents a kilowatt-hour.
Excess 7.2 mills a kilowatt-hour.

Any intelligent person can take his own light bill and figure out his overcharges for himself.

When one realizes what this means to the average householder then he can understand why we agreed to the settlement with the Commonwealth & Southern, of which Wendell Willkie was president, in order to get their hands out of the pockets of the people in the Tennessee Valley area. We simply had to accept their proposition or continue to be robbed in this manner for all time to come. We chose the lesser of the two evils. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Does not the gentleman think that if we could have a "blitzkrieg" every day just like the one we have just listened to that it would elect the full Republican ticket in November?

Mr. HOFFMAN. We do not need even that. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, it is always interesting to listen to the gentleman from Mississippi, but we over on the Republican side are much concerned as to the state of his health. Certainly there is something wrong when he shows so much concern for the welfare of the Republican Party. Why should he be worried about our impending defeat, as he calls it? Is not that the thing he as a Democrat wants? Why does he mourn rather than rejoice? Does he really mean what he said? And why is it that he does not get the record straight?

What Willkie said, according to the paper, was that "they might investigate forever so far as he was concerned." The gentleman talks about this bill and says he feels it will intimidate the voters if it becomes a law. He certainly is not thinking of the voters in Michigan or in any of the Northern States. I notice from the RECORD that in the district represented by the gentleman from Mississippi there were cast at the last election 4,384 votes. [Laughter.] All of the Congressmen from Mississippi received a grand total of 35,441.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I appeal to the Chair to enforce the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield. The Chair suggests in view of the fact that two Members have asked that the rules be enforced that those desiring to interrogate the Member in control of the floor address the Chair so that the Chair in turn may ask the Member on the floor whether he will yield. The Chair recognizes that this is unusual, because the practical angle would demand that the Member on the floor meet the situation, but in view of the fact that the Chair has been twice specifically requested to enforce the rules, the Chair asks all Members to cooperate by addressing the Chair first.

The gentleman from Michigan will proceed.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Going back a moment. The total vote in Mississippi for all Congressmen, 7 of them I think, was 35,441. Now, 1 Republican received in the Fourth Michigan District 49,279 votes, and there was cast in that district a total of 83,191 votes. If there was any intimidation anywhere around, it must have been down South somewhere. It must be that some people down in Mississippi do not vote. I wonder why. Intimidation?

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Not just now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan declines to yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. There may be a reason for the gentleman's tirade against the utility companies; I do not know. However, I do know from the record the fact that the people of Mississippi pay in per capita $12.38 and that the folks of Michigan contribute $263.48 per capita to the Federal Government. I notice that the gentleman's constituents, the people of Mississippi, get a return per capita of $127.23, while in Michigan we get a per capita return of but $129.80, or only $2.57 more per capita in Michigan than in Mississippi.

The gentleman spoke about corruption. I admit, and we all must admit, that all political parties have at times been corrupt. But there is this distinction, and it is a vital one, in my opinion at least, so far as corruption is concerned between the Republican and the Democratic, or, more properly, the New Deal parties. We Republicans, if we have been corrupt, and when we have, assuming that we have, have at least used our own money. We have never by virtue of Federal statutes collected money from the workers and taxpayers, as was done, according to the report of the Senate Democratic committee, in the last campaign, and then used that money, relief money, money that was voted to buy clothing, shelter, and food for the poor and the unfortunate, to buy votes. Can you think of anything more corrupt than that? I notice the gentleman from Massachusetts agrees with me. It is unthinkable that these righteous, lily-white gentlemen over here would take relief funds, would take money from the poor, the crippled, the blind, and the lame to buy votes. You talk about intimidation! A little less hypocrisy, you may say, would be a fine thing.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I should like more time. A week would not be enough to tell about the political sins of the majority party. A week would not be long enough. The gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Rules Committee, has been here the longest of any man in the House, and, by the way, I want to again call his attention to that article in Collier's Weekly where it tells about his home city of Chicago in which this great, free, and untrammeled convention is going to be held next week—that is, if the President permits. I suppose you are going out there to get your orders. To do the will of the "big boss." Collier's Weekly tells how the Kelly-Nash machine out there has violated the laws of the city, the State, and the Nation by collecting funds from vice, gambling, and all those things and contributing it to the election of the New Deal and Democratic candidates. Now, read it, because Collier's is financially responsible, and if it is lying, sue them for libel. Make them eat it. Those statements are not made on the floor of the House where the question of privilege protects from suit for slander. There is something you cannot get around and as the old farmer said, "It is black on white." Set your teeth into it and make them retract, if it is not true. Make them take it back.

As I was about to ask, can any Member on the Republican side recall when Republicans or Republican organizations, in violation of Federal statutes by the sale of campaign books and by the sale of printed matter on which the President's signature was written, obtained campaign funds? Is there anything as crooked as that in our record? Is there anything as reprehensible as that? I ask the gentleman from New Jersey, Dr. EATON, in all your long career as a minister of the gospel, did ever a sinner come to you with a confession of a crime as repulsive as that? Can you think of anything like that?

Mr. EATON. No; I cannot recall any.

Mr. HOFFMAN. This country of ours has been asleep too long. You folks will remember how in pre-revolutionary days Rip Van Winkle went up into the Catskill Mountains and fell asleep and after some 20 years awakened. The American people have only been asleep for about 7 years, going on 8 years now, but they are awakening. They are learning what has happened to them. I notice the gentleman from Pennsylvania who takes such great delight in reading the Scripture smiling, but does he recall that old incident where Samson went to get his hair cut? He listened to Delilah just the same as our people have listened to this charmer down here, and we have had our hair cut a plenty.

However, we are aroused by the shock of what has happened in Europe, by the destruction of nation after nation over there, by the alteration of the boundaries of those countries, and by the enslavement of their people. We have discovered that like Samson we have sold ourselves into slavery. He spent his last days, until the very final one, when he pulled down the whole temple upon himself in slavery. Is that what you are going to do at Chicago? Pull down the American Government and destroy our Nation to satisfy the ambitions of a Roosevelt? The Lord only knows.

Yes, we are awake, and, God willing, we are going to do something about it. We began over at Philadelphia and we are going on through until November, in spite of what the gentleman from Mississippi may have to say about it.

Mr. PATRICK. Can the gentleman yield now?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I cannot now.

Mr. PATRICK. We have waited for you to say something.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, there are some people, you know, who, having ears they hear not, and having eyes they see not, and some people do not even understand, which is not our responsibility, we cannot help it, and I do not know of anything we can do about it, or we would have done it long ago.

Yes, we have accepted without question all these blessings which our country and our people have enjoyed for, lo, these many years, but now the day of reckoning has come. No longer are we listening to the gentleman down here, the master magician, who has pulled the white rabbits and all the other tricks out of the hat. We have discovered now to our sorrow and grief that after all a man must work if he would eat, and the destructive influence of this administration will be routed out on a subsequent date from the floor of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I was just reading in this rule that debate was to be confined to the bill. I have not raised the point heretofore, but may I say that we have a very important bill before us and we have had a showing on both sides. After this I shall ask gentlemen on each side to confine the debate a little bit more closely to the bill.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, we know we want clean politics. We want honest politics. That is what this Hatch bill is supposed to give us. We know that if we take politics away from governmental employees and do not intimidate them we will probably elect honest officials.

For some reason or other, Mr. Chairman, the Democratic Manual was sent to me. How they ever made such a terrible mistake as to send any New Deal literature to me I cannot understand. This came in the envelope of the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. CLARENCE CANNON, and it was edited at the instance of James A. Farley.

I looked this manual over this morning, but I cannot find in it any statement to the effect that they will tell the truth or that they will carry out the planks they put in the platform at the Democratic convention in Chicago next week.

I want to call your attention to a number of planks they put in the platform of 1932.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I must ask the gentleman to confine his remarks to the bill.

Mr. RICH. I want to show you that we need clean politics; that is what the bill is for. If we have the Hatch bill enacted into law they cannot do what they did at the national convention in 1932. Paid Government workers will not be intimidated any longer at conventions or at the polls. They put a lot of planks in that platform, and let me show you what the woodpeckers have done to those planks. They have pecked them so full of holes that you cannot see the planks any more. The Democrats had planks for national economy, plank for tax reduction, plank for a balanced Budget, plank for anti-bureaucracy, plank for unemployment cure, and plank for prosperity. Where are all these planks now? Full of holes, shot to pieces; the woodpecker picked them to pieces.

The situation is just this, Mr. Chairman: If you make a plank and put it into your platform, you ought to carry it out. Do an honest job. You ought to see that it is fulfilled, and that the word of a national political party is just as good and just as honorable as any promise you would make in business or any standard you would set up in your own home in trying to regulate it. So I believe you should at this Democratic convention get the Democratic Party to obey the planks they put in the platform and give to the American people. Why be dishonest? Why not do as you say you will do? The New Deal wrecked the platforms of the Democratic Party of 1932 completely.

I wish to call your attention to the fact that a few moments ago the gentleman from Mississippi made the statement that in the Republican convention in Philadelphia you could not hear the speech of Herbert Hoover in the convention hall. That is a falsehood, no truth in the statement, because I was sitting at the back of the platform and I could hear every word of that speech very audibly. Order was perfect and no disturbance of any kind. It was a masterpiece, as the gentleman from Mississippi said it was, in common sense and statesmanship. It told the American people the truth. Herber Hoover is one of the greatest Americans this country has ever known, but the gentleman from Mississippi would not support a man like that. He is following after the New Deal, and he will go down the line 100 percent when the time comes for the New Deal, Roosevelt, and ruin. We want Willkie.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I believe we ought to have more Members here. I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MCCORMACK). The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty-nine Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE].

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Chairman, to me, this bill is one of the greatest pieces of hypocrisy I have seen since I have been a Member of this body. There is not a man in this House who at some time in his political life has not gone before a Rotary Club, a Kiwanis Club, or the graduating class of a high school and, with all the pontifical bearing he could muster, said that it is the duty of every American to take part in politics. Now you come here and, with hypocrisy in your soul, try to legislate people out of their constitutional rights. It is the right of every man, regardless of his position, to have something to say about the Government of his country.

I know the profound admiration that certain Members of this House have for political machines. I know how the Republicans have nominated a Tammany Hall Democrat from the Grover Cleveland Club in New York as their Presidential candidate, and I know that they recognize that politics is the game that you make it. If you want to make it a dirty occupation and a dirty way of making a living, it can be dirty; but if you want to make it a clean way, it is up to you. Perhaps the sponsors of this bill in the other body recognize more about the seamy side of politics and are more familiar with it than those who are against the bill.

I plead for honesty in government. I plead with you not to deprive thousands of governmental employees—State, municipal, or Federal—of the right to take part in the Government. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, I supported the original Hatch Act of date, August 2, 1939, which was necessary to protect Federal employees from intimidation and coercion by those in charge of them, the assessment of them for campaign funds and the protection of the taxpayers of the Nation.

I favor the Hatch bill now before us in order to protect State employees from such coercion, intimidation, and assessment of those State employees whose salaries or wages in whole or in part are paid from Federal funds, and workers on so-called State projects, the funds of which are provided in whole or in part by Federal appropriations.

These measures are designed to cut out coercion, intimidation, favoritism, and politics, and make the Federal workers as well as the workers on State projects free to support and vote for the persons they desire. It grieves me to know that in this great democracy such measures are necessary to prevent the corruption, intimidation, and coercion of our citizens, and especially our needy citizens. We show deep concern for the democracies across the sea. Over there the people are coerced with the bayonet. Here in the United States, according to the reports and evidence, we have coercion by threatening to withhold from our needy people food, clothing, and shelter if they are unwilling to surrender their freedom and their rights to vote as their consciences dictate.

The use of money for corrupt purposes in elections has been condemned in this country throughout the years. We have passed stringent laws to keep private citizens and corporations from using their money to coerce and intimidate the voters. It has been pointed out on the floor of the House today that in some few States some years ago a few hundred thousand dollars were used in several States to carry each one of those States. Such action must be condemned, and it was condemned by the refusal of the United States Senate to seat those who were the beneficiaries of these corrupt practices. It is immeasurably worse when we reach down into the pockets of the taxpayers of the Nation and take the tax money from the widows and orphans, the rich and the poor, and use it for partisan political purposes and to intimidate, coerce, and corrupt the voters of this country, and how can we find words to condemn those in charge of the activities of our Government using the taxpayers' money to threaten and browbeat needy men, women, and children to surrender their rights as American citizens, and to indulge in favoritism and partiality?

MR. ROOSEVELT'S ADMINISTRATION RESPONSIBLE

Now, these conditions about which we complain and which cause every honest and decent citizen in the Nation to bow his head in shame can be laid directly at the door of Mr. Roosevelt and his administration, and a subservient Congress that has supinely submitted to the President's demands. During the last 7½ years subservient Congresses at the behest of the President have turned over to him more than $20,000,000,000 in so-called blank checks to be used almost as he pleased. These billions have been handed out to various groups in the 48 States, and many of these billions were used to build political machines and for partisan political purposes. Every State received millions upon millions of dollars. Some States received hundreds of millions of dollars in a single year. These millions wielded powerful political influences in each of the several 48 States.

There has never been such a saturnalia of corruption. There has never been such a waste of the taxpayers' money, or so much of intimidation and coercion as grew out of the distribution of these billions of dollars. There has never been anything to compare with it in this or any other country in the world's history. These are not the statements of unfriendly partisan critics of the administration. These statements are borne out by official statements and records made by Democrats, new dealers, antinew dealers, and the press of the country.

KENTUCKIANS COERCED AND INTIMIDATED

Kentucky is a typical State in the use of taxpayers' money to corrupt, coerce, browbeat, and intimidate voters. Two distinguished Democrats of Kentucky were seeking the Democratic nomination in our State in 1938 for United States Senator. Let me read you a few lines from a letter written by the manager of one of these Democrats who were seeking the nomination. What has this great Democrat to say in a letter to President Roosevelt on May 23, 1938?

> For the first time in our observation, the Works Progress Administration, which was conceived and established to feed the families of the unemployed, irrespective of the politics, race, or creed of those to be served, through its directing heads, is seeking what? To drive hungry and destitute people to vote for a certain candidate for office. Meetings and conferences have been held in practically every county in the State by key men in places of importance with the Works Progress Administration, at which definite instructions were given selected agents that no one should be placed on Federal relief except on the advice of campaign managers of the candidate. Furthermore, these same agents have been required to inform all those individuals seeking Federal assistance that unless they are for the candidate for Senator whom the heads of the relief administration are supporting, there will be neither relief funds nor jobs for them.

That is not a Republican speaking. That is a distinguished Democrat and judge of Kentucky. This Democrat says further in his letter:

> It is unthinkable that any relief agency of the Federal Government engaged in a charitable and a humanitarian task would be deliberately prostituted by politicians for the benefit of a man seeking public office. The Work Projects Administration in Kentucky has been converted into an out-and-out political machine. Those with starving mouths to feed are forced to surrender their one remaining privilege of choosing for whom they shall vote; otherwise, they and their dependents must go hungry and naked.

Whose money was being used to accomplish this coercion and intimidation? It was not the money of the candidates or their backers. It was the taxpayers' money. Yes; with the taxpayers' own money—taking it from the rich and poor, from the widows and orphans alike, to browbeat, coerce, corrupt, and intimidate the people of Kentucky themselves. This letter also points out that many persons were put on the W. P. A. and other rolls not to render service to the people of Kentucky or the Nation, but to travel about over the State and perform political services for a certain candidate—their salaries and expenses paid by the taxpayers. Instead of being helpful to the people of Kentucky and especially the needy people, they were busy in attempts to corrupt, intimidate, and coerce them. Many affidavits were secured and published showing that the W. P. A. trucks with foremen and bosses of the W. P. A. were used to gather up needy people and carry them to the county courthouses to have these needy persons to change their registrations and exacting promises from them to vote for a certain man.

A certain political organization was set up in Kentucky to go among the W. P. A. workers to collect money from these poorly paid persons to help finance these campaigns. These persons were warned to get cash and take no checks except "payable to cash," so that they could not be traced. The State administrator in a letter ordered one of his State directors in charge of organizing and collecting this money to destroy his records. Many of these cases of sand-bagging these poor, needy workers came to me personally. Among these I recall a lady living in one of my counties and working on the W. P. A. for $30 per month. She had a husband confined to his bed with TB and her four young children. The support of this husband and the children and their education depended upon her meager salary. These politicians demanded of her $10 out of her $30 as her campaign contribution for one of these candidates. She had pledged this money for medicine, food, and clothing for her husband and children and could not make the contribution. Soon after the primary was over she was let out with the statement that she had failed to cooperate. It is admitted that she was a very industrious, capable worker.

The purpose of the Hatch Act of August 1939 and the purpose of this act is to protect our needy people from favoritism, coercion, and intimidation, and to prevent their being required to give of their meager wages or salaries provided by the taxpayers of this Nation to finance politicians or any party or faction of a party. The average fair-minded Kentuckian revolted against such practices. This relief money does not belong to the politicians. It was intended to go to the needy without regard to party affiliations, race, creed, or color. If the hundreds of thousands of political officeholders receiving large salaries and expense accounts had been eliminated at least a million of the needy people of this country that have been denied jobs and relief could have been helped.

Let us pass this wholesome measure and thereby declare ourselves for clean politics. Let us administer this money taken from the taxpayers impartially for the relief of the needy. Let the small wages and salaries received by those needing jobs and relief be free from assessment by politicians. Let us cut out attempts to corrupt, intimidate, and coerce our citizens so that they may stand up as freemen and exercise their priceless privilege as American citizens. [Applause.] The ballot must be free. Our forefathers gave freely of their lives and of their fortunes to create a great, free nation on this side of the Atlantic. I do not propose to sit idly by and see a lot of politicians for their own selfish purposes and through partisan politics, coercion, and intimidation, consume the taxpayers' money and at the same time take away the liberties and freedom of the American people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. I yield the gentleman 3 minutes more.

UNITED STATES SENATE GETS BUSY

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. This corrupt use of the taxpayers' money and the attempts to corrupt, intimidate, and coerce the citizens of this country became so flagrant that a committee of United States Senators, composed largely of Democrats, investigated conditions in Kentucky, New Mexico, and other States, and this committee fully confirmed all that had been said about the misuse of the taxpayers' money and the mistreatment of needy citizens. They found that the W. P. A. rolls increased in Kentucky as the primary-election day approached and increased in the Nation as the regular election day approached and the years in which a national election was held. These relief rolls fell off after the election and in the middle of winter. There was left no room for doubt that the taxpayers' money was being used in large amounts to build and maintain political machines.

This investigation also developed the fact that the taxpayers' money appropriated by Congress, the millions of dollars turned over to the States for old-age pensions and other pensions and to construct highways, buildings, and other projects, all of the expense of which was contributed to by the Federal Government, was used to build and maintain political machines in the States. This ran into millions of dollars annually, and the political machines in the States turned their attention to the use of these large sums of money and the jobs for political purposes.

The administration-backed candidate for United States Senator in Kentucky and his friends boldly declared that the old-age-pension money and other sums furnished to the State were being used by the State crowd to coerce voters to vote for the man backed by the State crowd for the nomination for United States Senator. It was said by the national administration candidate that the old people of Kentucky, receiving less on an average than $9 a month, were forced to change their registration and cast their vote according to the wishes of the State administration or be denied old-age pensions or be removed from the pension rolls. Many affidavits were submitted and published on this subject; and those employed on these State-controlled projects but financed wholly or in part with Federal money were forced to vote as the State machine dictated. To my own personal knowledge, these Federal funds were used to aid both factions in Kentucky, needy old people were promised pensions, needy people were promised jobs if they registered and voted right; and it was not confined merely to national and State elections. These huge sums of money and jobs were used to corrupt, intimidate, and coerce voters in city, county, and district elections, and in one particular case known to me these funds and jobs were used in a county wet-and-dry election. All in all, it reached that point in Kentucky where it was spoken of frequently that we no longer had elections but public auctions, and it was the United States Treasury against the State treasury.

It has been the great American ideal that governments exist for the benefit of the governed and by and with their consent. We call that democracy. The ballot box is the place where the American people give their consent. It is here that they select their public servants—not masters. It is here they approve or disapprove of policies of government. The ballot box must be kept clean and pure. It must be free of coercion and intimidation. No great nation has ever fallen by reason of attacks from the outside if it is sound inside. They fall from within first. This Nation cannot be successfully assailed from without if we remain true to the principles and ideals of this Nation within.

The purpose of this Hatch bill is to take the hands of the spoilsmen out of the pockets of the taxpayers and from the throats of the voters and especially the needy voters of this country, so that they may go to the polls unafraid and vote their honest sentiments and chart their own destinies and preserve the principles and ideals of the founding fathers. We need not fear so long as the Nation has clean elections and they are free from attempts to corrupt, coerce, or intimidate.

These billions of dollars sent to the States mean tremendous power. We must not sit idly by here and permit selfish men to use these billions to perpetuate bureaucratic control and their own selfish interests. Last year we put the halter on the Federal officeholders who indulged in these practices inimical to the welfare of the people of this country. The bill before us, the new Hatch bill, puts a halter on State officeholders and agents whose salaries or wages in whole or in part are paid out of the Federal Treasury, the people who are handling these billions of dollars that are being spent in the States. This bill reaches out and says to these politicians, Federal or State, in whose hands has been placed this tremendous power, that it cannot be used to corrupt, intimidate, or coerce the voters of this country.

These billions were appropriated to help the needy and to improve our country. The direct and indirect obligations of this country exceed $50,000,000,000. We are developing a great program of national defense costing billions of dollars. There will be additional burdens placed upon the backs of the taxpayers of the Nation. Congress should see to it that no part of these taxes is used to promote the political fortunes of any person, any party, or any group, or any faction.

We owe it to the needy people, to the taxpayers, and to the American people to pass this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, so many misstatements have been made about the provisions of this bill that it would take a much longer time than 10 minutes to explain the entire scope of the legislation. This bill simply extends the provisions of the original Hatch Act to those State employees who are paid in full or in part from Federal funds. The entire purpose is to provide this additional group of public employees with the same safeguards and protection accorded Federal workers by the original law. The distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] yesterday said that if a janitor was employed at a little schoolhouse and a W. P. A. project was set up providing for the painting of that schoolhouse, and that janitor should put paper on the floor to cover it so that it would not be stained by dropping paint, he would come within the provisions of the act. That is ridiculous. I cannot understand why a man should make a statement of that kind, and certainly I would not be critical about my friend from Alabama—and he is my friend—except to say this: When he cuts it, he surely cuts it thick, and he has the ability to cut it smooth at the same time. No person comes within the purview of this act who is not receiving directly funds from the Federal Government. I contend it is the duty of the Members of this House and the Members of the Senate of the United States, when they vote appropriations from the Treasury of the United States to so safeguard those funds that they will be expended for the purposes for which they are appropriated, and not diverted into campaign funds. Having been born in the State of Pennsylvania, I have had some experience with political set-ups. I also had some experience in New York. I lived in Missouri for a time, and in Oklahoma, but now I have the good fortune to live in the State of New Mexico.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. BULWINKLE. On page 13, section 12, of the bill, we find the following language:

No officer or employee of any State or local agency whose principal employment is in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States or by any Federal agency.

Will the gentleman please explain how far that goes?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It goes just as far as that says. I think that is a very splendid provision.

Mr. BULWINKLE. All right.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Let me answer the gentleman's question. For instance, we will say an engineer in a city is appointed by the city authorities.

A W. P. A. project is set up in that city. He spends a month on that project, but that is not his principal employment. That is only a small part of his employment. He in no way comes under the provisions of this act.

Mr. BULWINKLE. But this says "whose principal employment is in connection with any activity." It does not say it has to be the activity. You can take a county attorney, where the county has a W. P. A. fund, and that county attorney may have a part of his work with it. You may mean it the way you say it, but this does not read that way.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think, if the gentleman will read other provisions of the act, he will find the interpretation he is suggesting does not apply, at all. Yesterday when one of the Members of the House was speaking, this question was asked——

Mr. BULWINKLE. Let me ask the gentleman——

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield. I want to finish if I can. I will be glad to yield when I have made my statement.

Yesterday this question was asked: In the construction of highways, where the Federal Government participates with the State, would the men who work for the contractors be permitted to attend a precinct meeting? Every Member of this House knows that the contracts are let by competitive bidding to a contractor. Workers on his pay roll are in private employment, not in the employ of either the State or the Federal Government. The contractor in no way comes under the provision of this bill, nor does a single individual working for that contractor. The only man who does come under it in connection with the project is the Federal inspector for the Public Roads Administration.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does the gentleman mean to say that the other officials of the highway commission of a State, where there are hundreds of them, are in no way affected by the provisions of this bill?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I did not say that. I say they are completely under the provisions of the bill. The highway engineers in the States which receive these grants from the Federal Government—that is their principal occupation, to spend that money, and they do come within the purview of the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Not only them but the State inspectors.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. A moment ago the gentleman said only the United States engineers.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, I did not say engineer at any time. I said the contractor or his men in no way came under the purview of this bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. But say all inspectors in the highway department?

Mr. DEMPSEY. All inspectors in the highway department, which is expending funds of the Public Roads Administration, would come under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. They are using them in my State today in a senatorial primary.

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is the great necessity for this amendment—the very thing you are talking about. We are voting hundreds of millions of dollars to build roads. Instead of building roads, we are building up campaign funds. That is exactly what we are doing with the money, and the very thing this legislation is intended to stop.

Mr. COCHRAN. Has the thought come into the gentleman's mind at all as to what might happen to this bill when it goes into conference? The House has stricken out everything after the enacting clause and substituted new language. Does not the gentleman think the best thing to do, in order to make sure we will get a law, is to pass the bill as it was passed by the Senate, so that it will go to the President and we may get some advantage in some of the primaries? Watch out it does not find a resting place in conference.

Mr. DEMPSEY. If the bill does not leave here in good form, yes; but I think the bill in some way is improved as compared with the form in which it left the Senate. For instance, there is a provision that the gentleman from Alabama spoke about yesterday relating to the dismissal of an employee or the suspension for a period of 18 months of an employee who has been found guilty of pernicious political activity. The gentleman from Alabama has placed in the bill a clause which makes it necessary, if the employee demands it, to provide a jury trial. Never in the history of this Government, as far as I know, has it been necessary to give a man a jury trial when he is dismissed from public employ for cause, even though that cause be based upon prohibited political activity. Now, what does the Hatch bill provide? What does the author of the bill desire? He says if a man is charged with prohibited political activity, the Civil Service Commission will investigate. If the Commission finds sufficient reason to give him a hearing, he is given one.

If it is determined at this hearing that he is guilty of the offense, the man can then appeal to the district court. The district judge finds not only on law but on fact, and if he finds the commission erred, the man is not discharged from his employment. If the court finds that the man is guilty, there is nothing in this bill that requires, without alternative, the dismissal of that man or his separation from the service. The State has that right, and the State can say, "We propose to retain him in his present position." When they do the Federal Government says to the State, "All right. You are going to be penalized for that to the extent of twice the amount of that man's annual salary." We are not going to do like the gentlemen of the House voted to do for the Social Security Board—have them fine a State, as they did the State of Ohio, $1,300,000. There is no discussion around here about that, but the minute we try to clean up a putrid political situation there is immediate condemnation from some sources. Many of the people who are voicing criticism around here and who oppose this bill come from States where, the records show, the grossest violations of the law—at least of the moral code of ethics—have occurred.

Mr. SHERIDAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield.

Mr. SHERIDAN. Does the gentleman realize that this is a criminal act?

Mr. DEMPSEY. There is one part of it that is intended to be criminal law. That is the part which provides penalties for coercion and intimidation of voters and similar infractions. In such cases a jury trial is, of course, provided.

Mr. SHERIDAN. Where do they get a jury trial except on making demand? They have to file a petition for it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Well, they get it. Any person charged with crime may ask for and be granted a jury trial. I was talking primarily, however, about persons involved in cases under the legislation where no criminal penalty is provided.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. STARNES of Alabama, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill S. 3046—the Hatch bill—had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—NATIONAL DEFENSE (H. DOC. NO. 874)

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

As President of the United States and as Commander in Chief of its armed forces, I come again to the representatives of the people in Congress assembled, to lay before them an extraordinary estimate of funds and authorizations required for the national defense.

In my opinion, it is necessary now that the people of this Nation and their representatives in Congress look at the problem of the national defense with utterly dispassionate realism. Never have we as a nation attempted to define the word "defense" in terms of a specific attack at a certain place at a certain time or with specified land and sea forces. In the long sweep of the century and a half since our defenses have been concentrated and unified under the Constitution, it has been a prime obligation of the President and Commander in Chief promptly to advise the Congress with respect to any world circumstances calling for either increased or diminished defense needs.

From time to time during the last 7 years I have not failed to advise the people and their representatives of grave dangers threatening the United States and its people, and the institutions of democracy everywhere. From time to time I have availed myself of opportunities to reassert and to implement the right of all the nations of the American Hemisphere to freedom from attack or control by any non-American power.

A year and a half ago, on January 4, 1939, in my address to the Congress, I referred to the fact that I had felt it necessary on previous occasions to warn of disturbances abroad, and the need of putting our own house in order in the face of storm signals from across the seas. On that day I said that a war which threatened to envelop the world in flames had been averted, but that it had become increasingly clear that peace was not assured. I said then that all about us raged undeclared wars, military and economic. I said then that all about us were threats of new aggression, military and economic. I said then that the storms from abroad directly challenged three institutions indispensable to Americans—religion, democracy, and international good faith.

Unhappily, many Americans believed that those who thought they foresaw the danger of a great war were mistaken. Unhappily, those of us who did foresee that danger were right.

A week later, on January 12, 1939, I submitted a program considered by me as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy and by my advisers to be a minimum program for the necessities of defense, saying that every American was aware of the peaceful intentions of this Government and of this people, and that every American knew that we have no thought of aggression and no desire for further territory. The Congress granted that request for the minimum program then deemed necessary.

At the beginning of September the storm broke, and on the 21st of that month, in a message to the extraordinary session of the Congress, I said that this Government must lose no time or effort to keep this Nation from being drawn into the war, and I asserted my belief that we would succeed in these efforts. We have succeeded. I believe we shall continue to succeed.

In September last, I increased the strength of the Army, Navy, Coast Guard, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation within statutory authorizations made by the Congress. In January 1940 I submitted a budget to the Congress which included provision for that expansion of personnel, as well as estimates for the national defense, amounting to approximately $2,000,000,000 for the fiscal year 1941.

On May 16, in a message to the Congress, I pointed out that the swift and shocking developments of that time forced every neutral nation to look to its defenses in the light of new factors loosed by the brutal force of modern offensive war. I called attention to the treacherous use of the "fifth column," by which persons supposed to be peaceful visitors were actually a part of an enemy unit of occupation, and called especial attention to the necessity for the protection of the whole American Hemisphere from control, invasion, or domination. I asked at that time for a sum totaling $1,182,000,000 for the national defense.

On May 31, 1940, I again sent a message to the Congress, to say that the almost incredible events of the then past 2 weeks in the European conflict had necessitated another enlargement of our military program, and at that time I asked for $1,277,741,170 for the acceleration and development of our military and naval needs as measured in both machines and men.

Again today, in less than 2 months' time, the changes in the world situation are so great and so profound that I must come once again to the Congress to advise concerning new threats, new needs, and the imperative necessity of meeting them. Free men and free women in the United States look to us to defend their freedom against all enemies, foreign and domestic. Those enemies of freedom who hate free institutions now deride democratic governments as weak and inefficient.

We, the free men and women of the United States, with memories of our fathers to inspire us and the hopes of our children to sustain us, are determined to be strong as well as free. The apologists for despotism and those who aid them by whispering defeatism or appeasement, assert that because we have not devoted our full energies to arms and to preparation for war that we are now incapable of defense.

I refute that imputation.

We fully understand the threat of the new enslavement in which men may not speak, may not listen, may not think. As these threats become more numerous and their dire meaning more clear, it deepens the determination of the American people to meet them with wholly adequate defense.

We have seen nation after nation, some of them weakened by treachery from within, succumb to the force of the aggressor. We see great nations still gallantly fighting against aggression, encouraged by high hope of ultimate victory.

That we are opposed to war is known not only to every American, but to every government in the world. We will not use our arms in a war of aggression; we will not send our men to take part in European wars.

But, we will repel aggression against the United States or the Western Hemisphere. The people and their representatives in the Congress know that the threats to our liberties, the threats to our security, the threats against our way of life, the threats to our institutions of religion, of democracy, and of international good faith, have increased in number and gravity from month to month, from week to week, and almost from day to day.

It is because of these rapid changes; it is because of the grave danger to democratic institutions; and, above all, it is because of the united will of the entire American people that I come to ask you for a further authorization of $4,848,171,957 for the national defense.

Let no man in this country or anywhere else believe that because we in America still cherish freedom of religion, of speech, of assembly, of the press; that because we maintain our free democratic political institutions by which the Nation, after full discussion and debate, chooses its representatives and leaders for itself—let no man here or elsewhere believe that we are weak.

The United States is the greatest industrial Nation in the world. Its people, as workers and as businessmen, have proved that they can unite in the national interest and that they can bring together the greatest assembly of human skills, of mechanical production, and of national resources, ever known in any nation.

The principal lesson of the war up to the present time is that partial defense is inadequate defense.

If the United States is to have any defense, it must have total defense.

We cannot defend ourselves a little here and a little there. We must be able to defend ourselves wholly and at any time.

Our plans for national security, therefore, should cover total defense. I believe that the people of this country are willing to make any sacrifice to attain that end.

After consultation with the War and Navy Departments and the Advisory Commission of the Council of National Defense, I recommend a further program for the national defense. This contemplates the provision of funds and authorizations for the material requirements without which the manpower of the Nation, if called into service, cannot effectively operate, either in the production of arms and goods, or their utilization in repelling attack.

In broad outline our immediate objectives are as follows:

1. To carry forward the naval-expansion program designed to build up the Navy to meet any possible combination of hostile naval forces.

2. To complete the total equipment for a land force of approximately 1,200,000 men, though of course this total of men would not be in the Army in time of peace.

3. To procure reserve stocks of tanks, guns, artillery, ammunition, and so forth, for another 800,000 men, or a total of 2,000,000 men if a mobilization of such a force should become necessary.

4. To provide for manufacturing facilities, public and private, necessary to produce critical items of equipment required for a land force of 2,000,000 men, and to produce the ordnance items required for the aircraft program of the Army and Navy—guns, bombs, armor, bomb sights, and ammunition.

5. Procurement of 15,000 additional planes for the Army and 4,000 for the Navy, complete with necessary spare engines, armaments, and the most modern equipment.

The foregoing program deals exclusively with matériel requirements. The Congress is now considering the enactment of a system of selective training for developing the necessary manpower to operate this matériel and manpower to fill Army noncombat needs. In this way we can make certain that when this modern matériel becomes available, it will be placed in the hands of troops trained, seasoned, and ready, and that replacement matériel can be guaranteed.

I take this occasion to report the excellent progress being made for the procurement of the equipment already ordered under authorization by the Congress. Every week more and more is being delivered. The several branches of the Government are working in close cooperation with each other and with private manufacturers.

We are keeping abreast of developments in strategy, tactics, and technique of warfare, and build our defenses accordingly.

The total amount which I ask of the Congress in order that this program may be carried out with all reasonable speed is $2,161,441,957, which it is estimated would be spent out of the Treasury between now and July 1, 1941, and an additional $2,686,730,000 for contract authorizations.

So great a sum means sacrifice. So large a program means hard work—the participation of the whole country in the total defense of the country. This Nation through sacrifice and work and unity proposes to remain free.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 10, 1940.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, it is to be hoped that this will complete the program of national defense. These are tremendous sums added to what has already been authorized and appropriated.

I take this minute in order to say a thing that has been rather on my heart for some time. The United States of America, in my opinion—and I think I speak the heart of America when I say this, the heart of America from the head of the Government down—intends that not one dollar of this money shall ever be used to equip an army of aggression, because we covet not one foot of soil over which the flag of any other nation flies today. And may I say further that as far as I am concerned, and I still feel that I speak the heart of America from the head of the Government down, that not one dollar of this money shall ever be used to equip and send American boys to fight on European soil. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF ACT TO PREVENT PERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 3046.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 3046) to prevent pernicious political activities, with Mr. STARNES of Alabama in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how the time stands?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has 1 hour and 1 minute remaining. The gentleman from Kansas has 37 minutes remaining.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, if I may be privileged to speak it, considering all our circumstances the bill now before the Committee is perhaps the most important bill that has been considered by this Congress in 25 years at least. I am certain that I am not considering this bill from a partisan standpoint, and I am not considering it from the standpoint of any of the factions within any party. We are assembled here today at a time when democratic government is in peril the whole world over, including our own country.

Democracy is a government by the people. Do not forget that. In order for a government by the people to function two things are absolutely necessary: There must be governmental machinery through which a democracy can function, and there must be a governmental capacity on the part of the people capable of operating a democratic system of government. This bill strikes deeply into the vitals of each of these requirements. There is not the slightest question about that. These are sound propositions on which everyone ought to agree.

Democracy in America is in danger from what we are doing to democracy. In Europe the conflict is between democracy and that type of government functioning from the top downward, designated as totalitarian government. The danger to democracy in America is not from that type of government but from another type which also functions from the top downward—a Federal bureaucracy.

An interesting thing is that democracy in the world seems to be under attack by that thing which in each situation could do the most hurt to democracy. In this bill democracy is under attack by the Congress, many Members of which have been deploring the development of Federal bureaucracy.

We are not discussing persons but a system of government. The individuals who make up this rapidly developing bureaucracy are fine American citizens. They are doing the work assigned to them. They are not originating this new power. Congress is doing it. They are not declaring to the world that our democracy is so complete a failure that our States cannot be entrusted with the control of their State employees and State elections. Congress is doing it.

Before we go any further, suppose we examine briefly our structure of government.

The statements of our friends that we began this noble experiment on this continent are entirely erroneous. The facts are that through the long processes of time the democracy of the Anglo-Saxon peoples has been in process of development. When we established our governments in America—first the colonies and then the States—the plan of those governments was that of a democracy, the very nature of which placed responsibility in the main in the small communities which were close to the people, because it was to be and was the people's government. When you examine the governmental structure of our States you see there the possibility of popular control, because most of the business of the States is carried on through cities, and counties, small units of government where the democrat, the person, the human being, elect the chief officers and has a chance to have his influence felt, a chance of control. It is close to him.

When you examine progress in democratic systems of government you find that all progress in those systems from the time they were established has been in that direction which puts power to govern and necessity to govern closer and closer to the individual. That is common sense. It is an absolute necessity.

It has got to be closer and closer to the people because the people are the Government. It has got to be closer and closer to the people in order that the people may have the responsibilities of and may deal with the problems of government and increase thereby their capacity to govern by dealing with the problems of government. I do not suppose anybody will question any of those statements I have made thus far. If they are sound this bill is unsound.

What does this Hatch bill propose to do in the particulars that have been under discussion? It is a most remarkable bill and the thing that is most remarkable to me is to see my friends on the Republican side who have been criticizing bureaucracy and the centralization of government and those who have been talking about State rights, favoring this bill.

The same is true of those on the Democratic side. We get up here and talk about preserving democracy in the world, yet right here we are doing the thing which we know by common sense and the experience of people in the realm of government is removing governmental power away from the people and centering it here in Washington at the place where you say it ought not to be. That is a remarkable thing. We all love our friend from New Mexico, Mr. DEMPSEY, but the gentleman and the rest of you have never once discussed the big feature in this bill, and that is what you are doing to the necessary, the indispensable functioning machinery of our democratic system of government.

We all agree that there should not be political corruption, but that is not the big question. The big question in this proposed legislation is, Will you remove the responsibility of the people to govern from their communities up here to Washington? Will you put it within the power of a bureaucratic organization to deal with a State election, even a primary election in a local community, as is proposed by this bill?

If this legislation is necessary, it is only because the States cannot be entrusted to take care of their own elections and of their own officials. That is the implied charge contained in this bill. There is no governmental responsibility more important or more completely within the governmental capacity of the States unless it be true, as this bill implies, that our democracy cannot govern.

If the States cannot be entrusted to control the elections of their officials, as this bill implies, it is true, as the enemies of democracy claim, that our democracy ought to be abolished. It is utterly ridiculous for anybody to talk about having any respect for our States in connection with his advocacy of this bill, and I say that the only reason which you can offer to your people when you go back to them as to why you voted for this bill is the excuse that you do not think your State and your people can be entrusted with preserving the purity of their elections. You tell your people and you tell the world how in this critical hour, when democracy is on trial, when many people are questioning it, when the friends of democracy ought to demonstrate their confidence in it and adopt those governmental policies calculated to preserve and strengthen it, you declare, "We do not believe the people of a State can be trusted with the protection of the purity of their own local elections."

This bill does not abolish any power to coerce a vote. It shifts the power from those whom the people can control and punish to a Federal agency whose personnel the people cannot punish or control.

You are going to turn over to a Federal bureaucracy the power to coerce the people of my State. I know what I am talking about. You put it in the power of a Federal officer, a part of a bureaucratic machine, to go into the State of Texas, for instance, and bump off the pay roll a State employee in the State of Texas because of local political activities. There is no one who can challenge that. That is where you are putting the power. You are not protecting anybody. You are moving the power of control from the people of the States, who elect their public officers, to somebody from Washington who, under this bill, could go into my State and say to my people: "You put that man off the pay roll and if you do not we will fine you 2 years of his salary." What are you going to do about it? The poor devil involved goes off the pay roll that minute under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. HANCOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield if my statement is not true.

Mr. HANCOCK. Charges must be preferred.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; by somebody connected with the Federal organization.

Mr. HANCOCK. And he must be found guilty by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes, by another part of the same agency. I cannot yield further. A bureau in Washington makes the charges and conducts the investigation. A bureau in Washington makes a finding and demands of the State or employing community that it discharge this employee—its own employee—and if it does not it fines the State 2 years' salary for not taking him off, and there is no one can controvert that statement.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. If I have made an incorrect statement.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I want to correct the gentleman. Your complaint comes from the State or local agency and it is called to the attention of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Oh, no; it is not.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Read the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The State does not have a thing to do with it except to do what it is told to do. That is the truth about the matter. Read the bill yourself.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I have read it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The complaint is made by somebody connected with a Federal activity; then the Civil Service Commission makes an investigation; they tell the State to turn him loose and if it does not turn him loose it is fined 2 years' salary. There is no one can controvert that who has read the bill.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No. I want to talk to those who have been hollering their heads off here about developing bureaucracy in this country and yet are supporting this bill. This bill is the farthest reach of bureaucratic powers into the vitals of democratic institutions and in favor of bureaucracy that has been proposed in this Government since the beginning of the Government. I say to you people who have been complaining about the destruction of our democracy and the substitution therefor of a bureaucratic Government, this thing is not proposed by the bureaucracy itself. It is proposed by the Congress of the United States to give to a Federal agency the power to coerce and dominate a sovereign State in a matter of its most intimate and vital governmental responsibility.

Tell it what it has to do with regard to its own employees and its own elections and tell its citizens what they have to do or lose their State and community jobs.

You think of that, you think of the Congress of the United States, the Members of which are talking about democracy and professing concern that somebody may do something to our democracy, adopting a program and supporting a bill that carries with it a declaration to the world that we do not believe the people can be trusted to govern themselves.

This is the attack on our democracy: The Federal Government goes out into the States and gets more money from the States by taxation and the sale of bonds than is spent for Federal purposes. Then a part of that money is sent back to the States for various projects with an attached power of control. Then Congress comes along and says to these bureaus: "We will enact a law and give you the power to use this money to blackmail the States to compel the States to submit to your demands. You can tell a State that if it does not fire one of its employees whose dismissal is demanded by a Federal agency we will take 2 years of his salary away."

What do you think about that? If you can do it to control an election and to determine whom the States may employ and whether an employee of a State may keep his job, you can do it to control schools; you can do it to control every power that a State exercises. You are endorsing that policy of government when you pass this bill. You are setting a precedent. Nothing has been proposed like this since the organization of the Government. No more serious charge has been made by Hitler, Mussolini, Stalin, or the "fifth column" against the governmental dependability and capacity of the people than is contained in this bill. Talk about a people being able to govern, being able to operate a democracy and then denying to them a duty and a responsibility so intimate as their elections and the right to determine their own employees is the height of absurdity.

You send into your States a Federal agency to control with reference to State employees and State elections, and then go hollering your heads off about this development of Federal bureaucracy. We are discussing governmental power. In the allocation of governmental power it is not only what may be done in a particular respect but what may be done with the power thus located which statesmen must consider. The most remarkable thing perhaps about the whole matter is the lack of evidence of any hesitancy to use the control of this money to exercise a power over the States denied to the Federal Government by the Constitution which we are sworn to defend. It is admitted by Senator HATCH, whom we all respect, that it cannot be done through the Constitution. My distinguished friend will admit the same thing. The Constitution of the United States protects the States in their right to control their own elections in their precincts and to select and retain their own employees and protect these employees from being dependent upon any Federal agency for the retention of their jobs. This is not merely contrary to our written Constitution but it is contrary to common sense to have an agency of government like a State that the public interest requires should be responsible to the people and yet is denied complete responsibility and power in the selection of its own agents through whom that responsibility must be discharged.

You cannot go through the Constitution. Everybody admits it; that is the remarkable thing, talking about the Constitution, talking about the reserved rights of the States, and what do you propose to do? You would break through the constitutional barrier if you could. That is evident. You cannot get through. So what do you do? I quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Senate proceedings, March 5, 1940, page 2339:

Mr. HATCH—

Regarding control over State elections—

There are several grounds upon which we may enact this type of legislation.

The Senator—

asked me the specific question what power the Federal Government had to control directly State elections when no Federal officer was involved. I answered that question, "none"; but we do have control over the funds we appropriate from the Treasury. * * *

* * * * * * * *

Mr. MINTON. The Senator has admitted that we have no control over the conduct of a State election. Does the Senator contend that the Federal Government may use some power that it does have in order to coerce a State and State employees and State electors in a field in which the Federal Government has no power at all to act?

Pages 2340 and 2341:

Mr. HATCH. Section 3 of the bill which I had started to discuss is the one which affects directly the employees of the States in vast numbers, and provides, in substance, that they shall not engage in political activities. That provision, Mr. President, was the one which gave us difficulty in drafting. * * * All we had to do, of course, was to copy the language of the existing law, the civil-service rule, or adopt new language making such prohibition. * * * We do not have such means with reference to the States. The Congress of the United States could not say that if a particular man did the prohibited act he must be discharged, and then proceed to discharge him or have him discharged. There is no such power as that. There was the question of how far the Congress should go with such legislation. * * *

* * * We adopted the theory of first forbidding political activities of State employees as we have forbidden them on the part of our own employees, * * * not to punish the State but to procure compliance with the nonpolitical provision of the law, which, I take it, the Senator from Indiana is going to say is a method and means of coercing the States and forcing them to comply with standards which we set up.

You lead these bureaus around behind the Constitution, you men sworn to defend it, and make a rear attack on the Constitution that you are sworn to defend. You make a rear attack upon the reserved rights of the States and upon the liberty of speech and action of these citizens. Talk to me about preserving democracy and the right of the people to govern! Of course, there are things in the States that ought to be done. If there was not there would be no need for a State government. But when did you discover that because a thing connected with a State government ought to be done you ought to have a Federal bureaucracy do it? When did anybody discover that every time there is some business to be attended to in a State you have to holler for Uncle Sam to come and do it?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman asked when we discovered that. We discovered it when the Federal Government commenced to do these things in the States which should be done in the States, but which have been done by the Federal Government and the bureaus almost entirely within the last 10 years.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Fifteen years ago I directed the attention of this House to the development of this bureaucracy, and I am going to put those statements in the RECORD. But because this was done that ought not to have been done, you come along and you say, "You have been pikers at this job; we will show you how to do it." You could not get through the Constitution; you are barred. You say, "If you will follow us, Mr. Bureau, we will show you a route around the Constitution where you can attack these States from the rear and compel a sovereign State to yield to the dictation of a Federal bureau, or take the money from them." That is what you are doing.

When you get out on the stump this fall, and we get out on the stump this fall, this bill will come up to confront every man who is appealing to the American people to give democracy in this country the right to exist. If the people of a State cannot be entrusted governmentally with things so intimate and so important as the election of their own public officials and the control of their own employees, in the name of common sense, why do you want a government by the people? Who is going to answer that? I am talking to you as Americans, as the responsible representative of a sovereign people, not as somebody that is being bossed by somebody on the Republican side or on the Democratic side. There has been a good deal of talk here from the Republican side about having some "rubber stamps" on this Democratic side. Well, we do have a few; we have too many. But it looks to me as if you are going to demonstrate that you do not have "rubber stamps" over there, but you do have wooden ones. People are supposed to vote with their heads.

The thing just does not make sense. It just does not make sense to be up here talking about a democracy, taking about the power of the people to govern, when really we are declaring to the world that in the greatest democracy on earth the people cannot govern. You just take that and think about it. This bill declares to the nations of the earth that the people in the States, in their local communities, cannot govern and you are compelled to send in a Federal bureaucracy to coerce the State. You cannot keep this sort of thing up and preserve democracy in this country. The only way you can preserve democracy is to keep the people in responsibility. It is a tragic thing that is about to happen in this House.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the situation. Your candidate for President has endorsed this bill, the President of the United States has endorsed the bill, and we are told that the leadership on both sides is for the bill. I am doing my best to discharge my responsibility. I believe in a democracy, in the right, and in the capacity of the people to govern but only if they are kept in governmental responsibility. If ever there was a time on the face of this earth when individuals in responsibility, like you and myself are in responsibility, should be willing to be guided by the best judgment that God Almighty has given us, instead of being dictated to by somebody else, that time is now. The people of this country are thinking as they have never thought before.

I have just got back from home. The people of this country want another chance to try to preserve democracy and free government in this country. The people are getting tired of somebody coming down from Washington and telling them what they can do or cannot do. [Applause.]

The men out on W. P. A. aspire for something better for their children than to have to follow in their footsteps. These million people on the Federal pay roll—if this thing keeps on and every person keeps climbing on that raft out in the water, the first thing we know the whole thing will sink and they will all be in the water. These Federal employees know that. This having the State and Federal Governments working at the same job has got to quit. There is a limit beyond which the expense of government cannot go.

The people want this sort of business stopped. I have talked with my people. The people of this country are willing to do the job, in a free country. You have the responsibility of leadership and you preach the doctrine of defeatism again from this forum and tell them they cannot even control their own elections.

I want to tell you it is a pretty serious thing we are doing in this country now. What are we going to do about it? Let us see what we are fixing to do. We have a great form of government in America. Unquestionably, we have got the greatest possible—we have the most perfect possible for the functioning of a great democracy that ever developed in the world. First, you have the people; above the people the small units of government; above the small units of government the States; and above that the Federal organization.

When these 13 independent States as a Nation took counsel with reference to their situation they decided that they needed a common agency to look after their diplomatic matters; that they needed a common agency to deal with their Army and their Navy; that they needed one system of weights and measures, and a few other things like that; and they created this Federal organization to act for them in these matters. There never was any purpose to make it a government of general responsibilities.

The people cannot operate so big a system of government dealing with general government responsibilities and they had sense enough to know it, and so they provided that only those powers which they specifically delegated to this central organization should that central organization have, and they reserved all the other powers to themselves and to the people.

Now, I do not mention this as one who makes a fetish of the Constitution, but I mention it as a logical, sensible arrangement of governmental powers.

What are we trying to do? We are trying to make this Government function from the top down. We are trying to send a Federal bureaucrat into my State and yours to deal with a State election. We are attempting by this bill to authorize a Federal bureaucrat to go down there and, in a measure, determine who is to be employed by the State.

We are giving to this great Federal organization the power to go down to that State and say to your State and my State—think of it—you people who come from these States—think what you are authorizing them to do—to go down to your State and say, "If you do not fire this State employee, we will fine you 2 years of his salary." Now, that is what you are voting, and go back there and blah, blah to your people about how much sense you think they have got, and about our great democracy. And today you are going to cast a vote which declares to the world you do not believe what you are saying.

What is the use of the States if we cannot trust them to take care of their State elections and determine who is to do their work? Now, just ask that in your own minds. What is the use of paying the expense of a State government if the State government cannot be entrusted to take care of its own elections and its own employees. If we keep on doing this sort of thing and saying this sort of thing to the people of the country, they are going to say that there is not any use, and there will not be any use for this reason.

When you continue to take these powers from these States, our only agencies through which democracy can function, they will continue to lose power, to function, and that is how we are destroying the States and this democracy. We are taking from these States specific powers, one after another, and every time we take a power from the States, under a law of nature that power to do that thing departs from that State and we leave that State weaker and weaker and weaker with reference to the discharge of its other remaining duties until finally it cannot do the job. In proportion as you take these powers away from the small units of government where the people have responsibility, where they have the necessity to govern, the people lose the capacity to govern, because that same universal law of God Almighty will not permit power to remain anywhere where it is not used, and the day will come when you will undertake to send some of these powers back into the States and they will not be governmentally able to receive them and that will be the end. Are we so blind that we cannot see this or are we so indifferent that it is of no concern to us?

And who will be responsible? We will be responsible. We are doing the trick now. We are destroying these States now. We are destroying the governmental capacity of the people now. We are destroying this democracy now. I do not care who advocates this thing. I try to be loyal to my party, but in this hour of my Nation's peril, when I know that democratic institutions are under challenge everywhere, so help me God, I am not going to do that which I think will destroy my country. [Applause.] This is a solemn hour for us here in this House. No responsibility equal to ours has rested on anybody in this country in 50 years at least. Will we measure up to it? It is an individual responsibility and an individual challenge. There is not a human being in this House who does not know that this proposed legislation, this authorization of a bureaucratic power to do this thing, is against the fundamentals of democracy and is against the increase of the capacity of the people to govern; and whenever the problems of this Government get larger than the governmental capacity of the people, then government turns from that people and lays its hands on a bureau or a Hitler or some other nondemocratic agency. You know that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes more.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Here is the thought that occurs to me: I think I share this guilt with the gentleman from Texas. The States have already admitted their incapacity to take care of their problems, because they come as suppliants to the Government and ask for money to discharge their functions. Can they very well escape the burdens and accept only the benefits? Must they not come under such restrictions as are necessary to see to it that there is no misuse of the funds that they may receive from the Federal Government?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I agree with what is in the gentleman's mind. I think the States originally are responsible, but they are your people.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And yours.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. And mine—you bet your life, and I am standing here, as I believe, protecting not merely the interest of this generation, and their opportunity to govern themselves but of the generations that are to come.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MAY. We must remember in connection with the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] that the Federal Government does not have a dollar in the world except what it gets out of the people of the States.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am going to say something about that right now. I agree thoroughly that the States are remiss in the first instance, and I recall when first I was here how my State was urging me and urging others to take the liberties of the people, the governmental opportunities of the people which our ancestors had given their lives on a hundred battlefields to obtain, and bring them here and sell them at the door of the Treasury of the United States; but the State is not the entity, a thing apart from our people. We are talking about the people and the responsibility is ours, and the question is, Shall we go on and on and on until we reach the destination you know and I know we are heading for, or will we stop here now and attempt at least to not go further in that direction? Stop the retreat.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The trouble is that we cannot undo the things that have been done in the last 8 years and we have to reckon with a condition rather than a theory.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. But does not the gentleman think that this is the first step to destroy democracy and bring a dictatorship to this country?

Mr. MASON. The first step?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is the starting.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. As soon as I make a statement. This thing did not start 8 years ago. I examined this matter a good many years ago. I quote from a statement I made 15 years ago in which I pointed out then that we were engaged in a concentration of governmental power and the development of a bureaucracy which would bring peril to this country:

> Contrary to our traditions, to our philosophy of government, contrary to all the things we profess to believe and against all the warnings of history, we are placing the three powers of government—legislative, executive, and judicial—into the hands of the same personnel, not one of whom is elected by the people.

In 1932 I made a speech before the American Bar Association in which I made a similar statement. I shall put some excerpts in the RECORD.

I quote the following from the speech I made before the American Bar Association, October 14, 1932:

> When we look about us today, conscious of that responsibility, we cannot be happy in any sense of duty well performed. With a rapidity unequaled in the history of governments, we are changing the distinctive characteristics of our system from a representative government, the thing which we inherited, to a bureaucratic government, in many respects, of all systems, the most extravagant, most susceptible to tyranny and corruption, and the most destructive of the governmental capacity of the people.
> VIOLATING NATURAL LAW—MOVING TOWARD BUREAUCRACY
> Save one, our most basic philosophy of government finds expression in the three separate, coordinate branches of government—legislative, executive, and judicial. It is the fashion of our orators to have much to say about the wisdom and natural harmony of that arrangement, and the necessity to preserve this separation, but when we come to examine the direction in which our policies are moving us, we find that we are constantly consolidating these powers of government, and that, too, in an appointed personnel. They are given the power to make rules, which insofar as the average individual is concerned, have all the force of law, the power to construe these rules, and the power to enforce them; all the powers a king ever had.
> This is not all. With a rapidity which makes the heart sick, we are reducing the States from the station of sovereignty to that of vassalage to a great Federal bureaucracy.
> With even greater rapidity, by moving power to govern and necessity to govern from the smaller units of government, where the average private citizen has the greatest power to govern and necessity to govern, we are destroying the governmental capacity of the private citizen. We are destroying his self-reliance, his consciousness of responsibility, his pride of position, and making him a mendicant at the door of the Federal Treasury. There is nothing more destructive than nonuse. Nature will not waste its energies. Cease to use the arm, it loses the power to do. Fish in the Mammoth Cave have no eyes. Cease to exercise the power to govern, and the power to govern departs.
> NECESSITY OF STATES TO GOVERN
> The right of the States to govern was never important, but the necessity of the States to govern in those matters which fall within their governmental capacity is of fundamental importance. Go to the various Federal agencies today and what do you see? Go to the agencies of the Federal Government dispensing credit and gratuities; there you see the private citizen, the municipality, the other divisions of the States; you see the banks, the railroads, other corporations; and you see sovereign States arguing and pleading with appointed persons for the privilege of borrowing money contributed in taxes by their citizens and money raised by mortgaging the tax-paying resources of their citizens for years to come. Whether these beggars, these mendicants, these once sovereign States get a part of this money or not depends upon what these appointed persons decide to do about it.

Mr. Chairman, ours is a joint responsibility. This development was in full operation 15 years ago. This is not a partisan matter. No party is solely responsible for what has happened, but we are responsible for what is happening now, today, here in this Chamber. The people after the World War were indifferent, and things drifted along. There is a community of responsibility and now there is a community of duty.

Mr. BREWSTER. I followed the gentleman's argument with a good deal of interest. Would it result in logical effort to wipe out the entire civil-service system?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am not wiping it out. I am now trying to wipe out this bill.

Mr. BREWSTER. Will the gentleman agree that would be the logical end of his argument?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Oh, no, I am talking about this bill.

Mr. BREWSTER. And I am asking about the philosophical end of it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Oh, the philosopher is not here, and I do not want to mix in anything like that.

May I call your attention again to this speech made in 1925?

> There is no use complaining of bureaucracy so long as the total of governmental responsibility concentrated in Washington is beyond the capacity of a government of the representative type to discharge.
> When the capacity of the ordinary machinery of the Federal Government becomes overloaded, these bureaus are the only agencies to which the overload can be shifted. When these bureaus have transferred to them such powers of government as it is necessary now to place in them, and they exercise those powers without effective supervision by elected agents of the people, as is now the case, we have a great Federal bureaucracy far toward its full development, regardless of what the Constitution provides.
> Is there anybody in position to know the facts—Democrat, Republican, Socialist, or what not—who does not know that the total of governmental responsibility concentrated at Washington is beyond human capacity to discharge through any agency susceptible of popular control?
> REACTIONARY MOVEMENT
> Gentlemen, the present direction of movement is not progress. It is reaction; I do not care what sort of brand the individual puts upon himself who advocates it. I lay down this proposition, sound in theory, sound in governmental philosophy, and established by history, that after the completion of the formative period of a popular government, all true governmental progress, by the very nature of that system of government, must be in that direction which moves governmental power away from the central established by history, that after the completion of the formative period back toward the people into those governmental agencies more directly and more completely under popular control. The reasons for that are not founded in theory; they are founded in necessity. We face that necessity now. This is not left to the will of statesmen. It is fixed in the economy of nature. Popular government is not an accident. It is necessary for human development, and nothing necessary for human development is left to chance. Human respect for nature's plan is secured by natural laws which human beings must respect or pay the penalty. We are paying the penalty not only here but in the States.

DESTROYING STATE EFFICIENCY

We are not only destroying the efficiency of our system of government at the Federal end by an overloaded governmental machinery but we are destroying the efficiency of the States. If we want to destroy the States as virile, efficient agencies of popular government, there could be no more effective method than our present policy of taking from them the necessity to discharge the powers that rest naturally within the scope of their governmental jurisdiction. That is what we are doing and doing largely by State and popular surrender as distinguished from Federal usurpation. That is a most remarkable fact. Can anybody question that the States are losing their dignity, their independence, their importance, and their vigor as sovereign units of government when he sees them bereft of responsibility, begging at the door of the Federal Treasury? That is not a beautiful figure.

That is not all. We are not only destroying the efficiency of the Federal Government by the overload, and the vigor and governmental capacity of the States by this process, but we are doing a far greater harm than that. By taking governmental responsibilities from those units of government that are close to the people we are taking from the private citizens the necessity of a more direct grapple with the problems of their Government, which problems and the necessity to work them out in good providence come to develop them for the bigger responsibilities of tomorrow.

SYSTEM DEPENDENT UPON GOVERNMENTAL CAPACITY OF CITIZENS

If this system of government is to endure, it must depend for its strength in the crises that are to come not so much upon its laws or upon the written provisions of its Constitution, or even upon the capacity of men in official position, but upon the virtue and the governmental capacity of its private citizenship. The present policy of creating a feeling of dependence upon a great central government is not calculated to develop such a citizenship. It is the sense of responsibility that sobers judgment, that develops civic virtue; it is the strength which comes from the struggle, from the grapple with the difficulties incident to the operation of a system of popular government which gives capacity. Nor can the lesson, taught by the penalty imposed for mistakes made, be dispensed with. How can we hope to develop a citizenship capable of dealing with the greater difficulties of tomorrow when we are constantly moving the power and responsibility, the necessity to govern, away from the people, away from those units of government wherein the private citizen has the more direct control and the larger share of responsibility? We have turned our backs on the lessons of history and are trying to operate our system of government from the top downward, in violation of the laws of its nature, and in violation of the laws of human nature as well.

I do not care what the form of that government is; I do not care what the political philosophers say, if you injure the governmental capacity of the people you strike at the foundation of governmental strength and at the ability of the people to protect their right against governmental and private oppression. We have not only to stop concentration but we have to begin an intelligent decentralization of governmental responsibility.

I am making the same speech this minute. If you want to destroy the States, you cannot do it more effectively and you cannot adopt a better means than to take from them the necessity of doing these things that are within the governmental capacity.

That is what we are doing, and doing largely by State and popular surrender as distinguished from Federal usurpation.

Today it is congressional leadership of Federal usurpation. Today you cry: "Those of us who have been complaining about Federal usurpation, we show you the route around the Constitution. You cannot get through the constitutional barrier, but you just follow us. We have got a slick way to do it. We will just tell these States if they do not come across and let us boss them we will fine them." The Congress is approving that policy by this bill. Is it not remarkable that you, with your philosophy of government and with all the things that are happening to democracies in the world, would consider for a split second leading the attack of bureaucracy upon your State and its power to control State elections?

I will tell you, this will face you all the days of your life. Nobody ever proposed such a thing as this before. This Congressional thing I am talking about. We are endorsing it. What can you say about the bureaus in the future doing these things? You say, "Come along. You have been a bunch of pikers. I will show you how to get in the back door. You cannot control these States through any constitutional power, but you follow me and I will show you how you can do so. I will show you how you can tell my State you have got to fire that man. I will show you how you can pursue a State employee and make him afraid of somebody up here in Washington."

Talk about pernicious political activity. When we have advanced a little further in this development of bureaucracy in America, do you believe that anybody connected with a government determined to perpetuate itself in office will discover much pernicious activity among those who are trying to keep them in office?

Why do we not use common sense? You know, the most pernicious activity in the world is that of those trying to get those in power out of power. You are putting it into the power of bureaucracy to go into your State and if a man is not voting right bump him off. How many bump-offs will there be before everybody gets to voting right? You are a smart bunch. Talk about control. You are removing this power to coerce the voter from those whom the people can control; those whom they elect and can depend upon—to somebody that they do not elect and cannot control—and you know it. It is the most astonishing thing——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I will take 10 more minutes.

I appreciate your attention. I know, absolutely, that if the country had time to look beneath the surface, to see what this bill really does, it would not be permitted to sail under the false colors of preventing pernicious political activity. People have been deceived by the title of this bill. It is our duty to see what the thing is. That is our business. That is what our people sent us here for. You cannot run this Government with a bunch of back-seat drivers, like those putting pressure on the individual Members of this House, not in an hour like this. Do not be afraid your people will not stand by you if you vote against this bill when you go home and tell them what you have done, because the people of America are getting tired of having somebody in Washington tell them whether they may do it every time they want to take a long breath. People want to govern themselves one more time. They are in the right humor to do it. They are willing to pay the price. By this bill you say "You cannot do it. You cannot even run your elections."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield briefly.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would say there is something more involved than purity of politics; rather the preservation of the two-party system, because it is the last effort on the part of Congress to grope for the preservation of that system. Mussolini said in 1934, "The first attribute of the corporate state is one political party." Here we are today writing a bill in the hope that we can hold on to the two-party system because your administration has pushed us so far in the direction of the corporate state. That is what I think is involved here.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Now, you are a pretty smart gentleman. I want to show you how little sense you are using on that. You are putting it into the power of the party in power to scare the life out of every State employee in your State. That is how smart you are. I am telling you the truth and you know it when you stop to think about it.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Well, just briefly.

Mr. CHURCH. You have already given power to the Federal Government to control them because of the money given out by the Federal Government.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Now, I cannot yield further.

Mr. CHURCH. This bill means control against bribery or unfair use of that money.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; and you propose to extend bribery further by bribing the State into surrender of control over its elections in order to get the money.

Mr. CHURCH. This bill prevents the bribery.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; you are bribing them, and browbeating them, and blackmailing them, saying to the States that if they do not come across here in accordance with the views of somebody in Washington, if they question the infinite wisdom of the Washington bureaucrats as to what they ought to do, we will make you regret it.

And then, take that poor little fellow on the State pay roll. In the bill you exempt the governors and the elected fellows, but here is a poor little fellow working for a living and he is not voting just "right." Who is going to pass on it in the first instance? Washington. Washington has him removed; one or two are enough, and the rest will not have to be bothered with. Now, you know that just as well as you know anything about practical politics.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK. But the right to vote as one pleases is a right preserved by the Constitution.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Oh, yes! And who administers it, who administers the voting laws? The outfit that is trying to stay in office.

Mr. HANCOCK. The Civil Service Commission and the courts.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; and the courts. What can this little fellow who is ousted from his job do? The gentleman from New York has a great remedy for him. He said the other day that the poor little devil could go to the Supreme Court of the United States. [Laughter.]

Mr. HANCOCK. That is the last resort of both great and small.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. He can go to the Supreme Court of the United States and have himself restored—this poor man working at an ordinary State job who has already had his pay stopped.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Does not the gentleman from Texas feel that if this bill becomes a law it will, like the prohibition law, be more honored in the breach than in the observance; that it will create disrespect for all law?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I understand what the gentleman is driving at. Here is an interesting thing I want to call to your attention. You do not have a chance to pass a Federal law until you get the people stirred up to the point where you do not need it. That is a strong statement.

I mean to make it strong. You have got to have a condition of public opinion that is getting ready to do the job in the local governments if let alone for a little while before you can get enough public opinion to scare these fellows here into voting for a Federal law. I do not like to bring up things that I have talked about on other occasions, but take the antilynching bill for instance. When there were 230 lynchings in the country there was not a demand for a Federal law, but in the last Congress, when there had been but 3 lynchings in a year, some 20 bills were introduced. Sentiment was so strong the matter was petitioned out of the committee and passed by a vote of 2 to 1; and in the last 12 months, when there has not been a lynching in the United States, if it had not been that the Senate had more sense than we have, you would have passed it. The States and their communities would have been robbed of the credit and everybody would have been hollowing "See what Uncle Sam has done."

The tragedy of this concentrated Federal responsibility is that it weakens the States. Responsibility is what makes a responsible people but the very minute the Federal Government steps in the States step out. There is a revolution in this country against corruption in public office, but now you come in and instead of letting that revolution force its way back into the States, into the local communities where the people everywhere are starting to clean house, instead of letting them do the job and get strong from their efforts, more capable of sustaining a democracy, the author of this bill or those favoring it jump in here and want to rob them of the glory, the confidence, and the strength with which nature would have rewarded them by passing the Hatch bill. Then the people back home will give up and say, "I guess we'd better let them do it; I guess we could not do it anyway." And thus progresses the destruction of a great democracy.

If we are to preserve democracy we must let the people do the job of governing. I repeat what I said a little while ago, American democracy is in danger. American democracy has its back to the wall fighting against the absorption of all power by a great Federal bureaucracy and the Congress is opening up the way around and is directing the rear attack. Democracy's back is to the wall in America. You keep this thing up and even if Mr. Hitler could get over here there would not be much left for him to do. You cannot preserve a democracy unless you preserve the governmental capacity of a people able to operate it; and you cannot preserve that capacity by taking from the people in the small units of government the necessity to do those things that fall directly within their governmental capacity. I lay that down as a proposition sound in reason and absolutely established by history. I am making the best fight I can. I am not responsible for result. I know I am right. I do not think the historian will pay any attention to me, and I do not give a hoot, but if he did I would have no concern as to his verdict.

I stand here before you gentlemen who speak the judgment of the Nation in the most critical hour of democracy in the history of the world and I plead with you not to send out to the world the expression of judgment of the United States that the people—your people—cannot be entrusted with the responsibility of preserving pure elections in their State. If they cannot, the end of this democracy already has been reached. There is not any excuse for this legislation excepting on that theory.

I thank you. [Applause, the Members rising.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I respond with some timidity to the learned, scholarly, and shall I say ingenious argument of the gentleman from Texas. Obviously, I cannot speak with authority on how they conduct elections in States where they have but a single party, but I think I can speak with some authority about my own State, where the two-party system still prevails. May I say that everyone who has spoken thus far in the manner of the gentleman from Texas thoroughly underestimates the resiliency, the robustness, and the independence of the American voter. You give the authority as couched in the language of this bill, and I am satisfied that the people in my State, whenever a politician or a machine seeks to push them around, will stand up and resolutely tell them to go to hell, because they do not have to do it. [Applause.]

The voters will enforce this bill. That is the answer. My good friend from Alabama yesterday talked at great length about how the machines will dominate and administer this bill. The gentleman from Texas echoed the same sentiment today. But I am satisfied that if this goes on the statute book the American voter who will be illegally assessed in contravention to the spirit of the bill, or whose freedom of choice in elections is the subject of interference by a political boss, will stand squarely behind his statutory rights and will take care of the enforcement of the bill. That is the answer to the very ingenious but altogether inconclusive argument that has been advanced here today by the gentleman from Texas. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. VREELAND].

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Chairman, it is most difficult to get up before this Committee and follow the eminent chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary and take perhaps the opposite viewpoint to him on some of the points involved in this bill. During the year I have been on that committee I have learned to love and respect our chairman and to realize that his cool judgment and cool thinking are sometimes best in the long run; but even at that good lawyers sometimes disagree.

Some question has been raised on the part of certain Members of the House as to just where I stand on this particular bill. I think I owe it to myself and to those who have raised the question to have it straight in the minds of those who do question the fact that I have always been for the principles of this bill and am now for the bill. I have never been against it. As a member of the Judiciary Committee, I have tried at all times to respect the rules of the committee with reference to not revealing that which happens in executive session. Unfortunately some word has gotten out, and I have been criticized in the public press about statements with reference to some action taken in the committee. As long as someone else has perhaps violated that rule, may I tell you now why I voted as I did on some of the procedure in committee?

As this bill came from the Senate, after consideration by that body, there was a section in the bill I want to read to you, if I may.

Section 12 of the Senate bill provided that—

No officer or employee of any State or local agency who exercises any function in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States.

Let us consider that wording for a minute:

No officer or employee of any State or local agency who exercises any function in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States.

Let us take an exaggerated example of that situation. A police officer walking down the street sees a stone fall into a W. P. A. ditch, and to keep it from hitting a man on the head he siezes that stone and puts it on the bank. Now, that officer would come within the purview of this law because he is exercising a function in connection with an activity. In my opinion, that wording was carrying the Federal Government and the control of Washington too far down into municipalities and States.

As a matter of fact, the Federal Government has entirely too much control at the present time over our local situation. But the Judiciary Committee has amended the bill and it was not until the committee amended it I felt the bill should be reported to the House. Incidentally I was a member of the subcommittee which considered the bill and studied it. I voted to report it with amendments to the full committee and I voted to report it to the House. Section 12 of the bill now reads, including an amendment offered by my good friend the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE]:

No officer or employee of any State or local agency whose principal employment is in connection with.

Mr. HOBBS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VREELAND. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBBS. May I ask the gentleman if section 2 does not substantially read, with regard to administrative employees of a county or municipality, just as section 12 read before the Hancock or Gwynne amendment?

Mr. VREELAND. The gentleman is correct. May I paint the picture of a situation that happened in a community close to mine just prior to an election where the administrator of a particular department stood at the door and told the employees that unless they contributed their 10 percent to the party then in power some heads would be rolling in the dust. That is the situation that has to be cleared up, and if the States cannot clear it up, so far as Federal elections are concerned, it is our job down here to do it.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK].

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, it is with great reluctance that I find myself today opposing my distinguished and beloved friend from Texas, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, and my friend from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], as well as my able colleague from Georgia [Mr. GIBBS], who is a member of this distinguished committee; but it seems to me the philosophy expounded here by the gentlemen from Alabama and Texas is the philosophy of locking the barn door after the horse has been stolen.

In my judgment, this bill does not extend the power of the Federal Government in the States. On the contrary and to the opposite, in my judgment, it will prevent a thing that is now entirely possible, and in some cases has happened; that is, the ordering of the conduct of State agencies by Federal bureaus in Washington because they have control of the funds.

We have heard a great deal of talk this afternoon about the people and the Government. Who is the Government and who are the people? There are 4,500,000 people in the United States who hold public positions, local, county, State, and Federal. There are 130,000,000 people who pay the bill and do not have any such jobs. This bill is designed to protect the 130,000,000 people from those who would manipulate the 4,500,000 for the purpose of controlling the Government in the local communities, in the States, and in this Nation. That is the purpose of the bill and that will be the effect of the bill. It will not give the bureaucrats in Washington, if you want to call them that, any authority which they do not have today. I make this statement, may I say to you, not on the basis of any theory, because my practical experience in contact with governmental units encompasses not only the legislative, the judicial, and the administrative branches of the Government, but includes service in city, county, and State and Federal Governments during a period of 33 years. I know what Government is. I know what politics is. I know how the game is played. I know that as long as anybody can control the job of an employee he is going to tell him how to vote, and he does tell him how to vote. This bill is designed to stop that practice. It is designed to protect the employees of the States, the counties, and the cities in their right to exercise their ballot as they please without anybody being able to tell them how to do it. That is why I am supporting this legislation.

I say to you in all frankness that I would prefer to see the method different. I would prefer to see the merit system established in local government so that employees could be protected in that way rather than through the method which this bill proposes. But I am going to take the opportunity that is at hand.

May I say to you that this is not a precedent, as the gentleman from Texas said it was, because in the Social Security Act Congress said to the State agencies set up to comply with that act, "You must select your employees under a merit system." Therefore, we have the precedent for it. Any of us who have dealt with these agencies where Federal grants are made to the States know that even the Supreme Court of the United States has upheld the right of the Federal Government, when it gives money to a State, to tell that State how to spend it, and they do it every day in every one of the agencies where the Federal Government grants money to State agencies. The Federal Government may tell them how they may spend it.

I remember in 1929, when I was a member of the Georgia Legislature, a committee of which I was a member was considering the conduct of the agricultural department of the State university. It developed that the Federal Government had made them change some professors in that college and reassign them, and change the curriculum. This was accomplished by threats to hold up the Federal funds provided by an act of Congress. Precedent? Why, the precedent was started way back in the early days of the service of my distinguished friend the gentleman from Texas, and that is the point where the argument ought to have been made. We are trying here to prevent these agencies from controlling the vote of the State and local employees in our States. We are trying to prevent anybody from controlling them and to make them free. That is why I support this legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK].

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, this bill will do more to break down the two-party system in the United States than any act we could design for that purpose. In my judgment, the weakness of our democracy lies in the fact that by custom and through the rules of Congress this two-party system is perpetuated. If this bill will do what I think it will, I am most enthusiastically for it. Since I have confidence that the result will verify my prediction, I will vote for it.

Under this two-party system those in power cannot build a strong organization without the political aid of those who hold political positions under the Government. It is a natural thing for those holding jobs to speak and influence the body of voters to retain in power the party responsible for their position. Furthermore, employees in the Government, no matter which party is responsible for their appointment, become naturally interested in serving the people and interested, therefore, in the program of their party. An employee who is not interested in his work, and his party, and its aims and purposes cannot be found in any democracy. These employees make up a formidable array in political campaigns. Under this bill these employees will not dare venture out in the political arena to defend what they believe to be for the best interests of the country. The party in power, therefore, is much more liable to defeat.

Under our two-party system, the party out of power always tries to get in, and it cannot be said that they do not have also a formidable array of office seekers who are always willing to fight desperately to get into office. They know that under this system they will get all the "gravy" if their party wins. Under this bill these "outs" when "in" will likewise be eliminated from any further political activity, and the party to which they belong will be much more easily defeated.

As long as we cling to this two-party system, this proposal should become a law and through it the people who do the voting will be aided materially in at least changing parties often. When it becomes easy to remove a party, the voters themselves will no doubt try to build a party which is pledged to serve the people. Such a party can be built then because no party has any chance to perpetuate itself through the political influence of officeholders of the party in power, and the second party, which is out of power and wants to get in power, will meet the same fate as its predecessor. In this way the voters may have an opportunity to build something different along party lines than to be compelled to follow the dictates of one or the other of the two great parties.

The voters have very little to say what candidates shall be selected by political conventions. Conventions can be steam-rollered, ballyhooed by artificial public opinion, and when the two conventions are over, the people, if they vote at all, are compelled to take one or the other of the candidates named in a political convention.

We see how this two-party system works here in Congress when this Congress gets into action. Is there any fundamental difference between many Republicans of the East and some Democrats from the South? They vote exactly alike. Is there any fundamental difference in the views which I hold and the views held by many Democrats? We vote exactly alike on all matters of importance. Yet when the election comes around I am supposed to defeat, or at least assist in defeating, the gentleman from Montana, who holds views similar to my own, merely because he is a Democrat. I must do this as a Republican, even though I aid in electing a Republican who is diametrically opposed to every political view I have. This is what your two-party system does. Why should the people not have the right to vote for men and principles instead of blindly voting along strict two-party lines?

I will venture this prediction, that until the voters will vote for men and principles, regardless of party lines, they will never experience any government for which they are directly responsible. The party bosses will feed us the candidates, and we can vote for one or the other of their selection or not vote at all. That is not democracy. If this bill passes, it will be a step in the right direction. The people may be able to break up this tight-laced two-party system and have a voice in not only independent voting but in the selection of candidates of their own choice. For that reason, Mr. Chairman, I will vote for the bill now before the Committee. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDS].

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Chairman, the war in Europe, which may conceivably disorganize the whole world, has made a vivid and indelible impression upon the American people. They are taking stock and want to know what we have done to prevent the tragedy of Europe engulfing this country. They have seen the insatiable ambition of dictators, coupled with military power perfected to the last degree, run roughshod over practically every democratic nation in Europe. They have seen the peaceful dreams of the idealist thrown into the scrap heap and the immortal doctrine of the Prince of Peace held up to be scoffed at. They have witnessed the downfall of the peaceful neighbor and have seen his lands overrun by the pirate armed to the teeth. They have seen nations lulled into a false sense of security by promises, later only to be broken, and peace treaties signed only to be proved scraps of paper. They have felt in their own hearts the agony of the millions of people driven from the homes of their birth and from the acres where their ancestors have lived for centuries. They have seen the peaceful and unprepared nation go down to ignominious defeat at the hands of the nation prepared with every known terrible instrument of modern warfare.

Is it any wonder, then, that the American people are demanding that Congress stay in session until every necessary step has been taken, until definite plans have been outlined to the end that what has happened to the downtrodden in Europe will not happen here. Our country may in a few months be the last citadel of liberty in the world, and it is my solemn belief that Congress should stay in session and will stay in session as long as there is anything left undone in our common desire to prepare this country against assault from without or treason from within. We have had our lesson, and I trust there is no one here willing to jeopardize the future welfare of this country by inaction now, or who is so blind as to not profit by what we see around us.

The ideal, the true ideal, of a democratic country and a democratic people is peace. The Christian ideal is peace. Though in the early history of this country she may have been guilty of acts of aggression of which we are not now proud, for almost a hundred years our policy has been founded on respect for the rights of all peoples. Never during this time have we refused to arbitrate our differences with any nation. Never have we espoused the cause of force and aggression. Never have we placed brute force above ideals of humanity. But there comes times in the affairs of men and nations when a definite stand must be taken, when the world must know that we are willing to fight and intend to fight for the ideals we believe in. Holy Writ teaches us:

> If any provide not for his own, more especially those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel.

If there was anything that impressed the American soldier of the last World War more than the horrors of war itself and the utter folly of war, it was that flesh and blood alone, no matter how brave or how patriotic, cannot stand up against the prepared soldier and the prepared army provided with all modern means of warfare and destruction. Since I first came to Congress I have preached preparedness, not by choice but from necessity. I have addressed this House on more than one occasion on this subject. I believed then in preparedness, I believe in it now, and I will continue to advocate a strong national-defense system for this country until this world becomes imbued enough with Christian ideals to settle differences around the counsel table; and I fervently hope that this dream of universal peace and good will will not forever remain in the far horizon, but will come to make its home among the children of men. Then, and then only, can we beat our swords into plowshares. Then, and then only, will there be wars no more.

I long ago learned that if a bully is running rampant on the street that he will never cease his bullying until someone calls his number. To successfully call his number he must be met at his own game, and that game is not played under the rules of chivalry. There have been times when bandits and gangsters have disorganized whole communities in our own Nation. It would have been folly for our law-enforcing officers to go out to meet and capture them with their bare fists. To suppress them it was necessary to meet bullets with bullets, knife with knife, and machine gun with machine gun. It is only in this way that law and order can be preserved within a country, and it is only in this way that a peaceful nation can demand respect of those who rule by force and international lawlessness.

But, Mr. Chairman, we owe one thing to Hitler—even with all the widows and orphans he has made and all the tears that have been shed for his glory. Hitler and his army chiefs have shown us what it takes to win a war in this day of mechanization and machinery. If we had made all of the appropriations that we are now called upon to make, in the name of national defense 2 or 3 years ago, it is entirely possible, in the light of recent events, that we would have had to scrap them all and begin over again now. Just as the battle between the Merrimac and the Monitor revolutionized sea warfare and overnight scrapped the usefulness of wooden ships, so have the ruthless invasions of Hitler shown that all old concepts of military organization, equipment, and training must go by the board. We have had conclusive evidence that just as machinery in our ordinary day life here in America has largely supplanted manpower, just as one machine in peacetime is now doing what 25 men used to do, 1 tank or 1 airplane is filling the place of a hundred or a thousand soldiers on the battlefront.

This is no time to get hysterical; there is no cause to become panicky; this is the occasion for cool deliberate reasoning and cool deliberate planning to meet the happenings of a world gone mad. It is just hard common sense that this country should prepare, not for war but to preserve peace for our country. In the world of today, the word of the United States will be heeded only in proportion to our evident ability to back up our words and warnings with force. If my two sons are needed by their country in future wars, I owe it to them and the thousands of other mothers' sons not to send them out to the battlefield with naked hands.

Now, let us look over what has been done lately for our national defense; let us consider the matter without partisanship or political rancor. Most Democrats and Republicans here love this country and will fight for it, but, gentlemen, you will remember that only 2 or 3 years ago, when preparedness plans were advanced before this Congress, many Republican brethren and a few Democrats charged those of us who supported these plans with warmongering. Remember, too, that Hitler has accused every democratic nation in Europe, before he overran them, of being warmongers whenever they expressed any fear of him or showed any intention of preparing themselves against him. The warmonger accusation is the strongest form of propaganda used by those who do not want to see an anticipated victim prepare to defend himself.

Let us take stock; let us see how our Army, Navy, and air force stack up today. Figures will show that we are not so weak now, and Providence gave us the great oceans as protection while we grow strong. Before making this speech, I consulted many experts on the subject here, from the War Department and the Navy Department.

NAVY

It is my considered judgment that we have the most efficient and powerful Navy in the world today, and the distinguished chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] has the same opinion. Our Navy far exceeds anything that Germany, Italy, France, or Japan have. It is as strong and as powerful as Great Britain's Navy now, even though we may not have quite so many small units. President Roosevelt has been accused on some sides of being responsible for the fact that we are not prepared in every department of the defense arms of our Government. But allow me to call to your attention that when President Roosevelt was inaugurated as President in 1933 he began then, and has never ceased since, to emphasize to the Congress and the American people that a strong Navy is essential to our welfare. Since 1933 the Navy has been built up step by step until we can hold our own with any in the world. It must be remembered that during President Hoover's 4 years in the White House, not one single battleship was launched by the American Navy. It will be remembered that during President Harding's administration, as a result of the Washington conference, we scrapped some of the best ships we had in the name of peace, and built none, while some other nations were scrapping only blueprints. In 1933 we had sunk to the rating of a second-rate naval power; today we are the strongest in the world. Since 1933 this administration has constructed a total of 111 ships, divided into the following categories: Three airplane carriers, 11 cruisers, 26 submarines, 7 auxiliary ships, 62 destroyers, and 2 gunboats. Further, the Navy has today 68 additional units under construction, as per authorization by Congress in 1934 and 1938. Here are the units being laid now under the authorization: Battleships, 6 of 35,000 tons; 2 of 45,000 tons—it takes 4 years to build a great battleship, and the new ones mentioned should be completed within the next 2 years; two of them are about three-fourths completed now—one airplane carrier, 20,000 tons; 6 cruisers, from 6,000 to 10,000 tons each; 26 destroyers, ranging from 1,600 to 1,800 tons each; 14 submarines, 1,500 tons; and 12 auxiliary craft.

Let us remember, too, that during this Congress, funds were appropriated to cover past authorization for the building of the following naval units: 2 battleships, 1 aircraft carrier, 2 cruisers, 8 destroyers, 60 submarines, and 5 auxiliary ships. These have been laid down in recent weeks, but real work has hardly commenced. In the light of events in Europe, this Congress has also decided to authorize 3 additional aircraft carriers of 24,000 tons each and from 6 to 10 cruisers of varying tonnage; and in addition to that, 21,000 tons for submarines.

A little figuring, therefore, will show that the Navy now has a total of 106 ships, either under construction or authorized, in addition to the units already prepared to go to the battle lines.

It is further understood that upon the advice of Admiral Stark, Chief of Naval Operations, the President and Secretary of the Navy will request of Congress authorization to increase our fleet an additional 70 percent. The fall of the democratic nations on the other side of the Atlantic makes it imperative that we prepare ourselves to defend the Atlantic alone against all comers. It can be seen that if we place the bulk of our fleet in the Atlantic, we lay ourselves wide open to possible enemies in the Pacific, and Japan, by recent actions and utterances, is gradually convincing the American people that she is a potential enemy. It may, therefore, become necessary for us to have a gigantic fleet in both the Atlantic and the Pacific. If this program is completed, we will then be able to take on any power or any combination of powers that may come against us. Our natural line of defense in the Pacific Ocean extends from Alaska to the Aleutian Islands, Hawaii, and Samoa Islands to the Panama Canal. Our naval defense stations in that circle are being provided with air bases and sufficient up-to-date antiaircraft equipment. On the Atlantic coast, navy yards are being expanded and coast antiaircraft defenses improved. On the coast of Puerto Rico is now being built one of the strongest naval bases in the world. That island, along with our other Caribbean possessions, is essential to the defense of the Panama Canal, which is the life line of our commerce. In addition to that, the Navy's job is to see that no aggressor nation gains a footing by force on South American or Central American soil.

The Navy also has between 2,500 and 3,000 up-to-date planes in service in its air branch. These planes and the pilots to fly them are among the best in the world. Still we need 10,000 more up-to-date planes in the Navy and will have them shortly. The Navy is O. K. now.

ARMY

Our Regular Army today has an authorized enlistment of 285,000, though, under the volunteer system we have only reached about 250,000 enlistment. The authorized enlistment will necessarily be increased shortly to 400,000. It should be remembered that in this day of mechanized warfare 400,000 men will take the place of a million in the wars of a few years ago. A great many people seem to think that when we speak of our Army we only refer to the Regular Army. The Regular Army itself is backed up by the National Guard, the Reserve officers, the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and the Citizens' Military Training Corps.

Our National Guard is made up of about 250,000 enlisted men and officers. We have 120,000 Reserve officers now, and we have many more in training under the R. O. T. C. system. We have 5,500 military planes of all types; some of them are obsolete now.

As compared to the figures given, it might be well to remember that at the beginning of the World War our Regular Army hardly consisted of more than 80,000 men and officers. Our National Guard had 8,323 commissioned officers and 119,087 enlisted men. The Army only had 13 experimental airplanes at that time. We had practically no guns and artillery. The total expenditures for military purposes for the year 1914 was $114,500,814.39.

It must be never lost sight of that wars these days require the finest type of machinery of destruction that can be built, and this country is blessed in that we are the most highly developed industrialized country in the world. We have inventive genius, industrial genius, administrative genius, and the most intelligent labor in the world. No other nation can compete with us in mechanical equipment and progressive manufacturing methods. This is the only nation in the world that could within a few months be geared up to mass production of any known instrument or machine. This Congress, realizing this, has already provided for $600,000,000 to be spent for the purchase of the finest automatic rifles, armored tanks, motorized artillery, ammunition, and other up-to-date instruments of war. Further enactment of laws for Army expansion are to follow. Only this morning the President requested of Congress an additional authorization and appropriation of over $4,000,000,000 to complete and sustain our Military Establishment in the future. The request will no doubt be granted.

Our Army staff seems to reaize that there must be reorganization of our land forces from the ground up. Gen. George C. Marshall, Chief of Staff, has already begun organization of a new Army corps, patterned after Germany's Panzer mechanized divisions. The corps will consist of two armored divisions totaling 18,000 men, 1,400 tanks, 13,000 semiautomatic rifles, and 600 pieces of artillery. This new corps will be a model for others to come later.

Even though fully realizing that this is a machine age for both war and peace, we must realize, too, that behind it all must be trained up-to-date, intelligent manpower. War today may not need so many men, but those selected must be the best. If we now need an Army largely made up of mechanized units, we also need an Army of intelligent and trained mechanics to run it.

C. C. C. MILITARY TRAINING

Realizing that the time could come when we would need the youth of our country to defend us from aggression, I introduced a bill here on February 1, 1939, which would provide 1 hour a day training in military tactics and drill for the boys in our C. C. C. camps. I have spoken on the floor of the House on more than one occasion in favor of this bill, and I am still of the honest opinion that the bill should be passed. I have never yet been able to fully understand why my bill, in the hearings before the committee, was strenuously opposed by the War Department and the Director of the C. C. C. I have not given up the fight yet.

Mr. Chairman, I am fully aware that the C. C. C. set-up is not an ideal set-up for the military training of the youth of our country. Under ordinary circumstances and conditions it might not be wise to use this great organization for that purpose. I would not destroy for anything in the world the great peacetime achievements of the C. C. C., but I assert here and now that the C. C. C. with its enrollees receiving no military training is evidence of a peace-loving nation gone to sleep. During the past 7 years, over 2,000,000 of our young men have been enrolled in C. C. C. camps. The cost to the Government per enrollee is $1,000 per year. The annual cost per soldier in the Regular Army averages only $853.33. The C. C. C. camp enrollees, other than war veterans, range between 17 and 23 years of age. These boys are within the ages to be called first to the service in case of our involvement in war. Why not give them and the country the advantage of this training? We now have approximately 275,000 enrollees in our C. C. C. camps. The average length of service in the C. C. C. is 10 months. If we had given these boys 1 hour military training per day during their service, we would have had a nucleus of over 2,000,000 young men already partly trained in the rudiments of warfare. Every soldier must be first trained in ordinary tactics and drill before he is ready for assignment to a specialized branch of the service, such as artillery, air force, tank service, and so forth. We would thus have saved this Government over $2,000,000,000 preliminary training costs in case we become involved in war.

I do not mean that the original purposes of the C. C. C. must be abandoned—these camps have done a great work in soil conservation, forestry, and national and State parks. This work should continue to be their primary duty, and the 1 hour per day military training which my bill suggests would not detract one whit from the work they are now doing. In fact, the increased efficiency of the enrollees, because of this limited military training and the added discipline it would bring, would enhance the value and the volume of his work in the conservation field. I do propose that the camps should serve a twofold purpose—one, conservation; the other, a link in our national defense system.

It must be remembered, too, that this military training for C. C. C. enrollees would not cost our sorely harassed taxpayers an additional dollar. The camps are already there, the uniforms are there, the food is there, the Reserve officers to train them are there, and the physically fit manhood of our country is there. All that will still be needed are the rifles, and the United States Army now has enough obsolete military rifles to take care of that need.

GENERALS AND ADMIRALS

One of the great obstacles France and England faced in their plans to prepare for modern warfare was some of the very generals and admirals they depended upon to carry out these defense plans. These officers were trained for old-fashioned warfare, they were wedded to old principles and obsolete tactics; they were too conservative and could not adjust themselves to this day. The admiral who still contends that only the battleship makes a great Navy is, himself, obsolete; the general who still contends that infantry alone is the backbone of the Army has qualified himself only for retirement.

It remains to be seen whether our own admirals and generals have become too wedded to Navy and Army tradition to face facts as they are today. Unless they present evidence to the contrary, they should be relegated to the trash heap along with their fossilized ideas. In fairness, though, I should say that General Marshall, Chief of Army Staff, General Arnold, and Admiral Stark, Chief of our Navy, have shown that they are fully awake to the potentialities of modern warfare and the needs of modern defense.

AIR POWER

Air power is the greatest new development of this war. Hitler's achievements can be traced more to predominant air power than to anything else. Without a great number of fighter and bomber airplanes, our great Navy and our growing Army will be practically useless. We have now about 3,200 up-to-date flying planes with our naval force and about 2,500 with our Army. Industry in our country is now manufacturing planes at the rate of 700 per month. Before the end of 1940, this production should amount to at least 1,200 per month. Construction expansion is going on in practically every plant in the country. Plants not up-to-date are being reequipped with tools and machinery. Industrial genius in our country, and there is none better anywhere, has set its shoulders to the wheel, and there need be no fear that we are not definitely on the road to mass production of this essential branch of our national-defense program. Henry Ford, General Motors, Packard, Chrysler, and other automobile, airplane, and motor-manufacturing concerns have offered their services and have been awarded contracts by the Government. The goal of 50,000 planes set by President Roosevelt is not an idle dream. To man these planes we must have experienced pilots and mechanics. The Army Air Corps and the Naval Air Corps and the Civil Aeronautics Commission have given the full-speed-ahead sign for the selection and training of these men. Summing it all up, I am convinced that no nation in the world could attack the immediate shores of this country with success even now. With what has been done and with what will be done, I have no doubt that we will in the near future be adequately armed on land, on sea, and in the air. We have in the White House and at the head of the State Department two men who had the vision and the courage months, even years, ago to warn this country and the American people that we must be prepared if we are to retain our liberties and demand respect from potential foes. The wishes, the dreams, and the plans of a democracy are always based on peace. This is as it should be. But the tragedy of it all is that democracies often do not see danger from outside powers until the danger is upon them. Then it is too late. We have learned our lesson from Austria, Norway, Denmark, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Holland, and Belgium. They waited until it was too late, and today they are under the heel of the conqueror. The rights of men and the liberties of the individual citizen are things now spoken of in Europe only in a hushed voice. The dead on a hundred fields of battle in Europe cry aloud to us, "Prepare!" The little child in Belgium beating on its dead mother's breast cries to us, "Prepare!" The echo from every hill and vale in France pleads with us, "Prepare!" England, with all her faults, still the cradle of liberty, with her back to the wall and her children and women dying on every hand, cries to us, "Prepare!" We must heed these warnings.

No; we cannot be blamed that England and France and the others were not prepared. We are not responsible for their errors and faults, but if we have learned our lesson we will heed their warning now. There is little that we can do for them, because the very things they need and want we have not. They still have money, they still have men, and still billions of gold and credit in this country to buy supplies and machinery of war. We are now providing them with every airplane and all other military equipment that we can possibly spare. It may not turn the tide, but in letting them have this equipment we are not only helping them in their battle against aggression, but also are helping ourselves by development of our defense machinery and the gaining of time in which we can get ready.

MONROE DOCTRINE

Mr. Chairman, Congress recently reasserted the Monroe Doctrine, by almost unanimous vote. By that reassertion, we have pledged ourselves to keep dictators and nations hostile to the democratic form of government out of the Western Hemisphere. We have added more coastline to be defended, more nations to be protected, and more oceans to be patroled. There should be full realization here and everywhere that we intend to fight if necessary to preserve freedom for this country and for this hemisphere. President Monroe announced this doctrine to the world over 12 decades ago. It was respected then by other nations, though we were weak then. We demand that it be respected now because we are strong—strong not only in the worldly sense, but in the righteousness of our cause as well. If we do not want to see Trojan horses in the United States, we must keep them out of this hemisphere.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Ladies and gentlemen of the House, as a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, I doubly feel the weight of responsibility resting on the shoulders of all Members of Congress today. It is through this Committee that any resolution or declaration of war must come. I trust that in the trying days ahead I may never be called upon to vote to send our boys to the horrors of the battlefield; but I am firmly convinced that, if we really intend to prevent war, we must be strong enough to demand and preserve peace, particularly in this hemisphere.

ENEMIES WITHIN

Before closing, allow me to comment briefly on one other great danger to our beloved country. For years and years we have opened our hospitable shores to immigrants from all over the world. They have come here by the thousands and by the millions. They have found freedom and happiness and sustenance here. Many have become good citizens and we are proud of them. But literally thousands of them have proven that they came here to get what they could and give nothing. They accept benefits but assume no responsibility. Our flag is a dirty rag to them. We now have about 4,000,000 aliens in this country. From these come the potential "fifth columnists"; they will be the first to attempt to betray this country.

Congress has been gradually tightening up on our immigration laws, but they are not tight enough yet. The law recently passed requiring aliens to be registered and fingerprinted is a good start. The recent placing of immigration administration under the Department of Justice was a good move.

Hitler, to win his victories, has counted mainly on two factors—overwhelming instruments of war and treason in the camp of his victims. Treason can come from only those who do not love and revere the flag they live under. So we must prepare against enemies within and without. It is a big job, but we can do it. We are on the road now. Our Army, Navy, and air force must be built up, but the job should not be done hysterically or spasmodically. Our plans should be sound, our purposes definite, our goal clear. When we reach that goal we must not go to sleep again, for in these trying times as never before eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that each Member may have 5 legislative days in which to extend his remarks in the RECORD on this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Texas that that request must be made in the House.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I want to reemphasize a few words spoken by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH] on yesterday:

> Each party must, of course, be afforded equal opportunity to live and equal opportunity to win elections. The Hatch measure, first and last, seeks only to protect equality of opportunity for the party out of power by preventing the party in power from doing what no decent party should do but which practice allows, using public money for partisan effect.

I think that is important, because it seems to acknowledge that the party in power did what no decent party should have done. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH] is honest, and he cannot stand for what the investigations disclosed.

Further on he says:

> Let us back up our deepest patriotism, not our shallowest partisanship, in the effort afforded by this rule to win through to the higher level of politics: The sportsmanship of losing graciously and of winning justly.

I thank the gentleman for those words. I think they were well chosen. All the ridicule which the gentleman from Alabama tried to pour upon him because of his great command of language could not lessen the effectiveness of those carefully selected words of condemnation and the persuasive appeal. It was, indeed, an acknowledgment of the pernicious activities of his own party in power.

I want to repeat what others have called to mind, that we do not live in Alabama or other States where we might be elected by perhaps about 3,000 votes. They fight only among themselves and neither faction perhaps has the advantages of full control of funds such as have been used by Democrats against Republicans so shamelessly in other States.

This morning I listened to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] again talk about three United States Senators sent here by the Power Trust, according to his viewpoint. He has told the story often.

As I have said before, some day I may take the time to tell you about Boston Democrats. I might tell you about New Orleans Democrats and about Kansas City Democrats, and I could tell about so many of them that the few Republicans they can find to parade before us will be as nothing compared with the great numbers of Democrats tarred with so-called pernicious political activity.

I regret that I cannot follow the chairman of this committee. Fundamentally, he is probably right; but his Democratic Party has failed, miserably failed. Conditions brought about by his party are so thoroughly bad that they make me vote for this bill in spite of my desire to agree with him on fundamentals. During the last 7 years I have watched him vote for many measures that do not square with his fundamentals. Democracy ought to be what it apparently is not. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 9 minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, it is now after 3 o'clock. This matter has been thoroughly debated for 2 days. I do not believe there is much anybody can add to the general debate. It is expected to complete this bill and vote on it tonight. The time one takes in general debate, therefore, requires us to remain here just that much longer tonight. I expressed my views at the beginning of the debate and am not going to take any more time, nor am I going to yield back any time. Let us read the bill for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired; all time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. It shall be unlawful for (1) any person employed in any administrative position by the United States, or by any department, independent agency, or other agency of the United States (including any corporation controlled by the United States or any agency thereof, and any corporation all of the capital stock of which is owned by the United States or any agency thereof), or (2) any person employed in any administrative position by any State, by any political subdivision or municipality of any State, or by any agency of any State or any of its political subdivisions or municipalities (including any corporation controlled by any State or by any such political subdivision, municipality, or agency, and any corporation all of the capital stock of which is owned by any State or by any such political subdivision, municipality, or agency), in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States, or by any such department, independent agency, or other agency of the United States, to use his official authority for the purpose of interfering with, or affecting, the election or the nomination of any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, Member of the House of Representatives, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner from any Territory or insular possession."

With the following committee amendment:

"That section 2 of the act entitled 'An act to prevent pernicious political activities,' approved August 2, 1939, is amended to read as follows:

" 'SEC. 2. It shall be unlawful for (1) any person employed in any administrative position by the United States, or by any department, independent agency, or other agency of the United States (including any corporation controlled by the United States or any agency thereof, and any corporation all of the capital stock of which is owned by the United States or any agency thereof), or (2) any person employed in any administrative position by any State, by any political subdivision or municipality of any State, or by any agency of any State or any of its political subdivisions or municipalities (including any corporation controlled by any State or by any such political subdivision, municipality, or agency, and any corporation all of the capital stock of which is owned by any State or by any such political subdivision, municipality, or agency), in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States, or by any such department, independent agency, or other agency of the United States, to use his official authority for the purpose of interfering with, or affecting, the election or the nomination of any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, Member of the House of Representatives, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner from any Territory or insular possession.'

"SEC. 2. The third sentence of section 9 (a) of such act of August 2, 1939, is amended to read as follows: 'All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they may choose and to express their opinions on all political subjects and candidates.'

"SEC. 3. Section 10 of such act of August 2, 1939, is amended to read as follows:

" 'SEC. 10. The provisions of this act shall be in addition to and not in substitution for any other provision of law.'

"SEC. 4. Such act of August 2, 1939, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

" 'SEC. 12. (a) No officer or employee of any State or local agency whose principal employment is in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States or by any Federal agency shall (1) use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or a nomination for office, or affecting the result thereof, or (2) directly or indirectly coerce, attempt to coerce, command, or advise any other such officer or employee to pay, lend, or contribute any part of his salary or compensation or anything else of value to any party, committee, organization, agency, or person for political purposes. No such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns. All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they may choose and to express their opinions on all political subjects and candidates. For the purposes of the second sentence of this subsection, the term "officer or employee" shall not be construed to include (1) the Governor or the Lieutenant Governor of any State or any person who is authorized by law to act as Governor, or the mayor of any city; (2) duly elected heads of executive departments of any State or municipality who are not classified under a State or municipal merit or civil-service system; (3) officers holding elective offices.

" '(b) If any Federal agency charged with the duty of making any loan or grant of funds of the United States for use in any activity by any officer or employee to whom the provisions of subsection (a) are applicable has reason to believe that any such officer or employee has violated the provisions of such subsection, it shall make a report with respect thereto to the United States Civil Service Commission (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission"). Upon the receipt of any such report, or upon the receipt of any other information which seems to the Commission to warrant an investigation, the Commission shall fix a time and place for a hearing, and shall by registered mail send to the officer or employee charged with the violation and to the State or local agency employing such officer or employee a notice setting forth a summary of the alleged violation and the time and place of such hearing. At such hearing (which shall be not earlier than 10 days after the mailing of such notice) either the officer or employee or the State or local agency, or both, may appear with counsel and be heard. After such hearing, the Commission shall determine whether any violation of such subsection has occurred and whether such violation, if any, warrants the removal of the officer or employee by whom it was committed from his office or employment, and shall by registered mail notify such officer or employee and the appropriate State or local agency of such determination. If in any case the Commission finds that such officer or employee has not been removed from his office or employment within 30 days after notice of a determination by the Commission that such violation warrants his removal, or that he has been so removed and has subsequently (within a period of 18 months) been appointed to any office or employment in any State or local agency in such State, the Commission shall make and certify to the appropriate Federal agency an order requiring it to withhold from its loans or grants to the State or local agency to which such notification was given an amount equal to 2 years' compensation at the rate such officer or employee was receiving at the time of such violation; except that in any case of such a subsequent appointment to a position in another State or local agency which receives loans or grants from any Federal agency, such order shall require the withholding of such amount from such other State or local agency: Provided, That in no event shall the Commission require any amount to be withheld from any loan or grant pledged by a State or local agency as security for its bonds or notes if the withholding of such amount would jeopardize the payment of the principal or interest on such bonds or notes. Notice of any such order shall be sent by registered mail to the State or local agency from which such amount is ordered to be withheld. The Federal agency to which such order is certified shall, after such order becomes final, withhold such amount in accordance with the terms of such order. Except as provided in subsection (c), any determination or order of the Commission shall become final upon the expiration of 30 days after the mailing of notice of such determination or order.

" '(c) Any party aggrieved by any determination or order of the Commission under subsection (b) may, within 30 days after the mailing of notice of such determination or order, institute proceedings for the review thereof by filing a written petition in the district court of the United States for the district in which such officer or employee resides; but the commencement of such proceedings shall not operate as a stay of such determination or order unless (1) it is specifically so ordered by the court, and (2) such officer or employee is suspended from his office or employment during the pendency of such proceedings. A copy of such petition shall forthwith be served upon the Commission, and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record upon which the determination or the order complained of was made. The review by the court shall be on the record entire, including all of the evidence taken on the hearing, and the court shall affirm the determination and order of the Commission if, in the opinion of the court, they are supported by the preponderance of the evidence; if, in the opinion of the court, any such determination and order be not so supported, the court shall make such orders and render such judgment as the ends of justice may require: Provided, That any person at the time of filing his petition for review, may demand a trial by jury, and in any such event trial by jury shall be granted, and such trial shall be de novo. If application is made to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and it is shown to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence may materially affect the result of the proceedings and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, the court may direct such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Commission may modify its findings of fact or its determination or order by reason of the additional evidence so taken and shall file with the court such modified findings, determination, or order, and any such modified findings of fact, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. The court shall affirm the Commission's determination or order, or its modified determination or order, if the court determines that the same is in accordance with law. If the court determines that any such determination or order, or modified determination or order, is not in accordance with law, the court shall remand the proceeding to the Commission with directions either to make such determination or order as the court shall determine to be in accordance with law or to take such further proceedings as, in the opinion of the court, the law requires. The judgment and decree of the court shall be final, subject to review by the appropriate circuit court of appeals as in other cases, and the judgment and decree of such circuit court of appeals shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States on certiorari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 28, secs. 346 and 347). If any provision of this subsection is held to be invalid as applied to any party with respect to any determination or order of the Commission, such determination or order shall thereupon become final and effective as to such party in the same manner as if such provision had not been enacted.

"'(d) The Commission is authorized to adopt such reasonable procedure and rules and regulations as it deems necessary to execute its functions under this section.

"'(e) The provisions of the first two sentences of subsection (a) of this section shall not apply to any officer or employee who exercises no functions in connection with any activity of a State or local agency which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States or by any Federal agency.

"'(f) For the purposes of this section—

"'(1) The term "State or local agency" means the executive branch of any State, or of any municipality or other political subdivision of such State, or any agency or department thereof.

"'(2) The term "Federal agency" includes any executive department, independent establishment, or other agency of the United States (except a member bank of the Federal Reserve System).

"'SEC. 13. (a) It is hereby declared to be a pernicious political activity, and it shall hereafter be unlawful, for any person, directly or indirectly, to make contributions in an aggregate amount in excess of $5,000, during any calendar year, or in connection with any campaign for nomination or election, to or on behalf of any candidate for an elective Federal office (including the offices of President of the United States and Presidential and Vice Presidential electors), or to or on behalf of any committee or other organization engaged in furthering, advancing, or advocating the nomination or election of any candidate for any such office or the success of any national political party.

" "The term "person" includes an individual, partnership, committee, association, corporation, and any other organization or group of persons. The term "contribution" includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution.

" 'It is further declared to be a pernicious political activity, and it shall hereafter be unlawful for any person, individual, partnership, committee, association, corporation, and any other organization or group of persons to purchase or buy any goods, commodities, advertising, or articles of any kind or description where the proceeds of such a purchase, or any portion thereof, shall directly or indirectly inure to the benefit of or for any candidate for an elective Federal office (including the offices of President of the United States, and Presidential and Vice Presidential electors) or any political committee or other political organization engaged in furthering, advancing, or advocating the nomination or election of any candidate for any such office or the success of any national political party.

" 'Any person who is engaged in a pernicious political activity in violation of any provision of this section shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years. In all cases of violations of this section by a partnership, committee, association, corporation, or other organization or group of persons, the officers, directors, or managing heads thereof who knowingly and willfully participate in such violation, shall be subject to punishment as herein provided.

"'(b) Nothing in this section shall be construed to permit the making of any contribution which is prohibited by any provision of law in force on the date this section takes effect. Nothing in this act shall be construed to alter or amend any provisions of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925, or any amendments thereto.

" 'SEC. 14. For the purposes of this act, persons employed in the government of the District of Columbia shall be deemed to be employed in the executive branch of the Government of the United States, except that for the purposes of the second sentence of section 9 (a) the Commissioners and the Recorder of Deeds of the District of Columbia shall not be deemed to be officers or employees.

" 'SEC. 15. The provisions of this act which prohibit persons to whom such provisions apply from taking any active part in political management or in political campaigns shall be deemed to prohibit the same activities on the part of such persons as the United States Civil Service Commission has heretofore determined are at the time this section takes effect prohibited on the part of employees in the classified civil service of the United States by the provisions of the civil-service rules prohibiting such employees from taking any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

" 'SEC. 16. Whenever the United States Civil Service Commission determines that, by reason of special or unusual circumstances which exist in any municipality or other political subdivision, in the immediate vicinity of the National Capital in the States of Maryland and Virginia or in municipalities the majority of whose voters are employed by the Government of the United States, it is in the domestic interest of persons to whom the provisions of this act are applicable, and who reside in such municipality or political subdivision, to permit such persons to take an active part in political management or in political campaigns involving such municipality or political subdivision, the Commission is authorized to promulgate regulations permitting such persons to take an active part in such political management and political campaigns to the extent the Commission deems to be in the domestic interest of such persons.

" 'SEC. 17. Nothing in the second sentence of section 12 (a) of this act shall be construed to prevent or prohibit any officer or employee of a State or local agency (as defined in section 12 (f)) from continuing, until the election in connection with which he was nominated, to be a bona fide candidate for election to any public office and from engaging in any political activity in furtherance of his candidacy for such public office, if (1) he was nominated before the date of the enactment of this act, and (2) upon his election to such public office he resigns from the office or employment in which he was employed prior to his election, in a State or local agency (as defined in section 12 (f)).

" 'SEC. 18. Nothing in the second sentence of section 9 (a) or in the second sentence of section 12 (a) of this act shall be construed to prevent or prohibit any person subject to the provisions of this act from engaging in any political activity (1) in connection with any election and the preceding campaign if none of the candidates is to be nominated or elected at such election as representing a party any of whose candidates for Presidential elector received votes in the last preceding election at which Presidential electors were selected, or (2) in connection with any question which is not specifically identified with any National or State political party. For the purposes of this section, questions relating to constitutional amendments, referendums, approval of municipal ordinances, and others of a similar character, shall not be deemed to be specifically identified with any National or State political party.

" 'SEC. 19. As used in this act, the term "State" means any State, Territory, or possession of the United States.'

"SEC. 5. (a) No person or firm entering into any contract with the United States or any department or agency thereof, either for the rendition of personal services or furnishing any material, supplies, or equipment to the United States or any department or agency thereof, or selling any land or building to the United States or any department or agency thereof, if payment for the performance of such contract or payment for such material, supplies, equipment, land, or building is to be made in whole or in part from funds appropriated by the Congress, shall, during the period of negotiation for, or performance under such contract or furnishing of material, supplies, equipment, land, or buildings, directly or indirectly, make any contribution of money or any other thing of value, or promise expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, to any political party, committee, or candidate for public office or to any person for any political purpose or use; nor shall any person knowingly solicit any such contribution from any such person or firm, for any such purpose during any such period. Any person who violates the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years.

"(b) Nothing in this section shall be construed to permit any action which is prohibited by any provision of law in force on the date this section takes effect.

"SEC. 6. Such act of August 2, 1939, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

" 'SEC. 20. No political committee shall receive contributions aggregating more than $3,000,000, or make expenditures aggregating more than $3,000,000 during any calendar year. For the purposes of this section, any contributions received and any expenditures made on behalf of any political committee with the knowledge and consent of the chairman or treasurer of such committee shall be deemed to be received or made by such committee. Any violation of this section by any political committee shall be deemed also to be a violation of this section by the chairman and the treasurer of such committee and by any other person responsible for such violation.'"

Mr. DEMPSEY (interrupting the reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does that mean that amendments may be offered to any part of the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's understanding is correct.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY and Mr. RANKIN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from New Mexico rise?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Mexico, a member of the committee. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEMPSEY to the committee amendment: Page 17, beginning with the word "and", in line 14, strike out down to and including "de novo", in line 23, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and shall extend to questions of fact and questions of law."

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment strikes out that provision providing for a jury trial for an employee accused of pernicious political activity. It gives the employee a hearing before the Civil Service Commission. If the Civil Service Commission finds him guilty he can appeal to the District Court on either the questions of law or the questions of fact.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield.

Mr. GWYNNE. I understand this amendment would put the bill in the shape it was when it left the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It will put the bill in the shape it was when it left the subcommittee, and also when it left the Senate.

Mr. GWYNNE. Furthermore, would not this amendment bring this procedure in line with the usual procedure throughout the Government service and in accordance with the provisions and the theory of the Logan-Walter Act?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; that is true.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As a matter of fact the amendment providing for a trial by jury was not put in by those who favored the bill, was it?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It was put in I think to destroy the bill, and that is what it would do if a jury trial were to be given to an employee not charged with a criminal offense punishable by fine or imprisonment. This amendment has to do with those employees who are charged only with violation of regulations governing their employment, not with a crime. Under my amendment they are given the same treatment that is accorded to civil-service employees, and if one is found guilty by the Civil Service Commission he may appeal to the district court on either the facts or the law. If the district court disagrees with the Commission, the matter, of course, is reversed.

The amendment I have offered is in keeping with the fundamental purpose of the original Hatch Act and the legislation now under consideration—that is, to safeguard and protect the public employee, whether Federal or State—the so-called little fellow—who receives remuneration from the Federal Treasury. It is intended to shield him from political persecution and at the same time to prevent, through that employee, a diversion of Federal Treasury funds into political campaign and machine channels.

This amendment leaves the employee amply safeguarded. It does differentiate, and properly, between those who are merely charged with violation of regulations under which they are employed and those who violate the criminal sections of this law. I never have heard the charge made that civil-service employees are discriminated against because no jury trial is provided in event of charges being brought against them. Why then should the non-civil-service employee be accorded a jury trial, unless he is charged with the commission of a crime? This bill gives him the right to a court review—something the civil-service employee does not have. Let us not be confused about this matter because of attempts to befog it.

Much has been said here about bureaucrats going into your district, or your State, or my State. When I first came to Washington I had some trouble with bureaucrats for about 6 months. I really could not understand why their attitude was as it was or, in some instances, still is. So I checked into the situation and I have had no trouble for a long period of time. What I do now is to find out what Member of the Senate or the House appointed the bureaucrat and I go to his office and work on that individual. The bureaucrats with whom we are having trouble are those who were placed in positions in payment for political service. They are the people who cause the trouble. Many of them are incompetent to do the job to which they were appointed.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield.

Mr. MAY. As I understand the gentleman's amendment he proposes to give to the Civil Service Commission the same functions that would deprive the employee of a trial by jury.

Mr. DEMPSEY. No; wait a minute. It gives to the Civil Service Commission the same authority the Commission now has where civil-service employees are involved, but in addition it gives the employee affected the right to have his case reviewed by the district court on both the facts and the law.

Mr. MAY. As a matter of fact, though, it does not allow the accused employee the right of a trial by jury.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is strange to me that the gentleman from Kentucky, for whom I have great respect, takes the stand he does. Most certainly he cannot be blind to the fact that little employees of the Federal Government have been dismissed because they vote as they want to, and without hearing or trial by anybody.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Not for a minute.

There has been no trial or hearing granted when people have been dismissed because they exercised their right to vote. There has been no appeal when they refused to contribute and because of that refusal were dismissed. For political activity you attempt to take a man out of service, but this bill does not take him out of service. If the State says, "No; we refuse to remove this man," the only thing the Federal Government can do is what the bill provides, and that is to say, "All right; then we will assess you twice that man's salary for 1 year." This is not the case with the Social Security set-up, where the State of Ohio was assessed a fine of more than a million dollars. Why all this talk about some person, an official, if you please, some supervisor, who attempts to coerce them and attempts to interfere in political matters?

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I am not talking about firing some fellow who holds a small job. I am talking about the fundamental principle of law involved in the right of trial by jury by every citizen of this country. In my State constitution it is guaranteed, and in the Federal Constitution it is guaranteed.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that my friend from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY], than whom there is no finer man in this House, does not know his own bill. I say that advisedly. I do not mean to say that he does not know it, but I do mean to say that Jupiter nodded if he knows it.

We will be gracious and say he has forgotten. This whole bill is nothing but an amendment to the act passed last year, which is a criminal statute and provides for a fine of not exceeding $1,000 and imprisonment for not more than 12 months for any violation of the first seven sections of the act. Therefore, when you amend one of those sections of that act you do not change the criminal penalty. That is still in there and still obtains as the basic "mud sill" of this whole legislation.

Mr. GWYNNE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GWYNNE. Is it not a fact that in the original Hatch Act the penalty of a $1,000 fine and 2 years' imprisonment applied only to that section which had to do with misuse of official authority and that the penalty in the act and in the amendment for an employee who was subject to dismissal is simply dismissal?

Mr. HOBBS. I do not so construe it, and I know that in the debate in committee it was not so construed. I know that that was one of the motivating causes actuating the committee in adopting my amendment to preserve the right of jury trial. There cannot be any question about it.

Even if your contention be correct, for it is just as much a punishment for crime to take away a man's job and put him on the blacklist for 18 months as it is to fine him. I would rather be fined and imprisoned for 12 months, than be fired and hounded during the period of the duration of the blacklist. Shades of Uncle Tom's Cabin! Now, a vindictive Government is going to put a pack of its bloodhounds on the trail of these slaves to the rule of the bosses whose will this act will make supreme.

I say it is obligatory upon us to treat every citizen fairly, and to observe our oaths to uphold the Constitution. Yet, in this bill, if the Dempsey amendment be adopted, an employee may be convicted, fired, and blacklisted for 18 months thereafter, without a right to even ask for a jury trial though that right is guaranteed him by the Constitution. Never before in the history of the Government has there been a blacklist established by law until now.

The victims of this outrageous piece of legislation ought to have a chance to submit their cause to the adjudication of a fair and impartial jury.

I want to read to you a few excerpts which I have taken from the Declaration of Independence, listing the causes of the American Revolution.

He has obstructed the administration of justice by refusing his assent to laws for establishing judiciary powers.

He has made judges dependent on his will alone, for the tenure of their offices, and the amount and payment of their salaries.

He has combined with others to subject us to a jurisdiction foreign to our Constitution, and, unacknowledged by our laws, giving his assent to their acts of pretended legislation.

Now, here is another ground for our revolution:

For depriving us in many cases of the benefits of trial by jury.

For transporting us beyond seas to be tried for pretended offenses.

In other words, to Washington.

For abolishing the free system of English laws in a neighboring province, establishing therein an arbitrary government, and enlarging its boundaries so as to render it at once an example and fit instrument for introducing the same absolute rule into these Colonies.

Now, I quote the following from the Constitution of the United States:

ARTICLE III, SECTION II. 3. The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury; and such trial shall be held in the State where the said crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State the trial shall be at such place or places as the Congress may by law have directed.

AMENDMENT VI

In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense.

AMENDMENT VII

In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed $20, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise reexamined in any court of the United States than according to the rules of the common law.

In the name of justice, how can you take the right of trial by jury from the people you are supposed to represent?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, there is no occasion for any misunderstanding as to what is being done here and what will be done by the proposed amendment. As I stated before, there is nothing in this bill which provides any punishment for any person, so far as criminal punishment is concerned, without proper trial. If you will take the original Hatch bill you will find that the first seven sections have to do with miscellaneous matters with reference to the W. P. A., and among others there is a provision prohibiting any administrative officer in the Federal Government from using his official authority wrongfully. Then comes section 8 which reads as follows:

Any person who violates any of the foregoing provisions of this act shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than a thousand dollars or imprisoned for not more than 1 year or both.

Then, next, section 9. This is the section of the original act which prohibited Federal employees from taking an active part in politics. The penalty provided for their violation of that part of the act is contained in section 9A, paragraph (2):

Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress for such position or office shall be used to pay the compensation of such person.

In this bill the committee has followed the same procedure as far as the penalty provisions are concerned. The particular thing we have under discussion now is that part of the bill which refers to an employee—

Whose principal employment is in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States or by any Federal agency.

There is no criminal penalty provided for any employee if he violates that section. The only thing he has to fear—and I admit it is something to fear—is that he will be discharged from his employment.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Punishment, of course, is the basis of any penal statute. How much more punishment is it to me, if I am an employee of the Federal Government or a State government, drawing $100 salary per month, if I am fired for 5 months or 18 months, than if I am fined $10?

Mr. GWYNNE. The only point I am making now is that this does not provide for any criminal punishment as we understand it. For example, almost every State has a workmen's compensation law. People come in there and try their cases before the tribunal provided by law. They do not have an appeal de novo and cannot demand a jury trial. This procedure follows exactly the theory we were contending for in the Walter-Logan bill, which called for a fair trial before some tribunal with an appeal thereafter to a court which had authority to review the law and had authority to set aside the verdict and finding if not sustained by substantial evidence.

I submit that the provision contained in this bill, and which will be in the law if the amendment now offered by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] is not adopted, will not be in accordance with the procedure adopted in most of the States of the Union and will not be in accordance with the procedure heretofore adopted in regard to appeals from the Civil Service Commission.

There, as you know, a person may be separated from his employment and he has an appeal, but he has no appeal with a right to jury trial. We are doing nothing here except what we have done all along the line in cases similar in their nature.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBBS. The gentleman does not think, does he, that it is a comparable illustration to cite the Walter-Logan bill, which merely provides for appeal from administrative tribunals in the exercise of their duties, which relate merely to details of administration in accordance with the laws we write? Does not the distinguished gentleman realize that this is essentially a criminal statute, punishing for pernicious political activity, which is at least a misdemeanor?

Mr. GWYNNE. No criminal punishment is provided. This bill simply provides that if a man is found to have violated the law he may be removed from office. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, I will vote against this bill, which I consider to be almost ridiculous. Certainly I shall oppose the Dempsey amendment. It is a little hard for me to understand the argument that is being made in support of the Dempsey amendment, in the United States, where the personal rights of the people are the things we hold dearer than anything else.

This is a quibble as to whether or not if a man is to be punished under this act it is a criminal punishment. Certainly no one will argue with me that it is not a personal right of his which is being interfered with. You are passing this bill to make politics pure and holy. The test is, find a man who has done something wrong or who has failed to do something that somebody thinks he should have done, and for that and for no other reason you discharge him. Not only do you discharge him but you mark him with having been guilty of pernicious—that is a pretty severe word—pernicious activity of some kind. Thus you take from him a personal right, his right to hold his job as long as he is capable of discharging the duties of that job. How well he is doing the work is not the test under this bill; it is simply whether or not somebody thinks he has done something he should not have done, something disconnected with his work entirely. We hear men stand in the well of this House and say you are kicking this man out of Government employment or some other kind of employment in order to clean up the employment, and you say you are doing that to protect democracy. Then you deny him the right to be heard, by whom? By a jury. A terrible thing, is it not? What is the matter with jury trial? Are you afraid of it? You are certainly not afraid that a jury in your county is going to do something wrong, are you?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. No.

No, Mr. Chairman; of course the bill is going too far. The distinguished gentleman from Texas made one of the ablest arguments I have ever heard made against this bill. I wish it were within my power to go as deeply into this question and talk as convincingly against it as he does. You are striking at the very heart of American liberty and freedom in this bill.

You struck at it in the original Hatch Act which should never have passed, and should never have been placed on the statute books.

When my friend from Alabama said yesterday that the distinguished gentleman from New Mexico was going to offer an amendment to take this right of trial by jury out of this bill I could not believe it. I could not believe that the author of the original bill in the House would stand here before you and advocate such a thing. If I were to support this amendment I would be ashamed to go home and look my free constituents in the face when I would have to say to them that I voted for and supported an amendment which would deprive them of their Constitution-given right of a trial by jury. I do not believe this House will adopt the amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, one would judge from listening to the argument of the distinguished gentleman from Alabama that something new and unusual had been written into this bill and that now a great threat at democracy is involved because of an attempt to take away the right of trial by jury.

I do not know anything about the laws in the State of Alabama, but I do know something about them in some other States and I wanted to ask the distinguished gentleman from Alabama how it is that the thing operates in the case of any removal statute. If a proceeding is instituted to remove a police officer in my State he has a trial before the fire and police commission without any jury and if he is convicted by that commission he has a right of appeal to the court which hears the evidence on a certiorari proceeding.

If a school teacher has a complaint filed against her, her charges are heard before the school board, and the school board, upon the evidence, sitting as a board, issues a removal order. She again has the right of appeal to the court through certiorari proceedings, and there is no jury trial involved at all. In the District of Columbia itself, who has the removal power of your police and firemen in the District? It is vested in a board that has the power to appoint and the power to remove such officials. Those are jobs, are they not, and there is not a jury trial involved any place along the line, and for very good reasons. I could cite instance after instance, in State after State, where in removal proceedings—and that is all this is—the question of jury trial is never involved. A Governor of a State may be removed by impeachment by the legislature. Elective officials in my State and, perhaps, in your State can be removed by a removal body who pass upon evidence, with the right to go into court without a jury trial and with the right of the court to pass upon the questions of law, and, in many cases, upon the sufficiency of the facts adduced at the hearing.

Where is there something new or novel in the suggestion of the gentleman from New Mexico that the same procedure that is universal throughout this country in the matter of removal proceedings, should be written into this law? I would like to have the gentleman answer me.

Mr. HOBBS. I would be most happy to. I deny, sir, most vehemently that this bill is a mere ouster or removal bill.

Mr. KEEFE. Then if the gentleman denies that, while we are on the subject I call his attention to the very wording of the bill itself on page 15:

> After such hearing, the Commission shall determine whether any violation of such subsection has occurred and whether such violation, if any, warrants the removal of the officer or employee.

And so forth. This is the identical language that is found in removal statutes throughout the length and breadth of this land. It is the identical language that provides for removal of public officers and is the same language found in State removal statutes.

Mr. HOBBS. Now will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. KEEFE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HOBBS. I did not say that it was not a removal statute. I said that it was not merely a removal statute.

Mr. KEEFE. What else is there involved except a removal in this particular section?

Mr. HOBBS. If the gentleman will allow me to give my answer——

Mr. KEEFE. I will be very happy to, because I wanted to ask the gentleman that question when he had the floor.

Mr. HOBBS. You will find that this bill amends section 2 of the original Hatch Act. Section 2 of the original act, of course, precedes section 8 thereof, which is the general penal section. Therefore the penal section in the original Hatch Act applies to section 2 thereof as it will be amended by this act. But I care not whether this be construed as a criminal statute or not. If it be purely civil, in any case under it wherein more than $20 is involved, the victims are entitled to jury trials under the Constitution of the United States.

I cannot see to save my life why you bring up civil-service and ouster proceedings arising in private or similar employment, where the ousting authority has been paying the salary in connection with this criminal statute. Such cases have no more to do with this bill than the price of wheat on the moon.

Mr. KEEFE. I think the gentleman has answered and has done so out of my time and I now want to make this statement. I am not referring to the civil-service procedure, I am referring to the fact that the removal statutes in every State provide substantially the same method of removal as is provided in this law, provided you strike out that jury-trial provision.

Mr. HOBBS. And the position we take is that we have no control over a State nor over the laws of a State. If a State provides by its law for ouster without trial by jury that is no precedent that we may invoke to justify our denial of the right of trial by jury as guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. It occurs to me that some of our good friends in this debate have strained at an academic gnat and swallowed a political camel whose humps are mountain high with all sorts of abuse. Much is said here about these fellows who have the administration of these funds, part of which are contributed by the Federal Government, not having a jury trial if they get caught doing something they ought not to do. As has been suggested and said by my able friend the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], removal statutes, and in many States they are called ouster statutes, provide for the summary removal of an unfaithful official, an elected official, when found guilty, and that without trial by jury. The statement has been made that if more than $20 is involved, a party litigant must have a trial by jury. Such is not the law. In respect to the Tennessee Valley Authority, it has been held that in condemnation proceedings for the condemnation of property even though the value of it extends up to $100,000, no jury trial can be had. Just what jury trials have some of these poor men had who worked on P. W. A. projects, and who were thrown out of their jobs by some petty political boss because they would not make political contributions or vote according to the way the political whip was cracked? I hold in my hand the front page of a recent issue of the Knoxville Journal, published in my city, and headed "More W. P. A. workers blame shake-down for job loss," and here is a picture of one of the fellows who had to cough up a dollar out of his meager, paltry pay. Here is the picture of the family: His wife is lying in bed with a newborn child, and there are six more standing by. Just what sort of a jury trial does a fellow like that have when his foreman shakes him down and fires him because he does not come across? In that connection those men who shook those fellows down have been indicted in the Federal court and some have pleaded guilty, and others have been tried and convicted and sentenced to prison terms.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is for the protection of the poor and the needy. This bill is to prevent the playing of politics with human misery. This bill is to stop men from laying the heavy hand of political oppression on some poor fellow who feels holding to his coattails the hands of his hungry children and his helpless wife when he is about to lose his job. I wish that we could put ourselves in the shoes of a fellow like that, the man who is thus beset by poverty and by woe on the one hand by his wife and children and by the coercion of a political boss on the other side.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENNINGS. Not now. Somebody has said here that he would hate to go home and look at some of his constituents after voting for this amendment. I am not ashamed to go home and look at my constituents after I have supported this amendment and this bill in its entirety, even though I have to look at some of them through bars in jail where they properly are. [Laughter.] I think it is a good bill and ought to be passed, and this amendment ought to be adopted. You know some of our friends have gone on here so long with these relief funds, that they think they have acquired a proscriptive right to use them for political ends. There was an old fellow in my country who had been stealing hogs all of his life. Finally they caught him and indicted him and convicted him. The prosecutor finally said, "Now, Bill, we were boys together, and our children go to school together, and our wives belong to the same church, and if you will sign this agreement not to steal any more hogs, I will turn you loose." Bill said, "Jim, I'll be darned if I will. I am not going to sign away my liberties in any such manner as that." [Laughter.]

This act is the expression of the enlightened and outraged public opinion of the people. The facts that demand its passage constitute a black chapter in the history of this country. It is designed to protect the public, to safeguard the needy. The man who by political power has the control of the right of a poor man and his family to eat, be clothed, and sheltered to a large and dangerous degree is in a position to dictate the vote of that poor man thus dependent on his favor. One of the indictments of George the Third was that he made judges dependent on his will for the payment of their salaries and the tenure of their offices. If a judge can thus be coerced, how much more can a man on relief or on a Government job be put on the spot and his vote controlled? What right has anyone clothed with a little brief authority to prostitute it for political ends; to build a machine held together by the cohesive power of public plunder; and to drive the poor and helpless to contribute from their meager earnings and thus by this unholy coercion rob the Government and oppress the poor? Let us pass the bill and stop the racket.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the Dempsey amendment, and all amendments thereto, close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. That will not affect the gentleman's amendment. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I think in discussing the matter of the jury trial and the whole question of penalties in connection with this bill, we are perhaps overlooking the main beneficence of the bill itself. Insofar as the Hatch Act is effective in actual practice, it is not primarily because of the penalties assessed, including removal, threatened. I have had some experience with the first Hatch Act in the State of Illinois, and I have seen public officials who hitherto neglected during campaigns the duties of their office, now out of prudence staying with the duties of their office. They hesitated "to stick their necks out" so long as the Hatch bill was in force, for fear that the opposing faction or party would use it to political purposes against them or their party.

The greater effectiveness of the Hatch bill will, I think, grow out of the fact that in a two-party system we are hesitant to perform functions that we know we ought not to perform when there are other people watching our conduct, people who will use it to political disadvantage of our party or ourselves. More than with most laws, the Hatch Act is self-enforcing.

With reference now to the question of removal, whether you call it punishment or not, may I call attention to this fact: Much talk about this jury question seems to presume that people who hold political office have some right to the political office, independent of the performance of the duties of the office itself. There is no invasion of the rights of citizenship in removal from any office or job of anybody for doing something pernicious and something quite beyond the duties of the office which he holds. The only removal that is threatened in this case is of people neglecting their duties and doing instead what is so far from duty as to be here branded pernicious. Consequently, the removal, punishment or not, of course, invalidates no citizenly rights. The penalty involved in this is merely the punishment that a man brings on himself when he accepts office upon the pains of performing the duties of the office and then proceeds to do something else instead of performing the duties. To declare that a man is entitled to a jury trial in such a case is, to say the least, disingenuous.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The gentleman has talked about officeholders. Will the gentleman address himself to the employee, the man who works for a drainage district or for an irrigation district, which happens to have a loan from the Government? Will the gentleman address himself to that man who is discharged from his position and not permitted to have a job for 18 months, simply because he goes out and takes part in your election? Will you address yourself to that man and talk a little about the employee and not about the man who holds the job?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. That is exactly the man I have been talking about, if he abuses his office as herein described. This bill proposes to stop misuse of public funds by whomsoever. It proposes to stop it by simply letting the citizen give up the job to which he has not any rights when he ceases to perform its duties.

Mr. SHERIDAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. SHERIDAN. Is it your contention that you cannot grant an officeholder removal under constitutional form of government, and is it constitutional form of government that a man is not entitled to a trial by jury?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. The constitutional form of government expects a man, I hope, to perform the duties for which he is publicly paid—and not something else instead. Whatever provision we here make, under the Constitution, for his removal, when he fails of his duty, is constitutional enough for me.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. All time has expired on this amendment.

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DEMPSEY) there were ayes 108 and noes 79.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. DEMPSEY and Mr. NICHOLS to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were ayes 131 and noes 82.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEMPSEY: Page 20, line 12, strike out the quotation marks.

Page 20 beginning in line 13 strike out down to and including line 18 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(b) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) the term 'person' includes an individual, partnership, committee, assocation, corporation, and any other organization or group of persons;

"(2) the term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether legally enforcible to make a contribution."

Page 21, line 7, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following language:

"Provided, That nothing in this sentence shall be construed to interfere with the usual and known business, trade, or profession of any candidate."

Page 21, line 8, strike out "any person who is engaged in" and in lieu thereof insert:

"(d) Any person who engages in."

Page 21, line 17, strike out "(b)" and insert "(e)."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD on the amendment just adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment is to make clear that the bill is not intended to limit Federal offices to people who had no business or occupation. The paragraph to which it is added, in the minds of many of us, was open to the interpretation that it would have been unlawful for anyone to buy "goods, commodities, advertising, or articles of any kind or description" from anyone who was a candidate for an elective Federal office.

The language of the bill is:

Where the proceeds of such a purchase, or any portion thereof, shall directly or indirectly inure to the benefit of or for any candidate for an elective Federal office.

That would seem to have made it unlawful for anyone to have bought groceries from a grocer, wheat from a farmer, advertising from a printer, or articles of any kind from anyone who was a candidate for an elective Federal office, under threat of 5 years imprisonment and a fine of $5,000. Obviously, if that was the correct interpretation it would have limited running for Federal office to persons who had no business, who had other means of support, or who would abandon their businesses while a candidate.

No one contends that was the intention of the bill. An interpretation suggested by some is that the language was meant to cover sales only where the proceeds were directly used in the candidacy of the candidate. It would be difficult, however, to divide the personality of the candidate. When would he be farmer, grocer, or businessman selling in his normal occupation, and when would he be candidate? Naturally, he would use the proceeds from his normal occupation in defraying some of his expenses as a candidate.

The intent of the bill is to curb and prevent pernicious political activity, not normal business activity. To prevent the possibility of an unintended construction, the amendment just adopted was worked out. It provides that the paragraph shall not be construed to interfere with the normal and known trade, business, or profession of a candidate for an elective Federal office.

A number of Members on this side of the aisle were concerned with the language as it stood and should be credited with working out the language of the amendment. They include the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN], the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE], the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. VREELAND], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK]. The acceptance of the amendment by the author of the bill and its adoption by this body is appreciated.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEMPSEY: Page 26, line 3, after the period, insert "The terms used in this section shall have the meaning assigned to them in section 302 of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925, and the penalties provided in such act shall apply to violations of this section."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEMPSEY: On page 26, strike out all of line 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VREELAND: On page 20, line 12, after the words "national political party", insert "This subsection shall not apply to contributions made to or by a State or local committee or other State or local organization."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SUMNERS of Texas) there were—ayes 93, noes 74.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUMNERS of Texas: On page 13, beginning with line 18, strike out all of section 12.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this amendment seeks to strike out of this bill the provision dealing with State employees. The matter has been thoroughly discussed. I feel I ought to offer the amendment.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. If we strike out what is suggested in the gentleman's amendment, do we not strike out the heart of the bill?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. You strike out that part of the bill that ought never to have been in it. If that is the heart of it, that is what I am after.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANKIN: Page 21, after line 7, insert: "It is further declared to be a pernicious political activity, and it shall hereafter be unlawful, for any officer or employee of a public utility holding company registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission under the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, or of any subsidiary company thereof, (1) to take any active part in political management or in political campaigns, or (2) to use his authority or influence as such officer or employee for the purpose of interfering with an election or a nomination for office, or affecting the results thereof, or (3) directly or indirectly to coerce, attempt to coerce, command, or advise any other such officer or employee to pay, lend, or contribute any part of his salary or compensation or anything else of value to any party, committee, organization, agency, or person for political purposes."

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Mexico makes the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill. Does the gentleman from New Mexico desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. DEMPSEY. No; I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion this amendment is germane. If you are really in earnest about wanting clean politics, about wanting to stop corruption in politics in America, you cannot do anything to that end more directly than to stop the corruption of the public utilities, their representatives, their agents, and their henchmen.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

Mr. GROSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be very glad to hear from the gentleman on the point of order that has been raised.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not addressing himself to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. I am sure the gentleman will proceed in accordance with the existing order to address the Chair on the point of order.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I am addressing myself to the Chair on the point of order.

This is a bill presumably to clean up politics, to try to bring about honest elections in this country; this is a bill allegedly to try to stop corruption in politics, the corruption of elections. It is a matter of common knowledge, and every man within the sound of my voice knows there has been more corruption at the hands of public utilities recently than there has been at the hands of all the Government employees combined. I submit that if this bill means what it says, if this measure is to be passed for the purpose of bringing about honest elections and stopping corruption in politics, the one thing we should do is to put a stop to these utilities not only corrupting elections but controlling conventions as well as primaries.

Mr. MICHENER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] desire to address the Chair on the point of order?

Mr. MICHENER. If the Chair desires to hear me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is always glad to hear from the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, this is an act to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939. Only such matters are relevant and germane in the way of amendment as are included within the title of the act.

This act deals with whom? It does not deal with electric-light companies; it does not deal with railroad companies; it does not deal with fertilizer manufacturers; therefore any amendment offered extending the act to any one of these several agencies which I have mentioned would not be germane and would not be in order.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is addressing the Chair on the point of order, and the Chair feels that the gentleman should confine his remarks to the Chair and not yield at this point.

The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to section 13, on page 20. In view of what the gentleman states in reference to the title, the Chair may say that we have to look to the body of the bill itself, and the Chair calls the attention of the gentleman that section 13 declares to be a pernicious political activity certain acts which relate to individuals, covered by the first paragraph of section 13 and in the third paragraph of section 13, having to do with another group.

The Chair would like to have the gentleman's views as to whether or not, the bill covering more than one subject, a third subject of a related nature, an amendment of this sort, would be germane.

Mr. MICHENER. The Chair is undoubtedly correct in that suggestion, but the section to which the Chair refers only has reference to contributions. The agencies included in the Rankin amendment receive no compensation or contributions from the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair also calls attention to the third paragraph, which has to do with any person, individual, partnership, committee, association, corporation, and so forth.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; those individuals or groups receive contributions in an indirect way. This bill does not deal with any person or any group or any class of persons excepting such groups or classes as receive their pay or compensation wholly or in part from the Federal Government; therefore, if the Rankin amendment is germane, you can just as well extend this bill to automobile manufacturers or to any other industry. This bill deals with those receiving compensation from the Government. If those industries received their pay or their compensation in whole or in part from contributions of the Federal Government, then the gentleman's amendment would be in order.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is addressing the Chair on a point of order.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing further to suggest unless I may answer some further questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] will state his point of order.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, at the time of the reading of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] there was so much confusion in the Chamber that I know a great many Members did not grasp its import. May I ask unanimous consent that it be again reported before the argument on the point of order proceeds?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the Rankin amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the Rankin amendment.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, upon hearing the amendment read again I want to accentuate what I said. It might be just as reasonable to include within the list of those proscribed by the gentleman's amendment—the attorney in Tupelo, Miss., who represents the utilities in Tupelo but who receives no compensation from the Federal Government.

Mr. RANKIN. There are no Power Trust attorneys in Tupelo.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota and Mr. COX rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. However, the Chair would be very glad to hear from the gentleman from South Dakota and the gentleman from Georgia on the point of order. Does the gentleman from South Dakota desire to address the Chair on the point of order?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes, Mr. Chairman. I wish to point out that the point made by the gentleman from Michigan in regard to the subject matter of the amendment is pertinent because the language of the amendment proposed deals with the activities that are described in section 12, and if this amendment were germane it would be germane to section 12 rather than to section 13, which deals primarily with the subject of contributions and not with the subject of participation in campaigns. A great deal of the amendment is devoted to the subject of participation in campaigns, which is covered in section 12.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Georgia on the point of order.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has in part touched upon what I had in mind. It occurs to me that the bill proposes to lay a restriction on individuals or the agents or employees of individuals who receive some character of favor from the Government. In this particular case, the gentleman from Mississippi, by the amendment which he offers, undertakes to reach out and extend the Federal power to the regulation of the conduct of people who have no connection, direct or remote, with the Government, and who are in no wise agents or employees of individuals who receive such favors.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard for just a moment in answer to the gentlemen who have spoken on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. RANKIN. Very well, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MCCORMACK). The Chair is in complete agreement with so much of the observations of the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] as relates to the amendment's not being germane if the bill were confined to one group. The Chair would have no hesitancy in ruling if the bill confined itself and its operations to employees of a State or of any political subdivision.

However, the Chair is very much concerned by the provision of section 13, which brings in another class, declaring it to be—

> A pernicious political activity * * * for any person, directly or indirectly, to make contributions. * * *

Then in the third paragraph of section 13 there is brought in another class:

> It is further declared to be a pernicious political activity * * * for any person, individual, partnership, committee, association, corporation, and any other organization or group of persons to purchase or buy any goods, commodities, advertising, or articles of any kind or description where the proceeds of such a purchase, or any portion thereof, shall directly or indirectly inure to the benefit of or for any candidate for an elective Federal office. * * *

There is a well-recognized rule of the House, which has been passed upon on many occasions, that where a bill confines itself to one subject, another subject, even if related, would not be germane, but where a bill covers two or more subjects a related subject would then be in order.

The Chair, naturally, recognizes the power in the argument made by the gentleman from Georgia and others on the merits of the amendment, but it is not the responsibility of the Chair in passing upon a point of order to pass upon the merits of an amendment. What the results of an amendment may be is not properly a matter for the Chair to pass on.

This being a related matter, and the bill covering two or more groups, it seems to the Chair that another group could be included therein, which the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi undertakes to do. For the reasons stated, therefore, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. Would it be proper to include in this bill another group which has nothing to do with the Federal Government and where the compensation of the group is not received directly or indirectly from the Federal Government?

The CHAIRMAN. That is a matter the Chair would pass upon if it were presented to the Chair. The Chair is sure that the gentleman from Michigan himself appreciates that the Chair would be giving gratuitous advice if he undertook to answer the gentleman's inquiry.

The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I hope that every Member of the House will vote for this amendment. It is offered in good faith. It is very necessary if we are to check political corruption in this country.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio because I believe he is probably one man who ought to fall in line, above all others.

Mr. SECCOMBE. I merely wish to ask the gentleman if he would be willing to include the moving-picture industry in his amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that if he has the courage to offer such an amendment I shall give it serious consideration. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin for a question.

Mr. JOHNS. If this amendment applies to all public utilities, would that include the employees of the R. E. A.?

Mr. RANKIN. They are already covered. You need not worry about them. You have already tied up the R. E. A. and the T. V. A. and all the other governmental agencies, so you need not worry about them at all, but this will put a stop to these utilities or their agents corruptly influencing or trying to influence elections or controlling conventions. If it had been in effect before the Philadelphia convention, the chances are they would have nominated a candidate of their own choice.

Now, if you really want clean politics, if you really are trying to clean up politics in this country, if you really want decent elections, and honest conventions, if you really want to stop the most pernicious political activity this country has ever known, then support this amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANKIN) there were—ayes 83, noes 129.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. RANKIN and Mr. DEMPSEY.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 84, noes 120.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GEYER of California: On page 13, strike out lines 15, 16, and 17, inclusive, and insert the following:

"SEC. 4. (a) Such act of August 2, 1939, is further amended by adding after section 1 the following new section:

" 'SEC. 1. (a) It is unlawful for any person, whether or not acting under the authority of the laws of a State or subdivision thereof, to require the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite for voting or registering to vote at any election for a President or Vice President or Presidential elector or Member of the Senate or Member of the House of Representatives of the United States.' "

And after the figure 4 in line 15 insert (b).

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to that section of the bill or those sections of the bill to which it is addressed nor to any section of the bill.

Mr. GEYER of California. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. HOBBS. I will not.

Mr. GEYER of California. The gentleman will not?

Mr. HOBBS. No, sir.

Mr. GEYER of California. I would like to be heard on it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HOBBS. I would be delighted to be heard if the Chair wishes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, this point of order, it seems to me, is so patently well taken as not to require argument. This is a bill the avowed purpose of which is to prevent pernicious political activity on the part of those in authority or employees who have anything to do with projects financed in whole or in part by loans or grants by the Federal Government. It is perfectly manifest that this amendment is an attempt to overthrow our dual system of government by restraining the States from exercising their indisputable right to control their own elections and to make their own laws. There is no provision of law whatsoever that even remotely attempts to justify such an outrageous rape of the sovereign powers of the States.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman is not confining himself to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair believes the gentleman from Alabama is addressing himself to the point of order and the Chair will hear the gentleman from California later.

Mr. HOBBS. And therefore, Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the amendment relates to the exercise, by a so-called sovereign State, still thought by some to be sovereign of its own power to legislate for the people of the State with respect to its own election machinery, I submit that it is so patent as to require no argument that this amendment is not germane to any portion of the bill.

I read, at the suggestion of the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GIBBS], this quotation from the case of Breedlove v. Suttles (302 U. S. 277):

To make payment of poll taxes a prerequisite of voting is not to deny any privilege or immunity protected by the fourteenth amendment. Privilege of voting is not derived from the United States, but is conferred by the State and save as restrained by the fifteenth and nineteeth amendments and other provisions of the Federal Constitution, the State may condition suffrage as it deems appropriate.

Then follows a number of other citations and this language:

The privileges and immunities protected are only those that arise from the Constitution and laws of the United States, and not those that spring from other sources.

Mr. Chairman, I really see no purpose in prolonging this argument, unless the Chair has some question in mind that I might be able to answer. If so, I would be very happy to try to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman questions later, possibly. The Chair will hear the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, I call attention of the Chair to the decision just made on the Rankin amendment. I think this is a parallel case. In addition to that, I point out that the bill before us has as its purpose the purification of politics, and stops the pollution of representative government at its source. The poll tax puts the dollar sign on the right to vote, in violation of section 2 of the Fourteenth Amendment, which reads as follows, in part:

But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being 21 years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crimes, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion in which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State.

My amendment prohibits the purchase of a vote by denying the right, first, to demand poll-tax receipt, before the voter can vote. The evidence before the Committee on the Judiciary of this House on this very point shows the practice of buying poll-tax receipts en bloc, that is, paying the tax for another, is common. This amendment prohibits further political activity.

AMENDMENT TO HATCH ACT TO ABOLISH POLL TAXES

This amendment has been endorsed by A. F. of L., C. I. O., railway brotherhoods, Y. W. C. A., National Negro Congress, and others.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is very simple. It prohibits the charging of a price for the privilege of exercising the American right of casting one's ballot.

This applies only to the election of national officeholders, President, Vice President, Presidential electors, Members of the Senate or Members of the House of Representatives.

It will give the ballot to the low-income groups in the eight Southern States that are still following the old Roman system that was in operation when Mary and Joseph presented to the world the Babe of Bethlehem.

My good friend from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] was unable to answer a question propounded yesterday by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH]. I will now answer it.

The percentage of voters to the total population for the year 1934 in Alabama was 10.15 percent. The percentage of voters for the 40 States that charge no head tax as a prerequisite for voting was 31.24 percent—10 as against 31. This is for the primary election.

Now, let us look at some general-election figures. In 1936—a Presidential election—adult population.

Percent of poll-tax States
Virginia	25.7
Arkansas	18.5
Texas	26.2
South Carolina	14.1
Percent of non-poll-tax States
West Virginia	92
Missouri	80
New Mexico	94
North Carolina	75

About 64 percent of the white voters in these States are disfranchised. Is this democracy? Can any Member of this body who believes in our Government refuse to support this amendment? Let us do our saving of democracy right here at home, or rather let us get it ourselves first.

We have 78 Representatives from these poll-tax States. If we enforced our fourteenth amendment and cut down our vote as provided therein, do you know how many we would have from the poll-tax States? Only 13—13 instead of 78 by the 1936 figures.

Our friend from Alabama asks us not to punish our colleagues. Now I do not blame any Representative for not wanting the political equilibrium disturbed in his district, especially if he has been here so many years as to be chairman of his committee. I claim that no feudal lord was more secure behind his stone walls than the Congressman fortified behind his poll-tax barricade.

Even Hitler, Mussolini, and Stalin are not more secure in tenure of office under their one-party system than is the Representative from a one-party State if reenforced by the poll-tax restrictions on the ballot.

The other 387 of us must consider labor, the unemployed, the slum dweller, the sharecropper, and racial minorities, for these groups may reward or punish at the polls in our States.

The only punishment that may come to these Representatives from non-poll-tax districts will come to those who have been forgetting these classes and refuse to change. I am sure the politically astute will easily make the proper adjustment in his thinking and in his voting if such adjustments are necessary. Surely we cannot be wavering as to our proper duty as between asking our colleagues to make such an adjustment, and the denying to this vast army of people the right to vote.

They will tell you it is a local matter. Did they say that when they asked us to tax all the people for the benefit of the T. V. A.?

Were my people concerned when the lord high executioner of the W. P. A. came out of Virginia, or the leader against the wage-hour law came from Georgia? Was it the concern of the people of Illinois when the State of Tennessee furnished the leader of the fight to kill the slum-clearance program? Was it a local matter only when the impetus to weaken the National Labor Relations Act sprang from the "cradle of democracy," Virginia?

Let the opponents of this amendment answer these questions before they say the poll tax is of local concern only. Let us have a real democracy here in the United States. Let us give people the right to adjust their wrongs in the American way—at the ballot box—so there will be no temptation to settle them some other way. How long before the trodden worm will finally turn? Let us cast our vote for democracy and scuttle autocracy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. HOBBS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Alabama rise?

Mr. HOBBS. To advance an additional reason to the argument already made. It violates the Constitution of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels that he should rule upon the effect of the amendment offered in respect to its being germane to the bill.

The Chair listened with a great deal of interest to the citations and excerpts from a Supreme Court decision which the gentleman from Alabama referred to. The Chair distinguishes clearly between the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER] and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment offered by the gentleman from California is in no way related to the provisions of the pending bill; that is, in no way related so as to make the amendment germane in accordance with and under the rules of the House. The amendment relates to the franchise of the voters in the several States, and the bill under consideration so far as the Chair can observe, and the Chair has read it carefully, in no way enters that field. For the reasons stated, and principally and wholly upon the ground that the amendment is not related to the bill under consideration, and wholly eliminating the constitutional question or any other question, the Chair holds that the amendment is not germane, and sustains the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOFFMAN: Page 12, line 24, after the comma, following the word "States", insert "or (3) any labor organization or any official or employee thereof", and, after the word "authority", at the end of said line 24, insert "or any of the funds of any labor organization."

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the three amendments that I have at the desk, which are all for the same purpose, may be considered at this time, and that I may have 5 minutes on each amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the other two amendments offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, line 15, after the word "persons", strike out the period, insert a comma and the words "including labor organizations and the officers and employees thereof."

Page 1, line 2 of the title, after the word "Columbia", insert "and to labor organizations and the officials and employees thereof."

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, if I may have the attention of the Committee, I shall not use a third of the time allotted to me.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, may we have order?

Mr. HOFFMAN. And I want to thank the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I cannot yield now. We have been talking about doing away with political corruption. This bill is for that purpose. The gentleman from Mississippi offered an amendment which would have prevented individuals and employees in a certain line of business from taking any part in political campaigns.

In my judgment that was not a good amendment for the reason that it denied a civil right of the individual to an unnecessary degree. There is this distinction between the amendment which he offered and the one which I am offering. These amendments—there are three of them—one to the title, one to each of two sections of the bill, offered at one time so as to avoid the point of order raised against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi, are all directed toward the purpose of preventing the use of the funds of a labor organization as distinguished from the funds of the members of that organization, for any political purpose. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi applied to the individuals. These amendments do not apply to members of a union. They apply only to the funds of a union, used by the officials of the union, by the employees of the union.

The reason for these amendments is plain. If we are to have Federal corporations preventing contributions for political purposes, if we are to limit political contributions made by individuals, is there any reason why contributions from organizations which, with the aid of the Federal Government—I mean aided by the Senate Civil Liberties Committee, the National Labor Relations Board in collecting not $1,000,000 but approximately $10,000,000 a year from the workers of this country, organizations which have made political contributions of as much as $700,000 in 1 year, should not be limited in their contributions?

Now, here is the report of the special committee appointed to investigate campaign expenditures of Presidential, Vice Presidential, and senatorial candidates in 1936, pursuant to Senate Resolution 225. On page 127 of that report—and do not forget, this committee was appointed by a Democratic Vice President and the policy of the committee was controlled by Democratic Senators, so there is no political discrimination as against the Democratic or New Deal Party, and there can be none in this report.

Here is a part of that report.

The following recapitulation shows total contributions, and so forth:

The committee desires to point out that the labor contributions referred to in the following tabulation do not include contributions by individual local unions to various local organizations, such as county political committees. These compilations are from records as filed in detail with the Clerk of the House.

Recapitulation of labor organization campaign contributions, campaign of 1936, to the Democratic National Committee, $129,000, direct cash contribution. Advertising books of the Democratic National Convention of 1936, $7,500.

For the moment I will skip the others.

The total is $770,324.35, all contributed to the New Deal.

Then there is also a loan in there to the Democratic Committee of $50,000, which I understand has since been repaid. From a political standpoint, how can any Republican refuse to end such an advantage enjoyed by the New Dealers? Is it not enough that they have had the Federal Treasury to draw upon? Should they not be satisfied with the amounts which they have been able, during the past few years, to chisel from the relief appropriations? Can they not be satisfied with the sale of the President's signature on campaign books? Has not the political trough, out of which they have been feeding upon, been wide enough, deep enough, and long enough to satisfy the most greedy and shameless political pap sucker? Is there any reason why one single Republican should now by his failure to vote for this amendment again permit them to sell John L. Lewis a part of the New Deal administration?

Is there any reason in the wide world, if we are to prevent contributions by corporations, why we should not prevent a contribution of $770,000, all made to the Democratic Party—or more properly to the New Deal campaign fund? You Democrats will recall the embarrassment that followed those contributions. Here was a man whose organization contributed some $440,000 to the New Deal campaign fund. Was it a free-will offering? Perhaps the New Deal campaign committee so regarded it, but, much to the embarrassment of the Democratic Party, after the election was over along comes Lewis, and by the statements which he made and by his conduct here in the House and at the White House, he virtually claimed that he had bought a part of the administration—an absurdity on the face of it; but he was able to make that claim because we had not prevented the making of such contributions.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Briefly.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Did not Mr. Lewis at the Republican convention in Philadelphia plead failure of consideration—that he had not gotten value received? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. I was not there; but I will say this, if he did, he certainly was most ungrateful, for any man who can buy, for even a million dollars, control of the National Labor Relations Board over a period of 3 or 4 years, favored as he has been—I say for even a million dollars—he made a good bargain, if the corrupting of an administrative board can ever be considered a good bargain. John Lewis and his C. I. O. would not be anywhere if he had not had the support of the N. L. R. B. in his organizing campaigns. That is a known fact. For every dollar his organization contributed it received the value of ten.

Now, we are talking about political corruption——

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. I am in perfect agreement with you in what you are saying. I would like to say also that the garment workers contributed large sums of money in 1938.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; I know.

Let me quote from a newspaper article showing that fact. The article is as follows:

"POOR" CLOTHING WORKERS HELP A RICH POLITICIAN—WE'RE TOLD THEY LIVE IN SLUMS, BUT NEEDLE BOYS EASILY HAND UP "80 GRAND"

Following are the amounts of funds contributed by the "impoverished" Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, controlled by Sidney Hillman, one of the big three of the C. I. Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. If the gentleman will look at the contribution from the Du Ponts to the Republican Party, he will find that labor is a piker when it comes to making contributions. It is in that same book.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I know.

The exact amount of money contributed by the Du Ponts and of all others who contributed to the Republican Party is shown in this report. If you will examine it you will note that they contributed of their own funds; they contributed money which belonged to them, money which was their individual property.

These labor organizations contributed the funds which they held in trust for their members, funds which had been collected through the check-off, through the fear of the loss of jobs, if payment was not made; from men who could ill-afford to make those contributions. Another thing the Du Ponts and others who contributed to the Republican Party made a gift to promote a cause in which they believed. Money which these labor organizations contributed for political purposes was all too often contributed to an organization and for a purpose in which the men who earned that money, the man from whom it was taken, had neither faith nor confidence.

These amendments extend and carry out the announced purpose of this bill. The purpose of the bill, as announced in the papers, is to prevent, as far as possible, the improper use of money, of influence in political campaigns. If the purpose of this bill be as announced by those sponsoring and supporting it, to prevent the influencing or the purchasing of nominations or elections; of buying, through the use of money or of influence, the office of President, of Vice President, of Congressmen, and of Senators, then there is no reason why a labor organization should be permitted to contribute hundreds of thousands of dollars toward the purchasing of public officials, or if you prefer, toward the election of public officials who will do their will.

Experience demonstrates, and the records show, that for the purpose of controlling legislation, John L. Lewis and labor organizations, according to this report of the Senate committee, spent more than $770,000.

Republicans know that that money was spent to defeat their candidates. Democrats know that it was spent to elect new dealers and that some of these organizations used their influence to defeat Democrats. Republicans, if they want equal opportunity to present their views to the voters next November, should vote for these amendments. They should not handicap themselves by the failure to adopt these amendments. They should not exempt from the provisions of this bill contributors to their political enemies while voting to limit contributors to their own party.

Republicans should at least insist upon competing upon an actual basis. Republicans and Democrats who announce that they believe in clean politics should by their vote on these amendments demonstrate their sincerity. These amendments are a test of the sincerity of those who state that they wish to place the office of President, of Vice President, of Members of Congress, beyond the reach of those who believe that such offices can be purchased. These amendments are a challenge to the courage of every Member of this House who says that he wants to do away with contributions to political parties which lead toward corruption.

If you wish to do something toward furthering the cause of clean politics, here is your opportunity. If you fear retaliation through the political activities of certain labor organizations, let me say to you that the organization which would seek to buy you today will cut your political throat tomorrow.

Let me say to you that if through fear of the votes of a labor organization you vote against these amendments, you have not the slightest assurance that that organization will support you; that it will not give aid to your political opponent. And remember this, that those who use money to corrupt the voters are fickle bosses. More than that, they are tyrants, and the moment you cease to do their bidding, an order for your political execution will follow.

This reasoning applies as well to independent Democrats as it does to Republicans.

Let me repeat, here are amendments which place you squarely on the spot. They test your sincerity, your courage, your independence. Here is your opportunity to take a long, long step to free all political parties from the domination of labor racketeers.

The whole record is here. As I understand it, corporations are now limited in the amount which they may contribute, and we propose in this bill to liimt the contributions of individuals. Why not limit the contributions of labor organizations, which are making politics a part of their business? [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendments again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Clerk will again report the amendments offered by the gentleman from Michigan, which will be considered en bloc.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOFFMAN) there were—ayes 50, noes 86.

So the amendments were rejected.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAMSPECK: On page 19, line 10, after the period, insert:

"The Civil Service Commission shall have power to require by subpena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all documentary evidence relating to any matter pending before the Commission. Any member of the Commission may sign subpenas, and members of the Commission and its examiners when authorized by the Commission may administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses, and receive evidence.

"Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such documentary evidence may be required from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing. In case of disobedience to a subpena, the Commission may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence.

"Any of the district courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpena issued to any person, issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Commission, or to produce documentary evidence if so ordered, or to give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

"The Commission may order testimony to be taken by deposition in any proceeding or investigation pending before the Commission at any stage of such proceeding or investigation. Such depositions may be taken before any person, designated by the Commission and having power to administer oaths. Such testimony shall be reduced to writing by the person taking the deposition, or under his direction, and shall then be subscribed by the deponent. Any person may be compelled to appear and depose and to produce documentary evidence before the Commission as hereinbefore provided.

"No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing documentary evidence or in obedience to a subpena on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is compelled to testify, or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, before the Commission in obedience to a subpena issued by it: Provided, That no person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying."

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. As near as I can gather from the reading of the amendment, it proposes that the procedure prescribed for, and the powers therein granted to, the Civil Service Commission shall apply generally and without specific limitation to the provisions of the pending bill. I may have misunderstood the reading of the amendment, but that is the way I understood it.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, there is no question about the fact that the authority conferred by this amendment could be used in other matters. It also relates, however, to the investigations and the hearings required to be made by this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question. The first sentence of the amendment reads:

> The Civil Service Commission shall have power to require by subpena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all documentary evidence relating to any matter pending before the Commission.

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is correct, Mr. Chairman. It goes beyong the scope of this bill, but I point out that the Commission is directed in this bill to investigate complaints made under this act; and the purpose of this amendment is to give them the power of subpena, which they do not now have under the civil-service law, to comply with the directions of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas insist upon the point of order?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I am compelled to insist upon the point of order. It may be that this would be proper legislation when properly considered, but to propose an amendment as comprehensive as this without an opportunity on the part of the Members to study it compels me to insist upon the point of order. For this reason alone I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard upon the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman briefly.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I point out to the Chair that for the amendment to be germane to the bill under consideration, the power of subpena given to the Civil Service Commission and the right to invoke the aid of the courts ought to be limited to the matters contained in this bill. I suggest that because it is not so limited, it is not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

The gentleman from Georgia admits that the amendment goes beyond the provisions of the pending bill. The amendment, of course, is not germane for that reason.

The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. DUNCAN: Page 13, line 17, after the word "sections" add a new section to be known as section 12, to read as follows:
> "SEC. 12. No person shall be appointed (1) to any administrative position by the United States or by any department, independent agency, or other agency of the United States (including any corporation, all of the capital stock of which is owned by the United States or any agency thereof), or (2) be appointed to any administrative agency of any State or any of its political subdivisions or municipalities (including any corporation controlled by any State or by any such political subdivision, municipality, or agency, and any corporation, all of the capital stock of which is owned by any State or by any such political subdivisions, municipality, or agency), where the United States contributes any sum, directly or indirectly, toward the payment of the salary of such position, within a period of 18 months after such person shall have been a member of any political committee created pursuant to any provision of law, or of any campaign committee for any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, Member of the House of Representatives, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner from any Territory or insular possessions, or as judge or clerk of election where names of candidates for the above-named offices have been on the ballot used in such election, or any person who shall have contributed any sum or sums in money or in services of value to any political committee, campaign committee, or person who shall be a candidate for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, Member of the House of Representatives, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner from any Territory or insular possessions, or any person who shall have actively campaigned for any person who has been a candidate for any of the above-named offices.
> "Before any person shall be appointed to any position as herein defined such person shall file a statement with the appointing authority, duly verified by affidavit, stating that such person has not been guilty of any of the acts defined herein."

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, when the original Hatch bill was up last year, I contributed my feeble efforts to bring about its defeat. My efforts, of course, did not appeal to anybody. With the collusion of a few Democrats and a lot of Republicans it became a law. At that time I felt it was undemocratic and un-American, and I feel the same way about it today. The amendments to the Hatch Act now before us attempt to bring within its provisions State employees. This is not only undemocratic and un-American but it is unfair and discriminatory; it is an attempt on the part of this Congress to do indirectly what you all know you have no right under the Constitution to do directly. It is an attempt to take away from a small portion of the employees of a State or municipality the rights enjoyed by others getting their salaries from approximately the same source with the exception of a few dollars. I say it is discriminatory because it attempts to abridge the right of these employees to go out and make a speech they may want to make in behalf of a political party or an individual in whom they believe. I believe it is un-American. I believe it is discriminatory because it separates and sets apart a few employees in the State as against others.

When I offered this amendment I wanted to test your good faith. You who are going to vote for this bill, I want to test your sincerity, your honesty of purpose. You say you want clean politics. One of the peculiar things I have observed throughout all the propaganda that has been distributed over this country by a Republican press which wants this bill has been the great cry that it takes politics out of relief. Every man and every woman in this House today knows that in the relief bill passed last year and also in the one passed this year a direct provision was written in taking politics out of relief. No man of you who has any degree of honesty wants to compel any person to contribute to a campaign or to force him to vote other than he wants to, to use coercion. On the other hand, any fair-minded man or woman is not going to attempt to take away from either a Federal or a State employee the right to stand up and advocate the thing or the person they believe in.

I say to you that if it is wrong to play politics from within, it is wrong to play politics from without. Why is it any more of a crime for a man or woman who holds a Government job or State job to go out and defend that job and defend the party or the Government, of which they are a part, than for a man or woman on the other side of the political fence or in the other faction to go out and exert every form of political influence known to politicians to take their job away? I submit to you as fair-minded men and women of this committee that if one is wrong the other is wrong.

Mr. Chairman, these gentlemen over here would not be interested in that, of course, because during the past few weeks after the mushroom grows up, they have gained considerable hope and confidence that they may possibly elect a President of the United States and control this House, but I may say in that connection that sunshine causes mushrooms to wither and die as soon as it hits them. They would not be for anything like this because they want to go out and use every device known to politics in this land, and they are past masters at it, and do all of those things, gather in all the money they can get from the corporations, the Power Trust, and others who are interested in their cause, but they would not be interested in this because those men and women who serve on committees, who go out and make speeches for them, would not be eligible under my amendment to hold office for 18 months after they have gone through the cleansing process, after they have been washed white from all the effects of pernicious political activity. [Applause.]

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DUNCAN].

Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly obvious from the gentleman's remarks that his amendment is not offered in good faith. He offered the amendment, then for 5 minutes proceeded to show us its absurdity. If the amendment should be seriously considered and passed by this Committee it would mean that nobody could ever run for office or accept appointment to any Government position until 18 months after he had ceased all participation in politics. At least, that was the impression I had when I heard the proposed amendment read a moment ago.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is directed to two things. We are trying to stop the misuse of official authority to control the votes of men on the pay roll of the United States and we are trying to save them from being gouged for campaign funds whether local or national. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri is not in accord with the principles of this bill and is not designed to improve it or help it to final passage. I hope you will vote down the ridiculous amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DUNCAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DUNCAN), there were—ayes 44, noes 104.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Virginia: Page 13, line 10, add a new paragraph at the end of section 9 as follows:

"(c) No provision of this act shall prohibit an employee of the Federal Government or any State Government from (1) participation in local elections either individually or as a member of a citizen's association or other civic organization; (2) sponsoring candidates, principles, and improvements for local election or determination at the polls; (3) seeking election to office in the local government."

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, this is a minor amendment to which I hope there will be no opposition. There is no partisanship in it and there are no politics in it. The amendment is offered to correct a wrong that has been inadvertently done people working for the Government who predominate in communities near Washington and elsewhere. They are deprived under the Hatch Act from participation in their local elections. For instance, in some communities there are so many Government employees that unless a Government employee can run for the school board, using that as an example, we are deprived of some of the very best material in that community for our local officials.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think that what the gentleman has in mind has been taken care of in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I will be glad to say why it has not been taken care of in the bill. The provision in the bill which is designed to take care of this situation does not, as a matter of fact, take care of it because it leaves these people at the mercy of the Civil Service Commission. They cannot participate unless they are exempted by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Has that not been the condition for many years and have they not by Executive order done the very thing that this bill states they can do?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I want to correct that condition.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman's amendment, however, is not limited to Washington and its environs?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It applies all over the country.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is the danger of the second proviso of the gentleman's amendment. Let us take a local election involving a county judge who appoints the members of the election board and those who serve as judges and clerks of election. What you do is to contribute to the setting up of a political machine that may affect the result of a Federal election. That is exactly what it will do in every metropolitan center in the country.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. There are not enough Government employees in the sections to which the gentleman refers to have that effect.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Contrary to the observation of the gentleman from Illinois, most of the people the gentleman seeks to aid are individuals who serve at a sacrifice. There is no salary attached in most instances?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. They are practically all nonsalaried positions. We are in that situation where the very best material in communities in the neighborhood of Washington do not have the opportunity to participate in their local affairs.

I am told that a condition like that prevails in Boulder City, which is a city of something like 5,000 population, where practically all the residents are Federal employees. How are they going to elect their local officials? How are they going to get their best people to serve if their best people are disfranchised and prohibited from serving their communities under the provisions of the Hatch Act?

Now, going back to the civil-service proposition, here is what happened under the civil service. It used to be that the Civil Service Commission, if it saw fit, could grant that relief to communities. I had this experience. I presented the same proposition from Arlington County and from the city of Alexandria at the same time, under the same conditions, and with the same argument, and asked for the same relief. They granted it in Arlington County and refused it in the city of Alexandria. We just do not want to be left under any such arbitrary situation as that.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. After next January we will have a new Civil Service Commission, which will not function the way the gentleman described.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I have served with them in both Democratic and Republican administrations, and I do not see much difference. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I trust this amendment will not be adopted. Part of the amendment is bad, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]. The net result would be that it would allow people under this act to participate in city elections all over the country. The good part of the gentleman's amendment is already in the bill, in section 16. Similar provisions have heretofore been enforced by the Civil Service Commission, and they have been made to apply to towns in Maryland and Virginia such as Takoma Park, Kensington, Garrett Park, and so forth.

There is an additional provision in the bill to which I refer you, section 18, which would allow employees covered by this act to participate in some local matter pertaining strictly and entirely to their own municipality, and which was not and could not be hooked up to partisan Democratic or partisan Republican politics. For that reason, I trust that this amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. What suggestion does the gentleman make for relief under the situation I mentioned, where the same proposition is presented to the Civil Service Commission for two communities at the same time and one is granted and the other is refused? In other words, you leave it in the hands of an arbitrary body to determine the very vital rights of these citizens.

Mr. GWYNNE. The law is adequate. If the operation of the law by some commission is not fair and just, that is something else again.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes; but why should the Civil Service Commission have anything to do with the exercise of people's political rights? That is not what the Civil Service Commission was set up for.

Mr. GWYNNE. If we adopt the amendment the gentleman offers it will simply mean that a large part of the operation of this bill throughout the country will be seriously interfered with.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Just specify how this amendment will hurt your bill. How is it going to hurt your bill? There is nothing partisan about it and it affects a very few people, except in the area next to Washington. How is it going to hurt your bill? Just specify.

Mr. GWYNNE. If I understood the amendment correctly, it is not restricted to municipalities adjoining Washington.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. It is not confined to them, but I would be glad to accept an amendment that would confine it to them.

Mr. GWYNNE. I understand it applies all over the country, which is, as I say, the bad part of the amendment.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. Would the gentleman be willing to grant rights to the people of Maryland and Virginia that he would deny to the people of Iowa and Illinois?

Mr. GWYNNE. No. Of course, we realize, and the bill realizes it, too, that there are some small communities around Washington where the population is made up almost entirely of people working for the Government, and necessity compels the making of an exception there so that these people may manage their own little city. That is taken care of in the bill.

Mr. KELLER. Why not give that same right to the people of Iowa, Illinois, Kentucky, and the rest of the States?

Mr. GWYNNE. Because the fundamental purpose of this bill is to keep these employees out of partisan politics.

Mr. KELLER. Out of national, but not out of local politics, surely.

Mr. GWYNNE. No. In that connection I call the attention of the gentleman to section 18 of the bill, which gives the citizens of any town the right to participate in those things which are strictly local and strictly municipal, but they cannot be mixed up in partisan matters.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The answer to the gentleman from Illinois as to whether an exception ought to be made is simply this: We already make a constitutional exception in the case of the people of the city of Washington, and do not even give them the right to vote. That is the answer, certainly.

Mr. KELLER. That is not the question here at all.

Mr. DIRKSEN. You are simply adding one more exception here to an exception that already constitutionally exists.

Mr. KELLER. Is the gentleman willing to deny it to Illinois?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would just as leave resist that provision as any other.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SMITH of Virginia) there were—ayes 43, noes 112.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAVENNER: Page 21, after line 7, insert: "It is further declared to be a pernicious political activity, and it shall hereafter be unlawful for any officer, employee, or agency of a public-utility holding company registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission under the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, or of any subsidiary company thereof, to contribute any money derived either directly or indirectly from payments made by rate payers for public-utility services to any candidate for an elective Federal office (including the offices of President of the United States and Presidential and Vice Presidential electors) or to any representative or agent of such a candidate, or to any political party, political committee, or other political organization engaged in furthering, advocating, or advancing the nomination or election of any candidate for such office, or the success of any national political party."

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would specifically prohibit the expenditure of moneys collected from the ratepayers of America by public-utility corporations for the purpose of influencing elections.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAVENNER. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK. Are not the contents of the gentleman's amendment already the law of the land?

Mr. HAVENNER. I do not think so.

Mr. HANCOCK. Corporations are now prohibited from making campaign contributions.

Mr. HAVENNER. I will say to the gentleman that I have tried very earnestly since I have been a Member of Congress to find some statute of this kind that was effective and I have been unable to find one.

Mr. HANCOCK. I would suggest the gentleman read the Corrupt Practices Act and certain sections of the penal statutes, beginning at section 208.

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, I am convinced that there is not now statutory authority to carry out the purpose of the amendment which I have offered.

The amendment, Mr. Chairman, strikes at the greatest source of political corruption in the history of modern government. If we prohibit, by law, the expenditure of public-utility funds for political purposes, we shall have taken the greatest step ever taken toward the ideal of purity of elections. There is nothing so repugnant to the American sense of decency as the outrageous expenditure of the money collected from the people of America for light, heat, and water, and the necessities of life in order to control the Government of this Nation. As one distinguished American statesman said not many years ago—and incidentally he was a member of the minority party here today, the public utility corporations are picking the people's pockets to poison their minds.

This amendment will outlaw this pernicious practice and I urge its adoption, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HAVENNER) there were—ayes 59, noes 109.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DINGELL: Page 26, line 3, after the word "violation", insert a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 21. Nothing in this act shall be construed as in any way affecting educational, religious, eleemosynary, philanthropic, or cultural institutions, establishments, and agencies, together with the officers and employees thereof."

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer what is known as the Brown amendment, and which was adopted in the Senate. It aims primarily to protect academic freedom and to eliminate any interference with certain schools and land-grant colleges. I think the so-called Brown amendment has much merit. Many of our schools and universities which directly or indirectly receive a certain amount of Federal money are apt to be jeopardized by the mere expression of some underling connected with the school or university. I think it is a very dangerous situation to contemplate. I think that this amendment, without much ado or discussion, ought to be agreed upon because there is no harm in it, and I can see much good. I am sorry that I have not the time to make any lengthy reference, such as is contained in Senator BROWN'S discourse delivered on the floor of the Senate, but I would refer Members to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 2621, which illustrates very graphically and clearly the merits of this amendment. I think that the school teachers in every city and town in every State in the Union will be proscribed from inculcating or teaching political economy. Their expressions may be misinterpreted and they might be charged with partisanship or pernicious political activity and the school or university to which they are attached penalized by the loss of its grant from the Federal Government. There is nothing partisan in my amendment, and I think both sides of the aisle could very well afford to restore this provision to the bill. Without this amendment the teachers of America in certain schools face a restriction which is tantamount to "muzzling." It is the first step toward applying shackles to our educational freedom. To me it is as important as the freedom of speech and of the press.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. Gladly, to my friend from Utah.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Merely to make the suggestion that I think the amendment is a very meritorious one and should be adopted.

Mr. DINGELL. I thank the gentleman for his valuable opinion.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, this amendment was considered in the committee and rejected. There is no more reason why the teachers and the preachers and the social workers of this country, living wholly or partly on Federal funds, should be allowed to engage in pernicious political practices than why anybody else should. As a matter of fact, I think there are very strong reasons for providing safeguards to protect our children in the Sunday schools and in the public schools and institutions from political indoctrination. The bill will not interfere with the teaching of economics, unless the professor becomes active in a political campaign and his "economics" become stump speeches. The proposed amendment was rejected almost unanimously by the committee and it ought to be turned down here.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SASSCER] has an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SASSCER to S. 3046: Strike out all of section 16, on page 22, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 22. By reason of special or unusual circumstances which exist in incorporated cities, towns, and villages, any part of which is within 50 miles of the District of Columbia line, no provision of this act shall prohibit any employee of the Government of the United States or the District of Columbia, or any other person to whom this act is applicable residing in such city, town, or village, from taking part in political management or in political campaigns involving such city, town, or village, nor from holding office in said city, town, or village: Provided, That the compensation from said municipal office shall not be in excess of $600 per annum."

Mr. SASSCER. Mr. Chairman, I rise with as much sincerity in respect to this amendment as anyone who has ever addressed this House. I ask you to give me your attention for a moment, and I shall briefly explain. When the last Hatch Act was passed, it was not intended that it should apply to small municipalities here close to the District of Columbia, or in fact possibly anywhere where the officers serve with little or no compensation. A situation arises which is crucial and critical to the environments of Washington, where these towns—some of them—have 80 or 85 percent of their citizens made up of Federal employees. Therefore, in order to correct that situation the author and sponsors and those in favor of the bill, realizing that a peculiar situation existed in these localities, wrote section 15 into the act, which permits the people in those towns who work in the Government, to serve their little communities after they get home at night, in most instances, without compensation.

This amendment merely does two things. We have in the bill established the policy of exempting these small communities which are made up, as I said, practically of Government employees who serve for nothing. The bill, however, leaves it to the discretion of the Civil Service Commission. All I am asking the House to do is to do all the way what you partially do in the bill. Instead of leaving it to the discretion of the Civil Service Commission to determine what is the immediate vicinity of Washington, or leaving it to the Civil Service Commission to decide whether special or unusual circumstances exist, and promulgate rules in connection with the elections in these 24 little towns adjacent to Washington, to just exempt them all the way, as you intended to do under the original Hatch Act.

The difference between my amendment and that of my colleague from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] is simply this: It meets the objection made that it is Nation-wide in its scope and may get into a big city political machine. I put 50 miles in the amendment because on the water front in lower Maryland there is one particular case that is involved. The distinguished physician of this House, Dr. Calver, is mayor of that town. There are numerous other instances of fine public servants, who, on account of the pernicious activity phase of the Hatch Act, which did not intend to go that far, had to resign and could not serve their towns for nothing. So I am simply asking to do all the way what you partially do in section 15, and not leave it to the discretion of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SASSCER. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The limitation of 50 miles, which the gentleman carries in his amendment, would extend beyond the environs of Baltimore. Is there any reason why it should be more than 25 miles to reach these towns that are predominantly made up of Government employees?

Mr. SASSCER. I am willing to make it 40 miles. North Beach, the town to which I had reference, is probably 30 miles away.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Of course you could not reach everywhere.

Mr. SASSCER. Baltimore City would not be under this amendment, because we say where the compensation is under $600 for the office. I am willing to make it 40 miles.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SASSCER. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. Sections 15 and 16 were inserted in this bill at the request of the United States Senators from Maryland to meet the situation the gentleman has described here. I understand this language is entirely adequate to meet that situation.

Mr. SASSCER. It is adequate, with this exception, that it leaves to the Civil Service Commission to decide whether unusual circumstances exist, and it does not define what is "the immediate environs of Washington." Chicago is close to Washington as compared with California. North Beach, 30 miles away, may be not in the immediate environs compared to Hyattsville. We are not in any particular controversy. I think everybody is in accord. I am just asking to do what we are intending to do and not leave it to the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to strike out "50 miles" and insert "40 miles."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SASSCER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SASSCER) there were ayes 76 and noes 119.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAMSPECK: On page 19, line 10, after the period, insert:

"The Civil Service Commission shall have power to require by subpena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all documentary evidence relating to any matter pending, as a result of this act, before the Commission. Any member of the Commission may sign subpenas, and members of the Commission and its examiners, when authorized by the Commission, may administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses, and receive evidence.

"Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such documentary evidence may be required from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing. In case of disobedience to a subpena, the Commission may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence.

"Any of the district courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpena issued to any person, issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Commission, or to produce documentary evidence if so ordered, or to give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

"The Commission may order testimony to be taken by deposition in any proceeding or investigation which, as a result of this act, is pending before the Commission at any stage of such proceeding or investigation. Such depositions may be taken before any person designated by the Commission and having power to administer oaths. Such testimony shall be reduced to writing by the person taking the deposition, or under his direction, and shall then be subscribed by the deponent. Any person may be compelled to appear and depose and to produce documentary evidence before the Commission as hereinbefore provided.

"No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing documentary evidence or in obedience to a subpena on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is compelled to testify, or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, before the Commission in obedience to a subpena issued by it: Provided, That no person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying."

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a word about this. The Civil Service Commission, under this law, is charged with an enforcement job which they did not seek and do not crave; but they have no power of subpena, and if you want them to do the job under this act they must have power. It is now limited to things arising under this act, and gives them the power to subpena persons and documents so that they can get evidence relating to violations that are charged.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCCORMACK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939. Pursuant to House Resolution 514 he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BALL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. BALL. I am.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman qualifies. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BALL moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SUMNERS of Texas) there were—ayes 103, noes 182.

So the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, on the passage of the bill I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 243, nays 122, not voting 66, as follows:

Mr. CARTWRIGHT changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MCKEOUGH, was unavoidably detained. Had he been here, he would have voted "nay" on the bill just passed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 86

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, July 11, 1940, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, Monday, July 22, 1940.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

CLERK OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 552

Resolved, That notwithstanding the recess or the adjournment of the House until July 22, 1940, the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized to receive messages from the Senate, and the Speaker be, and he is hereby, authorized to sign any enrolled bills or joint resolutions duly passed by the two Houses and which have been examined by the Committee on Enrolled Bills and found truly enrolled.

The resolution was agreed to.

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER. The Chair designates the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] to preside over the House tomorrow as Speaker pro tempore.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a resolution I introduced in the House today.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a resolution by the National Guard Association of Connecticut.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MCGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address by Hon. Francis Biddle, Solicitor General of the United States, before the Philadelphia Forum on March 7 this year entitled "America's Maturity."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short article from today's Washington Times-Herald entitled "Britons Call Americans Yellow."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PROGRAM FOR TOMORROW

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute, to make an inquiry of the majority leader.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, there has been considerable questioning as to what the program will be for tomorrow. The membership would like to know what we have scheduled.

Mr. RAYBURN. There will be a bill from the Appropriations Committee making an appropriation for an additional dam in the Tennessee Valley.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It has been definitely determined to call that up?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I understood there was some opposition to that matter.

Mr. RAYBURN. My first impression was it was going to be unanimous, but I think some opposition has developed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The bill is going to be called up.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Would it be possible to have that go over until the 30th?

Mr. RAYBURN. May I make this statement to the gentleman. I sat in the hearings on this bill yesterday for awhile. Mr. Knudsen, Mr. Stettinius, and Mr. Dunn, who is one of the great electrical engineers of the country, and who had a great deal to do with the Tennessee Valley Authority, usually in opposition to it, were present, and they made the statement, as I remember, and I can be corrected by the gentleman from Virginia or by the gentleman from New York if I am in error, that it was one of the most essential links in our whole defense program, that it was vitally necessary that additional power be had at the earliest possible moment in order to manufacture aluminum to build airplanes.

Further, it was stated that days count, and that it would take until the winter or early in 1942 to finish it. It was stated that it is essential to be finished by that time in order to catch the spring flood.

Those are some of the arguments of the defense council for the bill and its early consideration. They stated that even 90 days' delay in the passage of the bill might delay the whole project for 12 months.

Mr. FADDIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FADDIS. Where does the Appropriation Committee at this time get the authorization or legislation necessary to bring this matter out?

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman will have to ask the gentleman from Virginia or some member of the Appropriations Committee. I assume it has the authority to make this appropriation or they would not have done it.

Mr. TABER. I do not believe there is any authority for the steam plant which is proposed.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman does not know absolutely?

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, those matters might well be threshed out tomorrow.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a little more information from the majority leader. Does the bill that will come before us tomorrow provide for steam plants in the T. V. A. or does it cover only an additional dam?

Mr. RAYBURN. It is an additional dam.

Mr. TABER. Both. It provides for a dam on the Holston River and for a steam plant to produce 120,000 kilowatts, the idea being to take care of the peak loads so that the dry seasons will not affect them and they will have adequate power.

Mr. KNUTSON. I will go into that tomorrow.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SNYDER, Mr. HOFFMAN, and Mr. GRANT of Alabama asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GIBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a resolution from an American Legion post in Georgia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GIBBS]?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, the warning bell in the corridor in which my office is located being out of order, I did not have sufficient time to get here to vote on the Hatch bill. Had I been present I would have voted yea.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from New York, Mr. CELLER, has asked me to announce that he is ill in New York and unable to be present. If present, he would have voted in the affirmative on the Hatch bill.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Washington, Mr. MAGNUSON, is unavoidably absent. If present, he would have voted "yea" on the Hatch bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DINGELL asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from a labor union in my district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs may be permitted to sit during the session of the House tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

REGISTRATION AND REGULATION OF INVESTMENT COMPANIES AND INVESTMENT ADVISERS

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 553

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 10065, a bill to provide for the registration and regulation of investment companies and investment advisers, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article by the Aviation Defense Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein two brief statements relative to highways.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

ANTAL OR ANTHONY OR TONY ZAICEK OR ZAICZEK

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and by instruction of that committee, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6056) for the relief of Antal or Anthony or Tony Zaicek or Zaiczek, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Line 9, strike out all after "warrant" down to and including "States" in line 11.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. LESINSKI. I will make an explanation to the House, if I may, Mr. Speaker.

This is a bill to allow an alien to stay permanently in the United States. The bill was reported out by the committee, passed by the House, and passed by the Senate.

In the House an amendment was added that the alien could never become a citizen. The Senate struck out that amendment. This request is to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What was the reason the House adopted the amendment in the first place?

Mr. LESINSKI. Some gentleman inserted an amendment in the bill, as, of course, he has a right to do if the House agrees to it. There is no argument about that.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe this matter should be brought up at this time. I must ask that the request be withdrawn.

Mr. POAGE. I withdraw the request, Mr. Speaker.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein certain official tables.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in the remarks I made in Committee of the Whole certain tables and a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include a letter by our colleague the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER] on the subject of do Congressmen pay taxes. I further ask unanimous consent to include in another extension of my remarks a short editorial from the Pontiac Daily Press, in my congressional district, entitled, "Ambition Which Didn't Quibble."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a table on our trade with South America.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein the words of an exceptionally fine song entitled "God Keep America," which was written and composed by Martin Brandon, J. V. DeCimber, and Woody Dreyfuss, program director of radio station WISN, of Milwaukee, Wis.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. SPRINGER, who was called home today on account of the serious illness of his mother, thus missing his first roll call in 2 years, has asked me to announce that had he been here he would have voted "yea" on the passage of the bill under consideration today.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'LEARY] for 1 week to act as chairman of the Democratic organization of Richmond County, N. Y., for Red Cross drive.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 29. An act to authorize the use of certain facilities of Indian reservations, national parks, and national monuments for elementary school purposes.

S. 2018. An act for the relief of Nile Shaw and Edgar C. Bardin.

S. 3131. An act to extend the benefits of the United States Employees' Compensation Act to members of the Officers' Reserve Corps and of the Enlisted Reserve Corps of the Army who were physically injured in line of duty while performing active duty or engaged in authorized training between dates of February 28, 1925, and July 15, 1939, both inclusive, and for other purposes.

S. J. Res. 283. Joint resolution authorizing Col. Donald H. Connolly to hold the office of Administrator of Civil Aeronautics in the Department of Commerce.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, July 11, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House at 10 a. m., Thursday, July 25, 1940, for the consideration of H. R. 10092, relative to the use of laid-up fleet for export of certain commodities.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JULY 11, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, July 8, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Duncan Fraser, assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the Supreme Governor of all things, whose power no creature is able to resist, to whom it belongeth justly to punish and to show mercy, save and deliver us, we humbly beseech Thee, from the hands of all enemies of this Nation, that we, being armed with Thy defense, may be preserved evermore from all perils from within and without, to glorify Thee, who art the only giver of all victory. Through the merits of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Wednesday, July 10, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 582) making an appropriation to enable the United States Maritime Commission to establish the marine and war risk insurance fund, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 86), in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, July 11, 1940, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, Monday, July 22, 1940.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 29. An act to authorize the use of certain facilities of Indian reservations, national parks, and national monuments for elementary-school purposes;

S. 2018. An act for the relief of Nile Shaw and Edgar C. Bardin; and

S. 3131. An act to extend the benefits of the United States Employees' Compensation Act to members of the Officers' Reserve Corps and of the Enlisted Reserve Corps of the Army who were physically injured in line of duty while performing active duty or engaged in authorized training between dates of February 28, 1925, and July 15, 1939, both inclusive, and for other purposes.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 582) making an appropriation to enable the United States Maritime Commission to establish the marine and war risk insurance fund was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PRINTING OF PROCEEDINGS AT UNVEILING OF PAINTING DEPICTING SIGNING OF CONSTITUTION

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution coming over from the House of Representatives, to which he invites the attention of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 73), as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the proceedings held in the rotunda of the United States Capitol at the unveiling of the painting depicting the scene of the signing of the Constitution of the United States be printed, with illustrations, in such form and style as may be directed by the Joint Committee on Printing, as a House document; and that 500,000 copies be printed, of which 125,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 375,000 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HAYDEN. I move that the Senate concur in the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF BENEFITS OF EMERGENCY OFFICERS' RETIREMENT ACT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 458) extending the benefits of the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act of May 24, 1928, to provisional, probationary, or temporary officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard who served during the World War, which was, on page 1, line 3, to strike out all after "1928", down to and including "War", in line 9, and insert "(Public, Numbered 506, Seventieth Congress), subject to the limitations contained in section 10 of the act of March 20, 1933 (Public, Numbered 2, Seventy-third Congress) as now or hereafter amended."

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that an explanation of the measure be placed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the explanation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WORLD WAR PROVISIONAL OFFICERS (S. 458)

Synopsis of pertinent facts as shown in the pamphlet or Senate Military Committee print—"World War Provisional Officers," April 7, 1939, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session

Prior to our entry into the World War the Government contemplated the emergency expansion of our armed forces. For this purpose ranks of provisional officers in the Army, probationary officers in the Marine Corps, and temporary officers in the Navy were created. By the words used in designating such commissions, it is indicated that they were created because of and for the duration of the emergency. Later, the more general designation of emergency officer was adopted.

These men were among the first to volunteer for military service when this country entered the war. Yet this eagerness to serve, later resulted in certain legal penalties to the extent that there are still approximately 10 of these disabled former officers who are barred from the retirement facilities of either regular or emergency officers. On the other hand, they are also barred from the status of an enlisted man, all of whom received adjusted-compensation certificates as a result of World War service.

After they had left the service, disabled emergency officers were provided retirement by Congress, in the Disabled Emergency Officer's Retirement Act of May 24, 1928. But on February 28, 1929, the Comptroller General denied provisional, probationary, and temporary officers who were disabled in the service, any benefits under this act, when he ruled that they had not served as emergency officers.

The actual evidence now available in the Senate pamphlet, however, indicates that they were in fact, officers for the "duration of the emergency," and that they so considered themselves. The majority of them never applied for nor received permanent commissions in the Regular Establishment. Specific details are in following pages.

Congress has recognized the need for corrective legislation. And S. 458, for this purpose, has been sponsored in the Senate by Senator MORRIS SHEPPARD, chairman of the Committee for Military Affairs. In the House it was sponsored by Representative DOW HARTER, chairman of the Subcommittee on Retirements in the Committee on Military Affairs.

At the public hearing on S. 458, in the above-mentioned Subcommittee on Retirements, June 18, 1940, Edward E. Odom, solicitor, and representative of the Veterans' Administration, included the following in his testimony: "It is the present opinion of the Administrator that these disabled officers should be entitled to the same treatment or benefits accorded other disabled (emergency) officers. It effects about 10 men, at a cost of $6,000 yearly."

In conclusion, regardless of technicalities, reasonable fairness provides hope that these few disabled former provisionals will be entitled to the same treatment accorded other disabled officers of the World War. Otherwise it would seem to be a rather doubtful example for those who should respond to the call of the President, and volunteer, in the present emergency resulting from the second World War. A humane and analytical study of the facts is welcomed, to reveal the inherent justice of this legislation.

CONGRESS CREATES RANK OF PROVISIONAL OFFICER

The War Department contemplated the rapid expansion of our armed forces prior to our entrance into the World War. Accodingly, Congress passed the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916 (39 Stat. 181), which provided for the commissioning of provisional second lieutenants, whether the War Department then considered these provisionals as part of the emergency forces, or an integral part of the permanent Regular Establishment, seems to have been indicated by the subsequent rulings of the Judge Advocate General on May 31, 1917, and December 6, 1917. "There is no authority in law for the retirement of a provisional second lieutenant found incapacitated for service by reason of a disability incurred in the line of duty." There were also doubts as to the promotion of these officers, as evidenced by a memorandum to the Chief of Staff, August 27, 1917, the first paragraph of which follows: "This office is asked for its opinion as to whether there is any legal objection to approving the proposal contained in the following: The Secretary of War directs that no vacancy occurring in the grade of captain in the line of the Army be filled by the promotion of a provisional first lieutenant so long as there are first lieutenants in some other arm of the line who desire to transfer. Opportunity to transfer should be first offered to first lieutenants in order of length of commissioned service." This was changed later.

ORIGINAL COMMISSIONS MODIFIED BY LAW

The above conditions under the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, were modified in the Selective Draft Act of May 18, 1917 (40 Stat. 76), and July 9, 1918 (40 Stat. 852). But 1 month later, General Order 73, War Department, August 7, 1918, states in paragraph 4: "And hereafter during the period of the existing emergency provisional and temporary appointments in the grade of second lieutenant and temporary promotions in the Regular Army will be discontinued." The act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 771), officially confirmed the foregoing discontinuance of any further provisional appointments or retirements. And the Judge Advocate General had ruled that they may not be retired upon an application made after leaving the service. In comparison with the foregoing, Congress did provide for disabled emergency officers after they had left the service, in the Disabled Emergency Officer's Retirement Act of May 24, 1928. But on February 28, 1929, the Comptroller General denied disabled provisional officers the benefits of this act when he held that provisionals had not served as emergency officers.

COMPARISON OF PROVISIONAL AND EMERGENCY STATUS

The actual evidence now available, however, indicates that provisionals were in fact "officers for the duration of the emergency," and that they so considered themselves. The majority of them never applied for nor received permanent commissions in the Regular Army.

On page 20 of the Senate pamphlet, the Veterans' Administration shows that of the total number of provisional officers commissioned after the declaration of war, 3,167 came from civil life, and 2,744 were separated from the Service prior to January 1, 1922. In fact, 75 percent of these left in 1919, as soon after the emergency as practical.

Ninety-five percent of them gave as their reasons, "desire to reenter school or college; desire to take up a profession; desire to reenter business."

The facts show that they did not "consider the Army as their career."

After we had entered the war they were concerned only with the representations that it was "an honor to obtain a provisional commission," and that they would "get active combat service in France sooner."

As to certain indefinite "advantages of provisional officers" frequently quoted in the past, the evidence indicates not only disadvantages but, in some cases, penalties for those who were so eager as to volunteer for this type of commission at the beginning of the World War.

1. As the terms implied, these commissions were definitely provisional, probationary, or temporary. They could be and, in fact, were, terminated as promptly as that of any other emergency officer, if he did not in a positive manner "demonstrate satisfactorily his suitability and moral, professional, and physical fitness."

2. The World War actually ended before this conditional or trial period of 2 years had elapsed. Thus the majority of these men had entered and left the service without a permanent commission.

3. They did not have the privilege of retirement facilities under the act of June 3, 1916, after which and prior to July 9, 1918, practically all of the provisionals had been commissioned. Nor did they have the privilege of "6 months' pay to the widow or child, in the case of death." The latter was not enacted until December 17, 1919, when the large majority of the men had returned to civil life.

4. As to approximately 2,200 provisional officers who wished to obtain permanent commissions, there were over 5,000, or two and one-half times more emergency officers who were granted the privilege of permanent commissions in the Regular Establishment. Again, the provisionals who received permanent commissions could do so only by reverting to their lower provisional ranks, 80 percent of which were first and second lieutenants, and none higher than that of captains. But many emergency officers retained their World War rank with permanent commissions, some of them in the grades of captain, major, lieutenant colonel, and colonel. In additional considerations, those under the grade of major were granted adjusted-compensation certificates.

Whereas certificates were issued to some 200 or 300 provisionals in error, and they were required to return the money borrowed on the certificates with interest at 4½ percent compounded yearly.

SUMMARY

Summarizing the foregoing factors, it seems that provisionals were effected adversely either as regular or emergency officers.

For purposes of any benefits as to adjusted compensation or present-day retirement facilities, they were not emergency officers. Yet under the act of June 3, 1916, before it was amended, and during the time most of the provisionals accepted their commissions, they were not regular officers in the legal sense, because they were not entitled to retirement. The act of July 9, 1918, actually changed the legal status of most provisionals after they had accepted their "contracts."

VIEWS OF THE PRESIDENT

It is the mistaken impression of some that the President has disapproved of legislation for provisionals who were disabled in World War service. In S. 3257, Seventy-fourth Congress, and S. 1040, Seventy-fifth Congress, the disapproval of the President concerned the principle of adjusted-compensation certificates for provisionals.

VIEWS OF WORLD WAR OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN

This legislation has been recommended by the American Legion, the Disabled American Veterans, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and other service organizations, by resolutions in their national conventions.

PETITION AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from the Citizens Keep America Out of War Committee, signed by William J. Grace, chairman, Chicago, Ill., praying that the United States keep out of war and that Congress remain in session during the present international crisis, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LODGE presented memorials of 3,000 citizens of Lawrence, Mass., remonstrating against involvement of the United States in the European war, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

RESOLUTIONS OF ORA E. PAUL POST, NO. 24, AMERICAN LEGION, VERMONT, RELATIVE TO ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I ask consent to present resolutions of Ora E. Paul Post, No. 24, American Legion, Department of Vermont, adopted at the last meeting of the post. I ask unanimous consent that the resolutions may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It is hereby resolved by the members of the Ora E. Paul Post, No. 24, of the American Legion, Department of Vermont, that the Congress of the United States should not adjourn, but remain in session during the existence of the present grave international situation, and it be further resolved that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded by our adjutant to each member of our congressional delegation and to the adjutant of the Department of Vermont.

RESOLUTION OF NATIONAL AUXILIARY, UNITED SPANISH WAR VETERANS, UTAH—SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES IN THE NATION

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a letter which I have received from a patriotic organization in my State known as the National Auxiliary, United Spanish War Veterans, Department of Utah, of Salt Lake City, setting out a copy of a resolution adopted at their annual convention.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL AUXILIARY,
UNITED SPANISH WAR VETERANS,
DEPARTMENT OF UTAH,
Salt Lake City, Utah, July 1, 1940.

Hon. WILLIAM H. KING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The following is a copy of our resolution adopted at our annual convention:

"Be it resolved by the Department of Utah, Auxiliaries to the United Spanish War Veterans, in convention assembled at Provo,

Utah, June 15, 1940: That we renew our allegiance to the United States of America and will support, obey, and defend the Constitution of the United States.

"That we wish to go on record as opposed to any and all un-American activities.

"That we favor the enactment of such laws as will control subversive activities of aliens by deportation or otherwise.

"That this resolution be spread upon the minutes of this convention and a copy be sent to the Utah Senators and Representatives."

Respectfully submitted.

MRS. D. M. KEMP,
Department President.

Attest:

ELSIE L. AUSTIN,
Department Secretary.

REPORT OF THE APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE—TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Under authority of the order of the 10th instant,

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 285) making an additional appropriation for the Tennessee Valley Authority for the fiscal year 1941 to provide facilities to expedite the national defense, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1953) thereon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6823) for the relief of Wilson A. Kramer, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1954) thereon.

Mr. OVERTON, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 582) making an appropriation to enable the United States Maritime Commission to establish the marine and war risk insurance fund, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1955) thereon.

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2691) to designate the week of October 9 to October 16 each year as National American-Scandinavian Educational Week, reported it with amendments.

Mr. BYRNES, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 277) increasing the expenditures and directing the filing of its report and recommendations in the matter of the investigation of the conservation of wild-animal life, reported it with an amendment.

REPORTS ON DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

Mr. BARKLEY, from the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers, to which were referred, for examination and recommendation, 35 lists of records transmitted to the Senate by the Archivist of the United States, which appeared to have no permanent value or historical interest, submitted reports thereon pursuant to law.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

On July 10, 1940:

S. 3676. An act to withdraw certain portions of land within the Hawaii National Park and to transfer the same to the jurisdiction and control of the Secretary of War for military purposes;

S. 2717. An act for the relief of Edward J. Broggi;

S. 3870. An act to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to furnish Potomac water without charge to charitable institutions, etc., in the District of Columbia," approved February 23, 1905; and

S. 3720. An act to create and establish a Board of Funeral Directors and Embalmers for the District of Columbia and to prescribe its powers and duties.

On July 11, 1940:

S. J. Res. 283. Joint resolution authorizing Col. Donald H. Connolly to hold the office of Administrator of Civil Aeronautics in the Department of Commerce.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON CONSERVATION OF WILDLIFE RESOURCES—LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Resolution 277, which was reported a little earlier today from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with an amendment.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 277) increasing the expenditures and directing the filing of report and recommendations in the matter of the investigation of the conservation of wild-animal life, which had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with an amendment.

The amendment was, in line 5, before the words "in addition to", to strike out "$6,000" and insert "$5,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the special committee authorized and directed by Senate Resolution 246, agreed to April 17, 1930, to investigate the conservation of wild-animal life, hereby is authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate, in furtherance of such purposes, $5,000 in addition to the amounts heretofore authorized for such purposes; and the said committee is hereby directed to file with the Senate as soon as practicable its report and recommendations.

WAR AND THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I desire to call attention of the Senate briefly to some of the appeals I have received in my mail in the past few days.

From my good friend John Vesecky, of Salina, Kans., national president of the Farmers Union, I received a six-point program which I intend to place in the RECORD for the information of the Senate. Mr. Vesecky, speaking for the Farmers Union, holds that a balance between agriculture and industry should be part of any national-defense program.

"The American farmer is ready to defend his home and country with his life," says Mr. Vesecky, "but the homes and country must be ours to defend and enjoy."

Through most of my correspondence these days runs the main thought that Congress should stay in session during this emergency, and that the national-defense program should not include sending American boys and young men overseas to fight in a European war. I am glad to note that President Roosevelt finally has come to this conclusion, as indicated in his message to the Congress on Wednesday. I hope he will steadfastly maintain that position. Speaking for myself, let me say once more that I shall continue to do everything I can to keep the United States out of Europe's conflicts. I will not vote to send American boys across the seas to fight in foreign wars. Furthermore, I am strong for a tax program that will protect the American people against the war profiteers. We must make it impossible to create millionaire profiteers in this war, as was done in the World War.

I am strong for President Roosevelt's national-defense program. However, I find very strong disapproval of the idea of compulsory military service in time of peace. The selective-service draft in time of war is recognized as fair and equitable and necessary; but, as I say, I find a great deal of opposition to compulsory military service in time of peace. I might add that I feel the same way about the matter. Why turn this country into an armed camp? Is it necessary for us to import the Hitler system into America?

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, as part of my remarks, a few typical letters, resolutions, and so forth, I have received from Kansas groups who are deeply interested in the subject of war and national defense.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

FARMERS UNION PRESENTS SIX-POINT PROGRAM TO REPUBLICAN CONVENTION

Presenting the statement of the National Farmers Union to the resolutions committee of the Republican convention, President John Vesecky outlined a six-point program for the preservation of the family-sized farms.

"We believe that in a country such as ours it is a disgrace and a crime to compel any class of our citizens to supply the necessities of life to other classes at less than parity or the cost of producing such necessities," said Mr. Vesecky. "Our farm program should be so amended as to give our farmers their fair share of the national income and, as far as possible, to do this without recourse to annual appropriations."

The six-point program called for:

1. Rehabilitation of down-and-out farmers; strengthening of the Farm Security Administration with ample funds for the Tenant Purchase Division.
2. Debt adjustment and refinancing.
3. Income certificate domestic-allotment plan legislation.
4. Extension of surplus-removal program.
5. Fullest assistance to our farmers, especially the low-income farmers, for building sound cooperatives.
6. Antiwar; "opposed to sending our boys across the ocean to fight in foreign wars."

He added that "any workable plan of national defense must take into consideration the necessity of giving our people security in their homes and in the exercise of their rights and privileges as American citizens. We do not believe that it is necessary nor good policy to curtail needed assistance to the poor and underprivileged on our farms and in our cities in order to make more money available for armaments.

"The American farmer is, as a rule, ready to defend his home and country with his life," said Mr. Vesecky, "but the homes and country must be ours to defend and to enjoy."

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned members of North Wichita Friends Church, are very much concerned about the universal military training bill which is now before Congress. We feel that this marks the spread of militarism and is the beginning of the destruction of democratic ideals in our great and free country. We feel that this program is un-American and unnecessary and has grown out of an unreasoning wave of fear and uncertainty which is sweeping our country. For these reasons we would like to petition you to work against and vote against this bill.

Sincerely,

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE OF THE MENNONITE CHURCH OF NORTH AMERICA,
Newton, Kans., July 1, 1940.

The Honorable ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CAPPER: Lest silence give the impression of indifference, may I say, on behalf of the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America, that we deplore resort to armed violence and are in full accord with your every effort to maintain strict neutrality and good will with regard to warring nations east and west. The Monroe Doctrine must work both ways, otherwise it is doomed.

Further, compulsory military conscription is the acknowledged cornerstone of militarism and dictatorship, hence it is anything but compatible with true liberty and American democracy.

Be assured that we are in full accord with your every effort to promote peace and good will both at home and abroad, and to that Christian end may you have Divine guidance.

Yours very truly,

C. E. KREHBIEL,
Conference President.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Inasmuch as the Senate and House have a bill before them relating to compulsory military training, and whereas we have voluntary training, and inasmuch as this Nation is a democracy and also a Christian nation, and as we do not believe in copying after the Old World: Therefore be it

Resolved, That you use your own influence and the power of your high officials against this bill.

HERMITAGE, MO., June 27, 1940.

Dear Senator CAPPER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

We listen to and enjoy your evening broadcast so much; and whereas the strife and warfare in Europe now threatening to engulf the entire Eastern Hemisphere leads to unsettled conditions, uneasiness, unrest, uncertainty in the Western Hemisphere, and more particularly the United States of America, it now appears that the Government of the United States of America must proceed with all dispatch to prepare for national defense, and at the same time proceed with caution and utmost neutrality, in order that this country may not become involved in this great calamity.

We, the Republican Woman's Club of Hickory County, request that the Congress of the United States remain in session at the Capitol in Washington, D. C., until the crisis is passed. We are writing you at this time to encourage you to live up to the splendid promise you have repeatedly made—that you will not vote to send our boys across to fight Europe's battles again. We wish to impress that Congress should not adjourn but stay on the job and protect us from foreign propaganda. On behalf of the members of our club and due to world conditions and as American citizens and voters of Hickory County, we urge that Congress remain in session as long as there is danger of entanglement in Europe.

We are relying on Congress to keep us away from dictatorship. We feel that our safety lies in our Senators and Representatives. The soldiers and citizens each have an important work to do, but no less and perhaps more important is the work and policy of our Government as formulated by the duly elected representatives, who alone have the constitutional right to vote on the vital issue of war and peace for the United States. We are asking you, and hope we are not intruding on your time by asking you, to please do all you can in our behalf; for if ever Congress is needed in Washington, it surely is now. This is not our war. Please continue to work for the best interest of our fellow countrymen and keep us out of European conflict.

Sincerely yours,

GERTIE LEE WALKER,
Secretary, Hickory County Woman's Republican Club.

LADIES OF THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,
NATIONAL SHRINE COMMISSION,
San Diego, Calif., July 1, 1940.

Hon. Senator CAPPER, M. C.,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Accept sincere congratulations for the firm stand you expressed yesterday in debate, a stand in which so many here in California join you, as opposed to the unrestricted military training of the youth of our country at a time when industry needs the chance to respond to the needs of the hour—production of arms necessary to properly supply the several branches of our national defense. Will be glad at any time to receive copies of your speeches that I may present same to others interested.

Most sincerely yours,

Mrs. CLARA N. SAWYER.

PETITION TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES

Stand firm against all efforts to send American youth to the Old World to fight the battles of foreign nations.

Permit no "loosening up" of the Neutrality Act merely for the benefit of warmongers and profiteers. Enact and enforce adequate legislation to take the profits out of war.

Set our own house in order and rush our program for national defense to completion at the earliest possible moment, but in an honest and businesslike manner.

Stop playing politics and place the welfare of our own beloved country and maintenance of peace within its borders as our first and highest objectives.

LIONS CLUB,
Elkhart, Kans., July 1, 1940.

ELKHART LIONS CLUB RESOLUTIONS

Whereas the slogan of the International Association of Lions Clubs is "Liberty, intelligence, our Nation's safety"; and

Whereas the Lions Club of Elkhart, Kans., is vitally interested in, and deeply concerned for, the safety of the United States of America; and

Whereas the United States of America is now facing the gravest crisis in its existence; and

Whereas there are in the United States of America many subversive factors tending to undermine the Constitution and abrogate the Bill of Rights on which our country was founded; and

Whereas the fundamental principle on which Lionism is founded is our country's security: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Lions Club of Elkhart, Kans., offer our collective and individual service to the proper authority in the United States of America, pledging ourselves to use due diligence in the exercise of our rights and the rights of others under this Constitution and Bill of Rights to the end that subversive elements and influences of agents of foreign powers, paid or otherwise, who are working against our democracy be eradicated; and be it further

Resolved, That the Lions Club of Elkhart, Kans., urge the immediate enactment of such legislation as may be necessary to inflict drastic punishment on any citizen or any alien working in the interest of any foreign power, who may willfully engage in any activity whose purpose is to defeat or overthrow our democratic form of government; and be it further

Resolved, That the Lions Club of Elkhart, Kans., stand resolutely for freedom of speech, freedom of press, freedom of thought, and individual liberty, that to this end we believe in adequate and substantial preparedness, to keep the United States safe in a world being consumed by war; and be it further

Resolved, That the Lions Club of Elkhart, Kans., heartily endorse the work of the Dies congressional investigating committee and the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, and urge that their power be broadened and that ample appropriations be made to enable them to combat all subversive activities, thereby further guaranteeing our Nation's safety; and be it further

Resolved, That duly authenticated copies of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States, to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and each Member of Congress from the State of Kansas.

Signed by the president of the Lions Club of Elkhart, Kans., and attested by the secretary this 1st day of July 1940.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: The board of directors of the Topeka Association of Life Underwriters, in session today, unanimously voted that we go on record urging you to use your influence to keep Congress in session until the state of emergency now existing is in a more settled condition.

Very truly yours,

BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE TOPEKA ASSOCIATION OF LIFE UNDERWRITERS, By ARCH HORTON, President.

THE AMERICAN ARTISTS PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION,
New York City, June 28, 1940.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: We are heartily in accord with the views and stand taken by you and your colleagues, Senators WHEELER, HOLT, LUNDEEN, NYE, SHIPSTEAD, WALSH, CLARK—both CLARKS—BONE, and other great Americans who think in terms of America first, last, and all the time.

We agree with Colonel Lindbergh, the late Gen. Smedley Butler, Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, Rev. Chas. E. Coughlin, Boake Carter, etc.

We must return to a policy of strict neutrality and noninvolvement.

If the President does not want to follow in the footsteps of Woodrow Wilson, he still has time to make his place in history secure by following the able advice of the above Senators.

LOUIS BELMORE.

LAKE CHARLES, LA., June 28, 1940.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: This is simply a letter of appreciation for your sane and altogether wise attitude during the crisis precipitated by the war abroad. Certainly this is the time for calm judgment and sane thinking if we are not to be rushed into war.

There seems to be a growing certainty that President Roosevelt is simply biding his time until after election (if he is reelected) to make an effort to stampede this country into the European war. Of course, I am sure you understand that the war psychology now rampant along the Atlantic coast is not representative of America.

We will continue to rely on you to do all possible to keep this country out of war.

Sincerely yours,

B. BRUMFIELD.

MCPHERSON, KANS., June 17, 1940.

DEAR SIRS: I am opposed to our Government sending our youth to Europe to be slaughtered in trying to settle a European controversy. I am in favor of a program of defense preparedness sufficient to protect us from invasion from any nation. I am willing to make any sacrifice necessary in defense of our flag, our Constitution, our territorial integrity, and our free institutions.

Mrs. Alma Quillen, Mrs. Vendla Larson, Mrs. Grace Wallace, Mrs. Minnie Hultberg, Mrs. Jim Fosha, Mrs. Lillian Tipton, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Parr, E. G. Adams, Mrs. Mabel Irons, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hanley.

M'PHERSON COUNTY COUNCIL OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION, IN COOPERATION WITH THE KANSAS COUNCIL OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

INMAN, KANS, July 3, 1940.

Senator CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: I am sorry to hear that Congress considers to enact a law for conscripted military service of men and women. I am sure you will agree with me that that is not in accordance with the true American spirit of liberty and freedom. I believe that many people in Kansas and elsewhere are opposed to such a program. Personally I believe it to be opposed to religious liberty and Christ's teachings. I urge you to use all your influence against such a program, because such a program has been the downfall of other nations. Also I would urge that Congress does use its influence to end the war in Europe soon in negotiated peace and without further slaughter.

Thank you for your past efforts toward peace and a great American people.

Sincerely,

JOHN E. KAUFMAN.

PHARR, TEX., July 2, 1940.

DEAR MR. CAPPER: Am writing you at this time, of course, like everyone else. We are facing a world crisis; our hearts are heavy. We are with you 100 percent, Mr. CAPPER, in trying to keep us out of war. It surely isn't our war to fight; we took plenty medicine in the World War. When we gave our blood and our money and fought the war for them, all we get back is dirt and criticism, so, Mr. CAPPER, we all hope you will do all in your power to keep this Nation at peace. We are with you 100 percent for peace. Mr. CAPPER, do all you can within your power, which we know you are doing, and keep United States a peaceful nation and not have us drawn in this terrible conflict. So we are with you in this awful fight we must win; our prayers must be answered.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: Last night, I listened with a great deal of interest to the broadcast of the American Forum of the Air, in which you participated.

I wish to commend you, on behalf of the membership of the National Maritime Union, for expressing the sentiments of the vast majority of the American people, in your opposition to the plan for compulsory military training.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH CURRAN, President.

DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned loyal Americans and employees of The Crosby Bros. Co., Topeka, Kans., take this means of expressing to you, our representative in Washington, our hopes and earnest desires as concerns the well-being of our people and the safeguarding of our beloved country in this hour of grave peril to the entire human race.

We ask that you do not vote for a declaration of war except to repel invasion.

Fight with everything at your command for adequate and immediate defense measures.

Vote to keep the Congress in session until we know that this, our country, is safe from all who would seek to destroy it.

CONSTRUCTION OF GRAVING DRYDOCK IN NEW YORK HARBOR

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4165) to provide, in cooperation with the Port of New York Authority, for the construction in New York Harbor of a graving drydock large enough to accommodate the largest naval ships built or building.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is one committee amendment which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 3, after the word "adequate", it is proposed to strike out "size" and insert "site."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I prefer that the bill be not passed without an explanation. Apparently, the Senate is willing and able to pass it; but I desire an explanation of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the bill provides for the construction in New York Harbor of a graving drydock of sufficient size and capacity to accommodate the largest naval or merchant vessels built, building, or proposed.

There are at present only four naval drydocks on the east coast of the United States that can construct or repair a modern 45,000-ton battleship. They are in South Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Norfolk. Only three of these docks can take the proposed 45,000-ton battleships, and the dock at New York is not one of them. South Boston, Philadelphia, and Norfolk have drydocks of a size which will enable them to accommodate 45,000-ton battleships. The fact that we are now venturing into the field of building 45,000-ton battleships necessitates building a drydock of such size as will permit building and repairing this type of naval vessels.

An unusual arrangement has been made with the New York Port Authorities with respect to this particular drydock. The United States Government is to pay $7,000,000 toward the construction and building of the drydock. The Port Authorities of New York are to pay $7,000,000. The management and control of the dock will be under the Port Authorities of New York. It will be used both for merchant vessels and for building and repairing large naval vessels, battleships.

At the present time large merchant vessels are obliged to go to Boston or Philadelphia from New York in order to have the proper equipment for repairs and servicing. The port authorities, as I said, are to have the management and control of the dock. It is to be used for both merchant vessels—for which, of course, a fee will be paid—and for naval vessels. The Navy Department, however, is to have preferential rights in the use of the drydock, and is to pay reduced charges for its occupation of the dock for repairing naval vessels.

Briefly stated, that is all there is to say about the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Am I to understand from the Senator's statement that this will be the only drydock which can accommodate one of the new 45,000-ton battleships?

Mr. WALSH. No. The South Boston dock, which was authorized 2 years ago, and for which some money was appropriated last year, is being built, and will be able to do that.

The drydocks at Norfolk and at Philadelphia are able to do that. They are Government-owned naval drydocks. There is no drydock of such size in New York Harbor; and, in the opinion of the naval authorities, there is special need for such a dock in and about New York Harbor. This would be the only drydock that could repair and service large merchant vessels and large naval vessels. Large merchant vessels now must go from New York to Boston or Philadelphia to be serviced as needed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I ask the Senator, for my own information on the same general subject, whether a 45,000-ton battleship can go through the Panama Canal?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but it is a very tight squeeze.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Almost too tight, is it not?

Mr. WALSH. Almost too tight; I agree with the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask the able Senator if there is a drydock on the Pacific coast which can accommodate a 45,000-ton battleship.

Mr. WALSH. The Hunter's Point drydock at San Francisco can service 45,000-ton battleships, and also the one in the State of Washington.

Mr. McNARY. At Bremerton?

Mr. WALSH. At Bremerton; yes. They are both of the size required for the largest vessels afloat. New York, of course, being one of the very largest maritime and commercial centers, ought to have a large drydock.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, of course the question of construction facilities is intimately related to the entire defense program. I simply wish to call attention, in passing, to the fact that there are upon the Great Lakes shipbuilding facilities which apparently are being entirely ignored in the present undertaking.

There are on the Great Lakes 23 shipbuilding ways and 16 drydocks. The facilities for reaching the open sea could accommodate submarine chasers, motor torpedo vessels, many patrol vessels, and various auxiliary craft. Insofar as the Great Lakes shipbuilding facilities were used, there would be proportionate relief to the facilities upon the coast.

I am making this statement in the hope that it will come to the attention of the Navy Department in connection with the problem; and I ask to have inserted in the RECORD at this point an editorial from the Chicago Daily Tribune discussing these facilities and this opportunity.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the editorial will be printed in the RECORD.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Chicago Daily Tribune of July 9, 1940]

GREAT LAKES SHIPYARDS

Navy yards and private shipbuilding ways on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts are already crowded close to capacity with naval and commercial craft. Most of the vessels provided by the most recent naval bills will constitute only a paper navy for years to come because of lack of facilities for building. As usual, the Roosevelt administration has shown itself more adept at voting money than at obtaining useful results from its expenditure.

In this defense emergency the shipbuilding facilities of the Great Lakes form a considerable asset which the Navy has to date neglected. There are on the Lakes 23 shipbuilding ways and 16 drydocks. The latter can be used in an emergency for building purposes, although most of their facilities are required for repair of existing commercial craft, which perform such essential functions as transporting the bulk of the iron ore for the Nation's steel mills.

The building ways would permit construction of more than 23 naval craft at one time, since most of them are of a size to accommodate large Lake steamers. The outlets of the Great Lakes limit the size of ocean craft built at the inland ports. The locks will take vessels up to 250 feet long, drawing 14 feet.

Thus, while the ways on the Great Lakes would accommodate ships as large as cruisers, not even destroyers, which are more than 300 feet long, could be gotten to the sea. In an emergency, of course, the World War practice of building ships in two sections for transit through the locks could be adopted again. Ships so built were found to be perfectly seaworthy.

The greatest utility of the Great Lakes shipyards, however, is for the construction of the multitude of small craft necessary to the functioning of the fleet. These include submarine chasers, motor torpedo vessels, tugs, patrol vessels, and various auxiliary craft. By concentrating such construction in the Great Lakes area the tidewater plants would be left free to build the larger naval craft.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment. If no further amendment be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF NAVY AND MARINE CORPS AVIATORS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10030, Calendar No. 2052, a bill increasing the number of naval aviators in the line of the Regular Navy and Marine Corps, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the title of the bill.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 10030) increasing the number of naval aviators in the line of the Regular Navy and Marine Corps, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, with amendments.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was about to observe that we ought to have the bill read, and an explanation should be made of it. The trouble is that we are passing bills in a sort of hysterical or emotional frame of mind; and apparently we can pass almost anything at this time.

Mr. WALSH. I shall be pleased to explain the bill; but this is the customary request to dispense with the formal reading of the bill and proceed first with committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH. I shall now be glad to explain the bill.

In 1935 the Senate launched upon a new program for the purpose of increasing the number of naval aviators. It commenced training young college men, who were to be sent to the Naval Aviation School at Pensacola for 1 year, and then were to serve for 3 years longer as aviators in the Navy. They were to be known as aviation cadets. Over 4 years have elapsed since the first class was received. The young men who have spent their time in the service in the Navy have made a very creditable record. It would be difficult for anybody to distinguish between a naval aviator who is a cadet and an aviator in the Regular Service who is a graduate of the Naval Academy.

As the time approached last year for the release from active service of the first class, the fourth year having expired, an act was passed extending the time of service 4 years more, and also recognizing a just complaint which had been made by these young men that they were known only as cadets, when, as a matter of fact, those who had spent 3 or 4 years in the service were more mature and more experienced and had had longer service in naval aviation than some of the regular aviators of the Navy who were commissioned as ensigns and as lieutenants.

Therefore in the act we authorize these cadets to be promoted to the rank of commissioned officers in the Naval Reserve. The young men were given the right to leave the naval service at the end of the 4 years or to reenroll in the reserve force for another 4-year period.

The members of the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman and I were desirous that those who wished should be inducted into the regular naval service. For some reason or other at that time the Navy did not desire that these young men be inducted into the regular naval service, but still desired to continue them as cadets or as Reserve officers.

The arrangement made for the training of these young men was unusual also. They were not to receive the full pay of a regular naval aviator who had a commission in the Navy. Their pay was somewhat less than that of regular naval aviators, but provision was made that upon their release from active service at the end of 4 years they should be given a cash bonus which represented approximately the difference between what they received as cadets and what they would have received as naval officers. So that at the end of 4 years a young man could take his accumulated salary, if it may be called that, leave the naval service, and go into private aviation, as a considerable number of them have done, and some of the best pilots now in the private air transportation lines are from this group of cadets.

The bill seeks to make it compulsory for the Navy Department to take some of these Reserve aviators into the regular service. If these young men desire, a number of them can now, after meeting the physical requirements and meeting the educational and other requirements, be inducted into the regular naval service with commissions and rank as regular naval officers.

There is a reserve naval aviation base in Washington, and one in Boston, and there are several throughout the country. Many young men who are in the Naval Reserve spend Saturdays and Sundays in learning to pilot planes, and the Government furnishes them planes. They are a very valuable adjunct to the naval air service. The bill permits some of those who desire to do so, who are well trained and are now Reserve aviators, to be inducted at once into the regular naval service.

They have an opportunity of entering the service for 4 years and then leaving the service, if they choose to do so thereafter. The first opportunity they have is to come in and be regular naval officers, assuming their record in satisfactory to the Navy, and that they are physically qualified, and qualified by experience. The second opportunity is that they may join as officers for a 4-year period. A very great concession is made in the bill to those who choose to give up 4 years of time from their private lives and join the air service of the Navy, a bonus of $500 being provided for each year they serve in the Navy in the capacity of officers in the Naval Air Service.

A naval Reserve officer now in private life can, if he meets the exacting requirements, say, "I will enter the service for 4 years on the conditions you have named. I do not want to be a regular naval officer, but I will go in for 4 years, in view of the emergency, and in return, besides my pay, at the end of 4 years I will expect the Government to give me $500 for each year, or $2,000."

Mr. President, that is a plan worked out in an attempt to induce persons in private life to come into the naval aviation service for a period of time, the Government offering them the inducement of a bonus of $500 instead of remaining in as permanent officers. It is expected that a reasonable number of these trained Reserve pilots will take advantage of either one of these alternative proposals, and that the Navy will have little difficulty in obtaining a sufficient number of young men to take up pilot training.

Very briefly, that is the whole story in reference to the proposed legislation. As the bill designates, it is an attempt to increase the number of naval aviators in the line of the Regular Navy and Marine Corps, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. KING. I understood the Senator to say something in the earlier part of his observations about compulsorily bringing them into the Navy. I was wondering whether there was a provision in the bill compelling the Navy, even though it needed no aviators, even though it had an adequate number, to accept these men in the Navy as officers.

Mr. WALSH. No. I think I very inappropriately used the word "compulsory." What I meant to say was that the bill opens the door for the Navy to do something which it cannot do now. No Reserve officer can come into the naval air service as a regular naval officer under existing law. I assume the Navy Department will send out invitations, and I think perhaps they have already done so, inviting all Reserve officers to take advantage of this opportunity of entering the regular service.

Mr. KING. As I understand the Senator, then, there is nothing in the bill which will compel the Navy to add a large number of pilots, unless they are required.

Mr. WALSH. That is true.

Mr. KING. There are thousands of them who take the training, but the Navy would not be compelled, after they had completed their training, to place them in the Navy as officers.

Mr. WALSH. Not at all, and it is not expected that more than 200 a year will be taken into the Regular Service in this manner. The Naval Aviation Reserve Corps is not a large corps. It is an important adjunct to the Navy, and it has been more or less experimental, but at this time, with the greater necessity for an increased number of aviators, it is very important to get into the Regular or Reserve force every aviator who is already trained and experienced.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator one other question. Because I am putting this in interrogative form, I hope the Senator will not get the impression that I am critical. Does not the Senator think the emoluments and advantages which are granted will lead to some criticism on the ground that a preference is given in this branch of the service over other branches of the service?

Mr. WALSH. I think the suggestion and idea contained in the bill, which was presented to the committee by the Navy Department, comes from legislation already enacted for the Army. I personally feel that it is rather unfortunate that the Army and Navy legislation is not in the hands of one committee. I think I have introduced at every session 15 or 20 bills whose purpose is to put the Navy in the position in which the Army is, and I am sure the War Department is having bills introduced for the same purpose. The best example of that was an Army bill passed in 1939, about which none of us knew until a few days ago, increasing the profit to airplane manufacturers from 10 percent to 12 percent. That provision was contained in an Army bill, and even the members of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs did not know about it, and the Navy Department did not know about it, until it was actually law. It was included in some Army bill, yet it was made applicable to planes built by the Navy.

I make that suggestion only because I have at times felt that it would be helpful if matters relating to both services were handled by one committee; and we have before us an illustration. In other words, the inducement should be the same as to both services.

Mr. KING. Exactly.

Mr. WALSH. That is probably what prompted the Senator's question.

Mr. KING. Exactly.

Mr. WALSH. The Navy has resisted, up to now, the matter of inducting these cadets into the regular service. I understand the Army gets about 800 aviators a year from the cadet system, and they are given commissions in the Army Air Corps. But not until this bill is passed will aviation cadets and Reserve officers be given the opportunity to be inducted into the Regular Navy. The first 4 years expired only a year ago. The Navy's attitude was not hostile in any way, but they wanted to distinguish between aviators who had graduated from the Naval Academy and those who came into the service from colleges.

Let me say again that these young men who come from colleges are excellent aviators. The only suggestion I have heard made—and it is a very minor one—is that they are not always so amenable to discipline, because they come from college life with all the buoyancy and enthusiasm of college life as compared with the men who come from the Naval Academy.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. KING. I was much interested in the suggestion made by the Senator that there ought to be one head over both the Army and the Navy. A number of years ago when I was a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, before I resigned from that committee, I introduced a bill—and I offered similar bills on several occasions—providing for the consolidation of all the activities for national defense, the War Department, the Navy Department, and the Air Force under one head. I introduced a bill creating a Department of National Defense, providing for a Secretary of National Defense, and an administrative secretary for the Army, an administrative secretary for the Navy, and an administrative secretary for the air force; consolidating all these activities into a Department of National Defense, under one head. If that had been accomplished, in my opinion, greater uniformity and greater efficiency would have resulted, and there would have been infinitely greater savings than are now possible under the present tripartite division.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, when I first came to the Senate I had a similar idea, and I think I introduced a bill somewhat similar to that mentioned by the Senator from Utah, providing for three assistant secretaries, and one head over all our national defenses.

If there are no further questions, I ask that the committee amendments be acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the committee amendments.

The first amendments of the Committee on Naval Affairs were in section 2, page 1, line 8, after the word "Corps", to strike out "Reserves" and to insert "Reserve"; in line 9, after the words "necessary and", to strike out "except as hereinafter provided"; on page 2, line 1, after the words "officers of", to insert "the line of"; in the same line, after the words "Navy and", to insert "the"; in line 2, after the word "accordingly.", to strike out "officers so appointed shall, upon appointment, occupy the same grade, with the same precedence therein now occupied by them in the Naval or Marine Corps Reserve, as the case may be:" and to insert "These officers shall be appointed to the same grade occupied by them in the Naval or Marine Corps Reserve, as the case may be, at the time of such appointment and shall take precedence in such grade in accordance with the provisions of section 8 (e) of this Act."; in line 22, after the word "requirements:", to strike out "And provided"; on page 3, after the word "completed", to strike out "2 or more years" and to insert "not less than 1 year"; in line 2, after the word "of", to strike out "continuous"; in the same line, after the word "service", to strike out "other than training duty"; in line 3, after the word "Reserve", to strike out "immediately preceding the date of approval of this act"; and at the end of the section to insert a colon and the following language: "And provided further, That in computing the pay of officers appointed under the authority of this act, credit for longevity shall be given them for all service, including service as aviation cadets, with which they have heretofore been credited", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. The President of the United States is authorized to appoint to the line of the Regular Navy and Marine Corps, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, as many naval aviators of the Navy and Marine Corps Reserve as he may deem necessary and the authorized number of commissioned officers of the line of the Navy and the Marine Corps is increased accordingly. These officers shall be appointed to the same grade occupied by them in the Naval or Marine Corps Reserve, as the case may be, at the time of such appointment and shall take precedence in such grade in accordance with the provisions of section 8 (e) of this act: Provided, That they shall first establish their moral, physical, mental, and professional qualifications in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe: Provided further, That officers so appointed shall, on June 30 of the calendar year in which they are appointed, have completed not less than 18 months of continuous active service next following the completion of their duty as aviation cadets undergoing training and shall, on June 30 of the calendar year in which appointed, be less than 26 years of age: Provided further, That during a period of 6 months from the date of approval of this act the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to waive the foregoing age requirement and continuous-service requirements: Provided further, That during a period of 6 months from the date of approval of this act those naval aviators who have not undergone training as aviation cadets but who have completed not less than 1 year of active service other than training duty in the Naval or Marine Corps Reserve may also be so appointed regardless of their age. Officers appointed under the authority of this proviso shall, upon appointment, be additional numbers in the grade to which appointed and in any grade to which they may thereafter be promoted: And provided further, That in computing the pay of officers appointed under the authority of this act, credit for longevity shall be given them for all service, including service as aviation cadets, with which they have heretofore been credited.

The amendments were agreed to.

ICELAND, GREENLAND, AND THE UNITED STATES—LETTER FROM VILHJALMUR STEFANSSON

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to read to the Senate a brief letter which I have received from the noted explorer, Mr. Vilhjalmur Stefansson, in connection with the question of whether or not Iceland is in the Western Hemisphere. Yesterday the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] discussed the question of whether or not we ought to defend the Western Hemisphere, and at that time I repeated the contention I have made here before, that we ought above all to be prepared to defend our base area, and that is North America, Central America, and the coast and islands of the Caribbean. The coast of the Caribbean, of course, includes part of South America. The question arises, of course, where we should draw the eastern boundary of the Western Hemisphere. At the time I discussed the question I had a map hanging on the wall and for the purpose of the discussion I used the thirtieth parallel of longitude, which takes in most of Greenland but does not include Iceland.

This is what Mr. Stefansson, who, I think, is a real authority on the subject, says:

1. The President has been quoted to the effect that Greenland is in the Western Hemisphere, from the Monroe Doctrine angle. Now, Greenland extends farther east than Iceland.

I think that is something which many of us do not realize.

For the 1937 map of the Geodaetisk Institut, Copenhagen, shows that a line drawn south from the northeastern tip of Greenland passes about 50 miles east of the most easterly point of Iceland. Therefore, all of Iceland is farther west than some parts of Greenland.

2. If we decide upon a hemisphere defense in the North Atlantic, and if we decide to take our stand at our side of the main or broadest ocean channel, then Iceland, geographically, is our frontier in its quarter. For the sea is only about 180 miles wide between Iceland and Greenland but is more than 500 miles wide between Iceland and Scotland, more than 600 miles wide between Iceland and Norway. There are, of course, the Faroes in between Iceland and Europe; but they are tiny, they do not have very good harbors, and they do have about the worst weather of the North Atlantic.

Then he says as his third point:

3. By implication at least, the State Department, under Secretary William H. Seward, took the position 72 years ago (perhaps earlier?) that Iceland would come under the Monroe Doctrine geographically. For, in 1868, the Department published A Report on the Resources of Iceland and Greenland, compiled by Benjamin Mills Peirce, wherein you find on page 1 that "* * * it (Iceland) belongs to the Western Hemisphere and is an insular dependency of the North American continent."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this letter be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

NEW YORK, June 22, 1940.

The Honorable HENRY CABOT LODGE, Jr.,
United States Senator from Massachusetts, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR LODGE: Your letter of June 20 asks permission to publish through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD what I wrote you June 19. That letter contains some things which do not bear on what interests you, whether Iceland should or should not be looked upon as part of the Western Hemisphere. I restate the case, and I shall be glad to have you use this letter in any way you like. The main points are:

1. The President has been quoted to the effect that Greenland is in the Western Hemisphere from the Monroe Doctrine angle. Now Greenland extends farther east than Iceland, for the 1937 map of the Geodaetisk Institut, Copenhagen, shows that a line drawn south from the northeastern tip of Greenland passes about 50 miles east of the most easterly point of Iceland. Therefore, all of Iceland is farther west than some parts of Greenland.

2. If we decide upon a hemisphere defense in the North Atlantic, and if we decide to take our stand at our side of the main or broadest ocean channel, then Iceland, geographically, is our frontier in its quarter. For the sea is only about 180 miles wide between Iceland and Greenland but is more than 500 miles wide between Iceland and Scotland, more than 600 miles wide between Iceland and Norway. There are, of course, the Faroes in between Iceland and Europe, but they are tiny, they do not have very good harbors and they do have about the worst weather of the North Atlantic. Besides the Iceland-Faroe gap is wider than the one between Iceland and Greenland.

3. By implication at least, the State Department, under Secretary William H. Seward, took the position 72 years ago (perhaps earlier) that Iceland would come under the Monroe Doctrine geographically. For in 1868 the Department published A Report on the Resources of Iceland and Greenland, compiled by Benjamin Mills Peirce, where you find on page 1 that "* * * it (Iceland) belongs to the Western Hemisphere, and is an insular dependency of the North American Continent."

Seward wanted the United States to have Iceland and Greenland for about the reasons he gave for wanting Alaska. One of these was a defense reason, that Iceland and Greenland dominate the North Atlantic somewhat as Alaska dominates the North Pacific.

It will be understood that I write this letter strictly from geographical and historical points of view, with no thought of tendering political or military advice.

VILHJALMUR STEFANSSON.

INVITATION TO DELEGATES TO DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION TO VISIT WISCONSIN

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, there came over from the House of Representatives a few moments ago a concurrent resolution providing for adjournment of the Senate until the 22d of this month. Before the Senate takes action on that resolution I wish to express to my Democratic brethren an invitation to visit "the little bit of heaven" which lies a little north of Chicago, my own beloved State of Wisconsin.

Mr. President, shortly there will convene in Chicago a group of Democrats who will nominate men for the Presidency and the Vice Presidency of the United States.

Of course, this group will listen to "their master's voice," and that voice will determine the nominations.

Physically this group will welter and swelter in Chicago's heat, and after the convention adjourns they will be in need of rest and recreation—something that can build them up for the campaign. The Lord knows they will need the build-up, because the gentlemen who were nominated in Philadelphia are going to be the next leaders of this Nation.

But I did not rise particularly to give Senators that information, of which they are well aware; but I rose to say that immediately north of Chicago there is the Nation's greatest dairy land and one of the Nation's greatest vacation lands—Wisconsin—"all this and heaven, too." The north half of the State of Wisconsin from the Mississippi to Lake Michigan—in fact, all of the State—has been dotted by Nature with a myriad of lakes and rivers and streams, and in these waters are found the muskie, northern pike, wall-eyed pike, the croppy, and bass. Here also is found the brook trout and the German brown trout. Here, Mr. President, the tired politician could recuperate from his disappointments; and here nature, with its natural beauty unmarred by man, still exists to smooth over the scars obtained in the convention.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I was absent from the Chamber when the Senator began his remarks. Is the Senator discussing Michigan? [Laughter.]

Mr. WILEY. I was not discussing Michigan. I was speaking about heaven—Wisconsin—that State which lies west of Michigan. I am surprised at the lack of perception of my Michigan colleague. This is an invitation to tired New Deal Democrats, after they conclude their business in Chicago, to come to the State of Wisconsin and recuperate in the north woods.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not want even tired Democrats. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILEY. We prefer tired Democrats to none at all. We love them, in spite of their mistaken ways. We are asking them to come up and enjoy "a little bit of heaven" in Wisconsin, where there are rolling hills covered with flowers, hardwoods, and pines. Here one can bathe and fish in the lakes and streams, loaf and rest, and forget the wrongs of man and the "fears of coming events"—a Republican victory.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. The only tired Democrat I have heard of is Wendell Willkie. [Laughter.] Neither Michigan nor Wisconsin got him. He went to Colorado. I remind the Senator that Alf Landon went to the same place 4 years ago. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILEY. I am glad to have the prognostications of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky. I am hoping that a few months later he will be able to see "the light," now so plain on the horizon, to practically everybody, everywhere—the light of a Republican victory.

So far as Mr. Willkie being tired is concerned, "You ain't seen nothin' yet." Wait until he gets into action. The country needs the dynamic energy and vision of this "builder," a man who can perform as well as promise.

Mr. President, I am being diverted from my purpose. My purpose is to invite the Democrats up into heaven for a little rest. They certainly have done enough evil to merit a rest therefrom. In Wisconsin one can prepare the body and the mind to become efficient to meet the problems ahead.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I rise to ask a favor of the new member of the Naval Affairs Committee. I ask that he suspend his remarks until one or two more amendments to the pending bill may be agreed to, so that I may leave the Chamber to attend a committee meeting.

Mr. WILEY. I shall take only a moment more.

I have spoken to Senators on the other side of the beauties of nature in Wisconsin—of lakes and streams, woods and flower-bedecked hillsides, moonlight nights, healthful sunshine, and cooling showers. But there is something else; for in this picture will be found "genuine folks," with kind hearts—folks who have built pleasant, comfortable lodges where one can sleep and eat very reasonably. These folks strive to give cheer and radiate helpfulness and kindness. Here also the tired politician will be fed with tales of the old "Pinery Days," tales of adventure—and, what is more, with Wisconsin's best cheese.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Are we to be fed only on tales of the past? [Laughter.]

Mr. WILEY. The Senator from Kentucky asks whether or not he is to be fed only on tales of the past. We might feed them on "twice-told tales" of democratic failures, but we shall not. God knows, after the Democrats get through in Chicago, they will need strength, Wisconsin's cheese, and the prayers of us all. [Laughter.]

In Wisconsin the tired politician can be fed on Nature's food, Wisconsin's great dairy products. Here he will find hunks of cheese, butter that is butter, milk that is milk, which will put iron in his system. That means red corpuscles. It will put the flush of health on his cheeks, and put "pep" all through him.

Wisconsin would like to put some sane ideas into the New Deal Democrats; but as they still think the New Deal is the only thing, they can come to Wisconsin after the convention to rest and recuperate. We will call off politics and let Nature takes its course in trying to "reform the reformers."

Wisconsin, Nature's dairy land and vacation land, welcomes Democrats and their friends for the recuperation they need.

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF NAVY AND MARINE CORPS AVIATORS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10030) increasing the number of naval aviators in the line of the Regular Navy and Marine Corps, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, in section 4, on page 3, line 24, after the word "officers," to insert "nurses," and on page 4, line 10, after the words "warrant officers," to insert "nurses," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. All officers, nurses, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the United States Naval Reserve or United States Marine Corps Reserve, who, if called or ordered into active naval or military service by the Federal Government for extended naval or military service in excess of 30 days, suffer disability or death in line of duty from disease or injury while so employed shall be deemed to have been in the active naval service during such period, and they or their beneficiaries shall be in all respects entitled to receive the same pensions, compensation, retirement pay, and hospital benefits as are now or may hereafter be provided by law or regulation for officers, warrant officers, nurses, and enlisted men of corresponding grades and length of service of the Regular Navy or Marine Corps: Provided That if a person who is eligible for the benefits prescribed by this act be also eligible for pension under the provisions of the act of June 23, 1937 (50 Stat. 305), compensation from the United States Employees' Compensation Commission under the provisions of section 304 of the Naval Reserve Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 1181), or retired pay under the provision of section 310 of the Naval Reserve Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 1183), he shall elect which benefit he shall receive.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, on page 5, after line 14, to insert a proviso, so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to distribute the enlisted personnel of the Marine Corps among the various grades in such numbers as he deems to be to the best interests of the naval service: Provided, That not more than 50 percent of the authorized number of privates in the Marine Corps shall have the rank of private, first-class.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, on page 5, line 22, after the words "in line 1", to strike out the comma and "page 1177" and insert "of said section"; in line 25, to strike out "adding" and insert "inserting after the word 'days' in line 28, page 1177,"; on page 6, at the beginning of line 2, to strike out "proviso" and insert "provisos"; on page 6, line 2, to strike out "And provide" and insert "Provided further"; at the end of line 6, to insert "Provided further, That all periods during which chief warrant officers have held commissions in the Naval Reserve shall be included in computing their pay as provided in the act of February 16, 1929 (45 Stat. 1186)"; on page 6, line 15, after "line 8", to insert "page 1184"; and on page 7, line 15, to strike out "report" and insert "reporting", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. The Naval Reserve Act of 1938, approved June 25, 1938 (52 Stat. 1175), as amended, is hereby amended as follows:

(a) Section 7, title I, by inserting after the words "commissioned officers" in line 1 of said section the words "exclusive of chief warrant officers", by inserting after the word "midshipmen", in lines 8 and 13, page 1177, the words "chief warrant officers", and by inserting after the word "days" in line 28, page 1177, the following provisos: "Provided further, That no chief warrant officer promoted to other commissioned grade or warrant officer promoted to chief warrant officer or other commissioned grade shall suffer any reduction of pay by reason of such promotion: Provided further, That all periods during which chief warrant officers have held commissions in the Naval Reserve shall be included in computing their pay as provided in the act of February 16, 1929 (45 Stat. 1186)";

(b) Section 309, title III, by deleting the word "thirty", in line 5 of said section, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "twenty";

(c) Section 312, title III, delete the second proviso beginning on line 8, page 1184, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided further, That hereafter all officers of the Naval Reserve and the Marine Corps Reserve who may be advanced to a higher grade or rank in time of peace or in time of war or national emergency under the provisions of this act, shall be allowed the pay and allowances of the higher grade or rank from the dates of rank as stated in their commissions, as distinguished from the dates of commission, or dates of acceptance of commission, and the dates of rank as stated in their commissions shall be conclusive for all purposes."

(d) Section 313, title III, by inserting after the word "Navy", in line 5 of said section, a comma and the words "including drills performed on Sunday."

(e) "SEC. 311. In time of peace, officers of the Naval Reserve shall take precedence according to such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe: Provided, That when mobilized with the Regular Navy for war or a national emergency, each officer of the Naval Reserve shall take precedence next after that officer of the Regular Navy of the same rank or grade whose length of service in such rank or grade on the date of the declaration of such national emergency or war is one-half or the nearest one-half of that of the Reserve officer: Provided further, That a Naval Reserve officer appointed after the declaration of the war or national emergency shall take precedence, upon reporting for active duty, next after the officer of the Regular Navy of the same rank or grade whose length of service in such rank or grade on the date the Reserve officer reports for active duty, is one-half or the nearest one-half of that of the Reserve officer."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill H. R. 10030 was read the third time and passed.

BOULDER DAM—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I submit a second conference report on House bill 9877, relating to the Boulder Dam Act, and ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9877) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate and to put into effect charges for electrical energy generated at Boulder Dam, providing for the application of revenues from said project, authorizing the operation of the Boulder Power Plant by the United States directly or through agents, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments.

KEY PITTMAN,
HIRAM W. JOHNSON,
ALVA B. ADAMS,
HENRY F. ASHURST,
CHAS. L. MCNARY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

KNUTE HILL,
J. W. ROBINSON,
CHAS. HAWKS, JR.,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report? The Chair hears none.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, let me briefly explain the report.

Several days ago a report was made by the conferees. It will be remembered that both Senators from New Mexico opposed the report. The bill was worked on for 2 years by representatives of the seven Colorado River Basin States which were interested, and by the Department of the Interior. The Governors of the seven States appointed commissioners. Those commissioners, after 2 months of work, recently agreed on a bill. The bill on which they agreed is the bill reported in this conference report.

The bill on which they agreed, and which the Government approved, was introduced simultaneously in this body and in the House of Representatives. It passed the House of Representatives first. This body then took up the House bill, the Senate bill being on the calendar, and passed the House bill with three amendments, which were offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] at the time the bill was under consideration.

The bill went to the House, and the House asked for a conference. We had a conference, and the Senate receded from two amendments, and the House receded from its objection to the third amendment, with a modification.

The amendments in that form were unsatisfactory to the Senators from New Mexico. The bill was debated one night, just before we recessed on account of the Republican convention in Philadelphia. As chairman of the conferees on the part of the Senate, I asked that the conference report be recommitted to the conferees, and that was done. The conferees met. The conferees on behalf of the House were emphatically opposed to any amendment of the bill. In fact, they gave it as their opinion, in their argument against the amendments, that the conference report would be defeated in the House if the amendments were left in.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. Were the conferees representing the House unanimous in their attitude?

Mr. PITTMAN. They were.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The information I have is that the House conferee from the State of Utah was not in favor of the conference report.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator is absolutely mistaken.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is the information I have received.

Mr. PITTMAN. Not only did the Representative from Utah vote against all the amendments, but he made one of the arguments—a new argument, by the way, because he was a new conferee.

There was some opposition to the conference report among the Senate conferees. However, after a majority of the Senate conferees had agreed to recede from the amendments, the conferees on the part of the Senate then made it unanimous by all signing the report. It is a unanimous report.

It will be remembered that the other night, when the conference report was under consideration, I supported one of the amendments of the Senator from New Mexico, with a modification. I did not think then, and I do not now think, that the modification injured the amendment. However, the Senator from New Mexico thought it did.

Mr. President, this conference report deals with a bill which is of vast importance to the seven Colorado River Basin States. It is also of great importance to the United States Government. A readjustment of the old Boulder Canyon Act, which was passed in 1928, has become necessary by reason of the changed conditions in the West with regard to the cost of power. We now have the Bonneville project and others. The Bonneville project allocates a certain amount to navigation—about a third, I believe. The Government bears that part of the cost. It is not chargeable to the power generated there. Therefore, that power may be sold cheaper than the power generated at Boulder Dam. While there was an allocation of $25,000,000 for flood control, the power had to pay the interest on that money.

Again, back in 1928, the interest rates on money were very much higher. Those excessive interest rates have become a burden upon the power, requiring a higher cost per kilowatt-hour to the consumer.

The bill therefore is designed to bring the old Boulder Canyon Act into line with the recent Government interest rates. The result will be to reduce costs considerably and allow a reduction in the rate for power.

The Government is interested by reason of the fact that it assures the repayment of the Government's money, while there might be some doubt about it if the rates were too high; for, then, the power would come in competition with steam.

The three lower States are interested in it because it reduces the cost of power to their people. The four upper States are interested in it because, through this bill, they immediately get some money derived from the sale of power from Boulder Dam for the purpose of investigating and developing reclamation and power projects in the four States. If we do not pass this bill they will not get a cent for 50 years; if we pass this bill they will commence to get money immediately for the investigation and development of their projects.

I have tried in every way I could to bring about a compromise of this matter because I realize the very great importance of passing this proposed legislation now. It took us over 5 years to agree on the Boulder Canyon Act by reason of the fact that there were seven States involved. We have been working on this bill for 2 years. Finally, by reason of the Governors of the seven States appointing commissioners to consider the matter, this bill was agreed on.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator from Nevada, in charge of the conference report, has stated the purposes of the bill. The Senate will remember that, after years of conflict, the co-called Boulder Dam bill was passed about 12 years ago, Arizona not agreeing. Will the Senator advise me if I am correct in my contention that this present bill does not commit Arizona to entering the so-called Colorado River compact?

Mr. PITTMAN. It does not.

Mr. ASHURST. In the original bill, which authorized the construction of Boulder Dam, the Congress recognized that vast tracts of land and potential power sites belonging to the States of Nevada and Arizona, respectively, would be withdrawn from those States and therefore, as a partial equitable remuneration for such withdrawals and, in lieu of the taxes the States of Arizona and Nevada, respectively, could have levied and collected, a certain percent of the avails of the sales of hydroelectric energy should be paid to these two States——

Mr. PITTMAN. It was 37 percent, to be divided between them.

Mr. ASHURST. Thirty-seven percent, to be divided between the States of Arizona and Nevada, but Congress now proposes that $300,000 each year shall be paid to each of the States of Arizona and Nevada.

Thus far there have been no avails to divide between these two States. Under the conference report of this pending bill, the sum of $300,000 each year will be paid to each of the States of Arizona and Nevada in commutation of the 18¾ percent of "excess" revenues given each of these two States by the original Boulder Dam Project Act.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. While the Senator is appraising the advantages which his State and Nevada obtained because of having some land upon either side of the dam, he ought to take into account the fact that Utah, Colorado, and Wyoming, and New Mexico furnish all the water but get no compensation.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield to me further?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator who desires to answer.

Mr. ASHURST. The furthest thing from my mind now is to enter into a debate on the Boulder Dam bill. As a result of that contest I bear scars on my breast, as my colleague the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] bears them on his breast; but our tempers have not been soured; we were vanquished in a fight which lasted 10 years; it was a fair fight; we gave as many sturdy blows as we received. We have no desire to rake the dying embers of the heated past, but I say, with respect to the proportion of water each State contributed to the Colorado River, that years ago I spoke in the Senate for hours at a time without hesitation or remorse, pointing out——

Mr. PITTMAN. I remember the Senator did so.

Mr. ASHURST. Pointing out at that time that the State of California did not furnish even 1 percent of the normal flow of the waters of the Colorado River, and that, except for flash streams, California did not furnish enough moisture to the Colorado River to fill a fountain pen. Those, however, are bygone days; Boulder Dam is an actuality. For the information of some of my constituents who have inquired as to the purpose of this bill, I say it does not commit Arizona to the Colorado River compact. I want to make it clear that it does not disturb the present equities as to the Upper Basin States.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is true.

Mr. ASHURST. I hope I am correct.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. So far as being committed to the compact is concerned, the Senator should be proud that Arizona has not committed itself to anything in connection with Boulder Dam except the fact that they will get $300,000 a year. So far as New Mexico is concerned, we dislike to get into this.

We were committed originally, hence we would like to get our share just like Arizona.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I think if this bill passes there is no way by which the State of New Mexico can be kept out of the proceeds of Boulder Dam. If this bill passes, I think the four upper States will get several million dollars from the proceeds of power at Boulder Dam. I do not want to argue that they should not receive it, but they will receive it, and I am really glad of it. I supported the provision in the Boulder Canyon Act which provided a fund for the four upper States, but, through some inadvertence, the money was not to be paid until 50 years hence. That is too long for most of us to wait.

This conference report brings the bill back in the form in which it passed the House and in which it was introduced in the Senate. There have been no changes from that form. I honor and applaud the Senator from New Mexico for offering the amendments to the bill. I think there is a great deal of merit in them. The amendment, however, that mentioned the San Juan project was quite an unusual thing, as I said the other night. The Boulder Canyon Act and this measure proposing to amend it deal with probably 20 or 30 projects or proposed projects in the 7 States. They may be projects someday. We have one in Nevada that I might like to have mentioned by name, although it is a very small project. A Representative from Utah in the other House said that Utah had two projects which they would like to have mentioned by name in the bill. Really, I could not conceive that the bill would be injured by mentioning projects, and I saw considerable reason for mentioning the particular project, but when the argument was made over there that everyone wanted mentioned projects affecting his State, they changed their mind, and said they could not stand for this amendment.

I will not say that the Senator from New Mexico used force at the Interior Department, because it is rarely necessary to use force with the Interior Department, but he rather convinced the Interior Department that the San Juan project should be investigated immediately. There was some fear intimated on the part of the Senator from New Mexico that there would be no investigation of the San Juan project for a long time. While I did not have the pleasure of hearing the argument of the Senator in the committee, I have seen in the hearings that the Commissioner of Immigration has stated, as I interpret his language, that he is going to proceed immediately with the investigation of that project. I understand that the Interior Department has also unequivocally stated that if this bill is passed, and there is available no fund with which to do the work, it will obtain a deficiency appropriation to start immediately the investigation of this project.

So I think the Senator from New Mexico has accomplished something. I think he has accomplished probably as much as he would have accomplished if the amendment had been adopted or even more.

Therefore, I ask that the conference report be agreed to.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I desire briefly to discuss the conference report, not with a desire to delay action by the Senate, but because I feel that I am in duty bound to do for my State, even at this late date, what the Senators from Arizona for years have done for theirs. They have taken care of the interests of the State of Arizona. My purpose is to try to take care of the interests of the State of New Mexico.

I am proud of the friendship of the two Senators from Arizona. In my opinion they represent their State as ably and as effectively as any State is represented in this body. I have stated before the constituency of the State of Arizona that either one of the two Senators from Arizona is worth not merely $10,000 a year but a million dollars a day to the State of Arizona, and I mean it. It is about time, however, for New Mexico also to be taking care of its own, especially when it is a question of what is left after California and Nevada and Arizona "get theirs," notwithstanding the fact that even to this date Arizona has not been committed to anything that has to do with Boulder Dam except getting the benefits of the project.

Mr. President, in the famous Dartmouth College case Daniel Webster, arguing before the Supreme Court, stated in effect that Dartmouth was a small college, that Dartmouth was a poor college, that Dartmouth did not have any political influence, but he said, "Nevertheless, we still love Dartmouth." It is in that spirit that I rise to represent the interest which the State of New Mexico has in this piece of legislation, plus the fact that in my opinion the action of the Senate and of a standing committee of this body should have some respect in Congress.

This bill was before the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, ably presided over by the Senator from Arizona on my right [Mr. ASHURST]; and after complete hearings the committee unanimously inserted some amendments that would take not a thing from the contents of the bill, but would do that which we love to talk about, protect States' rights. That is all that the amendments of the Senator from New Mexico import. They do not take one penny away from the State of California. They do not take one penny away from Arizona. They do not take one penny away from Nevada or any other State; but they do this: Whether we get 1 cent or 10 cents or half a million dollars or a million dollars, the sovereign people of the State of New Mexico should determine what shall be done in the State of New Mexico with that money, which belongs to New Mexico and not to any other State.

New Mexico is not complaining of the fact that Arizona is getting $300,000 a year. New Mexico is not complaining that Nevada is getting $300,000 a year. I still think it is Nevada's business and it is Arizona's business what they should do with that money. So is there anything unreasonable in the claim that the Senate should stand by a little amendment that was favorably acted on by the Senate committee and adopted by the Senate, protecting New Mexico along the same lines?

A great deal could be said on the Boulder Dam bill. I shall repeat what I stated some few days ago: After years of effort, the Boulder Dam project became a fact as far as law was concerned. Prior to that time, prior to the passage of the bill, which the Senators from Arizona opposed—and which, if I had been in this body at the time, I would have opposed—conferences were held. The irony of the matter is that when the compact was signed—the compact which was arrived at at a conference presided over by former President Hoover, was held at Santa Fe, N. Mex.—New Mexico, Utah, Wyoming, and Colorado were sacrificed on the altar of expediency so that southern California could get cheap rates.

I do not blame California one bit. I am blaming those who represented New Mexico, Colorado, Utah, and Wyoming at the time because they could not see the matter in the same light in which the two Senators from Arizona saw it, and thereby try to protect the interests of those upper-basin States.

Almost all of the water that goes into Boulder Dam comes from Utah, Wyoming, Colorado, and New Mexico. Whether or not we get a project, the largest amount of water we can utilize in New Mexico out of what belongs to us is some 350,000 acre-feet. We send into Boulder Dam every year, across the Arizona line in San Juan County, N. Mex., 2,400,000 acre-feet of water. The Senate adopted a little mite of an amendment which would give us nothing but a few crumbs, and the Senate conferees receded from that amendment.

Mr. President, for years California has been getting cheap power. We do not envy California at all.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. What reason was given for receding on the part of the Senate conferees? I am not familiar with the matter.

Mr. CHAVEZ. As I understand, the reason given was that the House conferees would not agree to the Senate amendment because it mentioned one particular project, the only possible project within the State of New Mexico. I am going to discuss that matter in a few minutes, and call the attention of the Senate to the Senate hearings. But referring to the results of the passage of the original Boulder Dam Act, the four upper-basin States furnish the water. Colorado and Nevada divided, under the law, 37 percent of the revenue. California got cheap rates and more water, and the upper-basin States did not get a thing.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am sure the Senator wants to be perfectly accurate. All of the proceeds of power were first to be applied to paying back the Government investment with interest.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The amortization; yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. If there was any surplus above what was necessary to pay the Government, then we were to get 37 percent of the surplus.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I said that was the case under the law.

Mr. PITTMAN. We were a little afraid there would not be any surplus a little later.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Anyway, that is the law. Arizona and Nevada were to get 37 percent of the revenue if there was a surplus. California was to get some water facilities, or use of water, plus the benefit of the power. Practically all of it goes to the State of California, and they are the ones who pay the revenue we are talking about.

For years after that efforts were made by some persons to modify the law so as to get cheaper rates in southern California. They would have conferences; they would induce representatives from my State and the other States to get together in an effort to modify the law so as to get more benefits. But, in order to convince the upper basin States that it was good for them, they inserted some provisions by which a certain amount was to be used for investigation by the upper-basin States. That was to be distributed, according to the bill, in an equitable way. Then, after a certain period, they were to receive so much for 14 years, $500,000 each year, again to be divided equitably by the upper-basin States, and then proceed to the debt period, and thereafter to be divided equitably by all of the States, including the three lower-basin States, California, Nevada, and Arizona.

There were some meetings at Phoenix and some meetings at some place in Wyoming and elsewhere. Then there were hearings before the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, and I wish to read to the good Senators who have had sufficient patience to remain here and listen to me about what this New Mexico proposition is, pure and simple, what happened at the hearings, and what made the committee unanimously report the amendments.

After the hearings started I got in touch with our water authorities in New Mexico and asked Gov. A. T. Hannett, formerly Governor of the State, who is now assistant attorney general, trying to protect the little right we have in this matter, and our State engineer, Mr. McClure, to come to Washington and testify. They both testified before the committee, and it was after they testified that the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of the Senate unanimously reported the amendments favorably to this body, and not a single objection was raised in this body to the amendments.

I first read from the testimony of Mr. John C. Page, Commissioner of the Bureau of Reclamation, as follows:

Senator ASHURST. State your name and your position.

Mr. PAGE. John C. Page, Commissioner of Bureau of Reclamation.

Senator ASHURST. How long have you held that position?

Mr. PAGE. Since 1937.

Senator ASHURST. Senator CHAVEZ, you may proceed with any questions that you have.

Senator CHAVEZ. Mr. Page, prior to the money being obtained by the appropriation of the special bill appropriating $50,000 for the investigation of the San Juan, did the Reclamation Bureau make any studies of the possibilities or feasibilities of a project on the San Juan River for a transmountain diversion dam?

Mr. PAGE. Nothing of any consequence. We did make a preliminary reconnaissance. We thought that something could be developed there, but money was not available to make a complete investigation.

Senator CHAVEZ. After the Bureau had allocated this money under the appropriation, did you make an investigation and a survey of the possibilities of the transmountain diversion dam?

Mr. PAGE. We made a rather complete investigation of the thing in connection with the general Rio Grande investigation, sponsored by the National Resources Planning Board. At that time we made estimates on the cost of the work, the physical features that would be involved in making that transmountain diversion from the San Juan to the Rio Chama, and included that in the report of the National Resources Planning Board as an over-all picture on the Rio Grande.

Senator CHAVEZ. Did that include an investigation of the needs of the San Juan County people themselves, including the Navajo Indians?

Mr. PAGE. I think that took into account all prospective uses of the San Juan, with the expectation that probably some conservation work, storage, or something of that kind, would be necessary before there was water exported. That is, it would be necessary to augment the low-water supply before an exportation was possible during that low-water season. That did not ripen into what we consider now as the final answer. That is, there are quite a number of questions still left unsolved in connection with the San Juan-Rio Chama diversion, but that principle of protecting the Navajo and white settlers in the San Juan was given consideration at that time.

Senator CHAVEZ. Are you acquainted with the general needs of a water supply in the Rio Grande area, especially from the Colorado line down to the Rio Grande irrigation project at Elephant Butte?

I want Senators to listen to this:

Mr. PAGE. The water supply of the Rio Grande is entirely used. there is no excess water, no possibility of additional development, as we see it, on the Rio Grande unless water is imported. From our preliminary reconnaissance this San Juan-Rio Chama seems to be the best and only way in which New Mexico can use its share of the Colorado River water.

Mr. Page himself was there telling us that we need the water in the Rio Grande. We have within the State of New Mexico 2,400,000 acre-feet, and when we beg for a meagerly 350,000 acre feet, the Senate conferees recede from the Senate amendments. If my friends from Arizona, and my friends from Nevada, and my friends from California, and even my friends from Colorado, realized the necessity and the logic and the need of that water in New Mexico, they would not have receded from the Senate amendments.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator referred to the fact that I presided over the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation. My presiding arose from the circumstance that the able chairman of the committee was detained on other matters, and could not be present to preside.

The climate, the culture of the people, the geography, the physics, are quite similar between Arizona and New Mexico. The relation between the Senators from New Mexico and the Senators from Arizona is of the most cordial character, and I but mildly state the fact when I say that my admiration for the Senators from New Mexico, for their zeal and their ability with respect to protecting their State regarding the waters of the Colorado River, is great.

Mr. President, I give assurances that if I believed that the bill we are now considering or any other bill destroyed any rights New Mexico possessed, I would not vote for it. Each of the Senators from New Mexico is an able lawyer, and I can well understand their commendable zeal and foresight in trying to see to it that nothing shall become a law which might by some future circumstance affect their State adversely. However, after a careful reading of the conference report on the bill I cannot see wherein they are injured. They have the same amount of water, the same rights, they had before the conference report was signed. When the Colorado River compact was drawn, and subsequently agreed to by six of the seven States of the Colorado Basin, including New Mexico, the waters of the Colorado River were apportioned, so much water to the lower basin, which comprised Arizona, Neveda, and California, and so much to the upper basin States, which embrace Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, and New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from New Mexico has the floor, I am speaking at his sufferance.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I should like to ask the Senator a question at that particular point. It is a fact that under the compact 7,500,000 acre-feet should go to the upper basin States, but unless New Mexico gets $50, or a million dollars, how are we to get 1 foot of water to which we are entitled out of this 7,500,000 acre-feet?

Mr. ASHURST. Here are the able Senators from Utah, the able Senators from Colorado, and the able Senators from Wyoming, upper basin States. They might make the same statement. I am not overstating the fact when I assert that no State is better represented in the Senate than are those States of the so-called upper basin. They must take their chances on securing an appropriation, and, so far as I am aware, if they agree on an appropriation, the other States in the West would assist.

Manifestly we may not name projects in a bill of this sort. I was willing to do so if it could be done, to facilitate the Senators from New Mexico, for whom I have a great affection. But if we named a project in New Mexico, how then could we refuse to name a project in the State of Wyoming?

Mr. CHAVEZ. May I answer?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. CHAVEZ. New Mexico stood in a peculiar position, because it was testified before the committee, and it is a fact, that the only possible place where we can have a project is on the San Juan River, and nowhere else. So we have only one place.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have known the Senator from New Mexico since his babyhood.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct.

Mr. ASHURST. I have observed with pride his growth and development, from an earnest, scholarly youth, into a real statesman. He but reflects upon himself when he limits science and emprise and says there is only one place in New Mexico where this water could be used. With all the marvelous discoveries in science, with instruments in geophysics, with this dazzling age before us, and the rich soils there, and water having the proclivity to run down hill, the able Senator, with all his knowledge and understanding, says there is only one place in New Mexico where the water could be used.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Will the Senator listen to me now?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I read from the hearings:

Senator CHAVEZ. What other sources of water supply are there in San Juan County, outside of the tributaries of the San Juan?

Mr. PAGE. I think there are none that could be counted on for any material amount of water. They seem to be the only source from which you can get water enough to make it worth while.

That was the Commissioner of Reclamation. I know New Mexico, and the Senator from Arizona knows New Mexico. If there is one little bit of a stream and nothing else within a thousand miles, where else are you going to get water supply except from that little stream, the San Juan River?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I arose to give assurance that if even in a remote excursion of my imagination I believed that this bill would injure the rights of any upper-basin State or any other State, I would not have signed it. I have reached the envied estate where I am not required to sign papers that do an injustice. There is no contingency in life that is going to induce me to sign a paper—this is not a boast—which will cause great injustice to another State.

I remember, as I was presiding over the Committee on Reclamation, that the able Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] came before the committee and argued well, as he always argues, with a clearness of intellect that has made him one of the outstanding figures in American public life. But we were unanimously against him.

Mr. KING. You were wrong.

Mr. ASHURST. We may have been wrong. I did not think so. Between the State of Arizona and the State of Utah the most cordial relationship exists. Our sympathies, if we have any sympathies in the matter, are with Utah, which, as the able Senator from Utah says, contributes much water to the Colorado River. Surely I need not give assurances to the Senator from Utah that I would not do his State an injustice. I have admiration for his learning and his brilliancy of argument. I simply did not believe the amendment was wise or necessary. I was once willing to go so far as to name a project in New Mexico. I did it, I suspect, largely out of my affection for the two Senators from New Mexico.

I assure the Senators from New Mexico that, in my judgment, they will discover upon a closer investigation that their State is not injured; that it stands side by side with the States of Wyoming, Colorado, and Utah.

I thank the Senator from New Mexico for yielding to me.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I want to thank the Senator from Arizona, for I know his sincerity of purpose. I know that he does not want to hurt New Mexico, but I know that New Mexico would be more satisfied if it gets the benefits it wants—the benefits which the Senator from Arizona speaks of. New Mexico would like to see what the benefits would be.

I want to call the attention of the Senator, if he will listen to me, to the amendment, and those people who like to bring up States' rights; I want them to say whether the amendment injures the bill in any way, shape, or form, or whether it only does what we have in mind to do—to use what belongs to New Mexico as New Mexico sees fit.

I only ask that Arizona shall use her $300,000 a year as she sees fit; that Nevada shall use her $300,000 a year as she sees fit. We are not complaining that Colorado, Utah, or any other State do what they please and what they see fit to do. All we ask by this amendment is that this small State be allowed to exercise its sovereignty as it sees fit, and do with what belongs to them as they see fit.

Here is the amendment:

Any moneys—

Not moneys that belong to another State—

Any moneys accruing for projects in New Mexico—

Not in Utah, not in Colorado, not in Wyoming, not in Nevada, not in California—and appropriated pursuant to the authorizations contained in this subsection shall be available for (1)— the completion by the Bureau of Reclamation of a survey of the transmountain diversion project on the San Juan River in the State of New Mexico.

For what?—

And no possibilities of having it used anywhere else.

And (2) for the construction of such project; and such project shall be so designed—

We went so far in drawing this amendment that we wanted it designed so it would meet the needs, in fair play and in justice, of anyone who was entitled to one gallon of that water—

so as adequately to protect the present and prospective uses of the water in the State of Colorado and in San Juan County, N. Mex., including those of the Navajo Tribe of Indians, and after providing for such needs, any water from such project remaining available for use shall be used as the State of New Mexico may determine.

I want to tell Senators why we are doing that. I have great faith in the Bureau of Reclamation. I know that they have a wonderful history. But they have worked along a certain line. They have certain standards. And I do not want them to have the final say as to whether a project is feasible in New Mexico when the money belongs to us, because under their standard they might come to the conclusion that it is not feasible, but, nevertheless, we in New Mexico may have a State engineer who may say, "Well, if we built it this way—while it might not comply with the standards and the ideas of bureaucratic Washington, nevertheless we can build a project over here and make a living for the people of the State of New Mexico."

Is there anything unfair about that? Would any Senator here want any bureau in Washington, including the Reclamation Bureau, finally to determine what shall be done in the State of South Carolina or Arizona or Mississippi or Michigan or elsewhere? Especially, as the money belongs to us, why should not we have something to say about that? Is there anything unfair about that amendment?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I need not advise the able Senator from New Mexico that Commissioners of Reclamation may recommend or they may decline to recommend. The able Senator knows, of course, that no matter what the Commissioner of Reclamation may recommend or fail to recommend, Congress is the authority in the matter, Congress has the power to authorize projects where Congress chooses, notwithstanding what the honorable Commissioner of Reclamation may report or fail to report.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes; but I have had this experience, that Congress may pass a bill and then the Bureau of Reclamation or some Department of the Government makes an adverse report and sends it to the President, and possibly the bill may not be signed by the President.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I am sure the able Senator from Arizona has studied the bill. It is my interpretation of the bill that the bill itself gives to the Secretary of the Interior absolute and complete power, and it would take a special act of Congress to go back and change the present bill.

Mr. ASHURST. That might be, but Congress nevertheless has the power to authorize projects anywhere Congress chooses. I am not going to be drawn into a legal argument with the able Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH]. I have served with him on the Judiciary Committee so long that I have no disposition to get into an argument with him on legal matters. I have learned to respect his opinion so highly that I seek no controversy with him. But I am sure the able Senator will agree with me that if the Congress desired to take certain action, there is nothing to prevent future Congresses from doing just what they please with respect to the matter.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, as a practical proposition, how many bills does the Senate pass which are not favorably reported by some department? How many times have bills been turned down, over and over, or vetoed, not because Congress did not pass them, but because some Government bureau said, "No"? That happens every day in the week, and we see it. And I still want to feel that South Carolina, that Arizona, that Louisiana, that New Mexico should have something to say about whatever little mite belongs to them—at least should have something to say about it. Why leave the complete veto power in a Government bureau, in bureaucrats?

The amendment does not hurt the bill. The amendment does not interfere with California getting $100,000,000 advantage through the Boulder Dam. The amendment does not interfere with Nevada getting $300,000 a year. The amendment does not interfere with Arizona getting $300,000 a year. The amendment does not interfere with lower power rates in southern California. All we ask is fair play and justice from this body.

We are always talking about States' rights. I still maintain that that is a fundamental principle which should be considered in this day and age. I still maintain that this body should realize that throwing away this amendment is a step in the direction of abolishing States' rights, and that perhaps in the not distant future the same proposal may be applied to some other State. This is a question which means more than the actual few benefits which the State of New Mexico might receive. We maintain that we have an interest in Boulder Dam. We maintain that the revenue should be divided in a way which would take care of the interests of all the States involved. We do not want to interfere with what any other State might do with its share, but we do ask that New Mexico be allowed to do what it pleases with its share.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. While the Senator is on the subject of States' rights, I should like to ask him whence does the water come which he would divert under his amendment? What is the source of the water which the Senator from New Mexico would divert under the provisions of his amendment?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Knowing where it comes from——

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Where does it come from?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I shall answer the question of the Senator from Colorado to his satisfaction. The amendment reads:

> For the construction of such project; and such project shall be designed so as to adequately protect the present and prospective uses of water in the State of Colorado and in San Juan County, N. Mex.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. From what State does the water come?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Part of it comes from Colorado.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Does not all of it come from the State of Colorado?

Mr. CHAVEZ. No.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Does not all the water which the Senator would divert come from Colorado?

Mr. CHAVEZ. No.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Has an agreement been reached between Colorado and New Mexico as to the use of that water?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes; and Mr. Stone, the representative of the State of Colorado, who appeared before the committee, helped draw that amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. Stone has no right to agree to anything on behalf of the State of Colorado.

Mr. CHAVEZ. But there is already a compact between Colorado and New Mexico.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. As to the use of this particular water?

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. As to the construction of compensating reservoirs?

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is my understanding. We did not want to take advantage of Colorado, so we inserted Colorado, so that Colorado might be fully protected in what she is entitled to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator from New Mexico has an entirely different understanding of this whole matter from that of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. CHAVEZ. This language is certainly clear.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The language does not mean anything.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The language is—

> For the construction of such project; and such project shall be designed so as to adequately protect the present and prospective uses of water in the State of Colorado and in San Juan County, N. Mex.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. But no agreement has been reached between Colorado and New Mexico as to the use of this water.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The only information I have is from Commissioner Stone. We did not want to take anything away from Colorado or any other State.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. Is it not a fact that neither the Boulder Canyon Act nor this act prevents any State from taking water out of any river within its boundaries, at its own expense, and for any purpose it wishes?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is expressly provided.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is my understanding.

Mr. PITTMAN. In this bill we are dealing only with a fund.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct.

Mr. PITTMAN. We do not take any rights away from the States. Five years prior to 1928 we had the same argument about who furnishes the water. We knew well enough that the Government could not build any dam on the river unless all the States should agree, because otherwise we should have a debate here for a long time.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The States did not all agree, but the dam was built.

Mr. PITTMAN. Six of them agreed. The Senator's State agreed.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct.

Mr. PITTMAN. We divided the water, one-half for the upper States and one-half for the lower States. The water we are using at Boulder Dam is our half, no matter where it comes from.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes; and unless we build some projects in my State we shall not receive our share. That is why we should like to build these small projects.

Mr. PITTMAN. Is it not a fact that the Commissioner of Reclamation testified that he would immediately investigate the project in New Mexico?

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct.

Mr. PITTMAN. If the project is feasible it will be built.

Mr. CHAVEZ. If the Commissioner finds that it is not feasible, does the Senator think the Commissioner should have the say as to what we should do, or what money we might receive?

Mr. PITTMAN. The sponsors of the project may come to Congress if they desire and ask for an appropriation for the project.

Mr. CHAVEZ. My intentions for the State of Nevada are the best; but I still maintain that so far as any benefits to be received by the State of Nevada are concerned, Nevada should depend more on the Senator from Nevada than on the Senator from New Mexico.

ADJOURNMENT TO JULY 22, 1940

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The House has sent over a concurrent resolution providing for an adjournment until Monday, July 22, 1940. The House is waiting for us to act on it. Does the Senator from New Mexico object to having the concurrent resolution laid before the Senate so that the Senate may act upon it, and Senators may understand the program?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that House Concurrent Resolution 86 be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution 86, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, July 11, 1940, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, Monday, July 22, 1940.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move the adoption of the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Many Senators have asked what the program, following the 22d, is to be, so far as we can now anticipate it. Efforts had been made to adjourn until the 29th instead of the 22d, because in all probability it will be the middle of the following week before Senators can return to Washington, and the probability is that a quorum would not be present during that week. I have consulted with the minority leader, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], and we have reached a tentative understanding that no important business will be transacted during the week of the 22d. Very likely we shall have 3-day recesses, from Monday the 22d until the following Thursday, and then until the following Monday, so that Senators may make their plans according to that schedule. I felt that the Senate was entitled to that information.

BOULDER DAM—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9877) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate and to put into effect charges for electrical energy generated at Boulder Dam, providing for the application of revenues from said project, authorizing the operation of the Boulder Power Plant by the United States directly or through agents, and for other purposes.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that there is only one source of water from which we can receive any benefits. Much has been said as to the 7,500,000 acre-feet which the upper-basin States are supposed to receive. We have only one source of water supply.

I wish to read from the testimony of Mr. Page, Commissioner of Reclamation:

Senator CHAVEZ. What other sources of water supply are there in San Juan County, outside of the tributaries of the San Juan?

Mr. PAGE. I think there are none that could be counted on for any material amount of water. They seem to be the only source from which you can get water enough to make it worth while.

Senator CHAVEZ. This Animas-La Plata project that has been discussed here is only a small item?

Mr. PAGE. Yes; and that is pretty well covered by a compact, and pretty well used. The storage on the La Plata will help the situation. It has already ripened into an interstate compact.

Senator CHAVEZ. That can only be used by the people who are now using that water?

Mr. PAGE. Yes.

Senator CHAVEZ. And will not provide additional acreage or an additional supply for anything else?

Mr. PAGE. There seems to be no possibility of developing any additional area.

Senator CHAVEZ. Are there any projects contemplated at or near Aztec in San Juan County?

Mr. PAGE. I cannot answer that positively, but none of any consequence that I know of.

Senator CHAVEZ. Then in short, the only possibility to get additional water in the Rio Grande Valley would be through a storage transmountain diversion?

Mr. PAGE. Under the present investigation, that is the fact.

Senator CHAVEZ. And the San Juan is the only source of water supply from which New Mexico could get its proportionate share of the 7,500,000 acre-feet that is allotted under the original compact?

Mr. PAGE. That seems to be the only opportunity we found.

Senator CHAVEZ. So, you feel New Mexico, as far as your end of it is concerned, is on the right road to get that water, if it is at all feasible or proper?

Mr. PAGE. Definitely so; yes.

Senator ASHURST. Did you wish to interrogate Mr. Page on any other matter, just now?

Senator CHAVEZ. That is about all.

Mr. President, I wish to read some further testimony from the committee hearings. Mr. A. T. Hannett, former Governor of the State of New Mexico, who is now assistant attorney general, and in charge of trying to protect what little is left under the Boulder Dam Act, appeared before the committee and testified at the hearing, at which the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] presided. I read:

Senator ASHURST. Will you please give the reporter your full name and occupation for the record?

Mr. HANNETT. Arthur T. Hannett, lawyer; post-office box 497, Albuquerque, N. Mex.; special assistant attorney general; attorney before the United States Supreme Court; also attorney general for a good many years, 25 or 26 years.

Senator ASHURST. Governor, you may proceed to make any statement that you wish.

Mr. HANNETT. As you gentlemen all well know, this particular bill has been debated over a period of years by the States involved. The four upper-basin States formed an organization—more or less of an organization—and employed an electrical engineer of national reputation by the name of Sands, also Mr. Tipton, of Colorado, a hydraulic engineer, to advise us on the practical effect that this bill would have on the various States and the revenues produced from the sale of electric energy at Boulder Dam, and from that report deduced certain conclusions. California, with its experts, differed on many of those conclusions. We held, as I said, numerous meetings, and the final meeting was held at Phoenix, Ariz.

New Mexico and its representatives felt at all times that under the original bill the rights and interests of the upper-basin States were inadequately protected. We feel that that is true as to this proposed bill.

Under the terms of the bill, as we see it—

I should like to have the Senate listen particularly to this testimony—

Under the terms of the bill, as we see it, based upon the report of Mr. Sands and Mr. Tipton, the State of California will benefit, over the period of time, not less than $100,000,000, probably $150,000,000. That is not a nebulous thing, it is capable of being figured out in dollars and cents. The States of Nevada and Arizona will benefit definitely, without any question, substantially $300,000 each year. Under the bill, as we see it, as far as the State of New Mexico and the other upper-basin States are concerned, there is nothing definite as to what any State is going to get.

That was the reason for the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Mexico.

We have gone along; we have been a compact State, and we have gone along with the four upper-basin States, and our relations have been very pleasant, but we feel that this bill should have made some definite provision as to what New Mexico was going to derive, if anything. As it stands now, as we conceive it, we have nothing under the old bill, and we think the old bill was inequitable.

We think the new bill is inequitable. We think, under Mr. Sands' report, it shows that instead of getting $500,000 a year we should receive $1,000,000 a year. That report was available to us at a meeting in Denver, and it was available at the Phoenix meeting, together with Mr. Tipton's report. At that time each of the four upper-basin States were in accord and backing up Mr. Sands' report, and it is our firm belief that it was a fair, able, and honest report. Utah was particularly vigorous in denouncing the bill, and Wyoming, likewise, and Colorado to some lesser extent.

When we met in Phoenix, Utah's position had been reversed and Colorado's position very much modified. Wyoming and New Mexico finally stood as opponents to the bill.

[At this point Mr. CHAVEZ yielded to Mr. OVERTON, on whose request House Joint Resolution 582 was considered and passed, which proceedings appear at the end of Mr. CHAVEZ's remarks.]

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I shall continue reading from the testimony of Governor Hannett of New Mexico, on the pending bill, before the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation. I have previously stated that the benefits to be derived by New Mexico were insignificant, I have stated heretofore also the State of California and the other lower-basin States were to get millions of dollars of benefits. I now resume the quotation from Governor Hannett:

Senator MCCARRAN. Wyoming and New Mexico were opposed to the bill?

Mr. HANNETT. Wyoming and New Mexico were opposed to the bill, I do not claim to have any technical knowledge either as a hydraulic engineer or as an electrical engineer, but from the discussions that we had, and from the study that I made of Mr. Sand's report—both our Senators have it—I still believe that that would have been an equitable basis for the distribution of this fund, that is the upper-basin States should have had the $1,000,000 a year instead of the $500,000, considering the benefits that have been definitely pegged down to Arizona, Nevada, and California. As it stands now we have an undivided interest in a fund which will be spent by a Government agency. Whether there will ever be a substantial development in New Mexico out of that fund is problematical.

It has always been our position that whatever New Mexico is to derive out of this should be pegged down like Nevada's rights are pegged down, and California's rights are pegged down. After all, the share we get, compared to the benefits of California, for instance, is trifling. When I say California will receive $100,000,000, that is the minimum. My guess is it is probably somewhere between $130,000,000 to $150,000,000, based on Mr. Sands' report, a large part of which is highly technical, and I am not in a position to discuss the technical details.

Senator CHAVEZ. Governor, may I interrupt you right there? The Mr. Sands you refer to is an engineer of national reputation throughout the United States?

Mr. HANNETT. I understand he has a national reputation. He was selected by Judge Stone and Mr. Tipton, and we four upper-basin States paid them the honorarium that they asked. While I understand they differed widely in some of their findings with California engineers, I have no reason to question the fairness nor the integrity of the California engineers nor the good faith or the integrity of Mr. Sands. Perhaps somewhere between the figures of each lies the truth. I do not know; I am not an engineer.

I think that covers what I desire to say, unless there are some questions.

Senator CHAVEZ. Governor, you mentioned that, under the Sands report, $1,000,000 a year instead of $500,000 a year would appear more equitable to the upper-basin States.

Mr. HANNETT. That was the thought and the belief of all four upper-basin States at the Phoenix meeting.

Senator CHAVEZ. And you further contend, as a representative of the New Mexico water interests, that whatever amount it might be should be set up definitely in the legislation so that New Mexico may know just exactly what it is going to get?

Mr. HANNETT. That has always been our hope.

Senator CHAVEZ. Whether it is part of the $500,000, or part of the $1,000,000?

Mr. HANNETT. Be it ever so small, we think we ought to know what it is, and that we are going to get it.

That is all this amendment would do; it would merely provide what we would get and how it should be used.

Senator CHAVEZ. And that the legislation should contain wording, or be clarified to such an extent that the New Mexico water authorities could decide as to what to do with their little mite?

Mr. HANNETT. That is exactly right.

And that is exactly what the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico contained.

Senator CHAVEZ. Now, what particular projects, if any, did the New Mexico authorities have in mind with reference to this legislation?

Mr. HANNETT. We have three projects in mind: The Navajo Indian Tribe in San Juan County, an area that can be developed; there is a small area along the San Juan River in San Juan County, and some development on the Animas and La Plata. The project that we feel is of the greatest importance to the State of New Mexico is what is generally known as the San Juan-Chama diversion.

Senator CHAVEZ. Is there any source of water supply there by which New Mexico can avail itself of any rights it might have under the compact outside of the San Juan?

Mr. HANNETT. No.

Senator CHAVEZ. That is the only one?

Mr. HANNETT. Yes.

Senator HATCH. That is the San Juan-Chama diversion?

Mr. HANNETT. Yes.

Senator CHAVEZ. What is the situation, Governor, with reference to the water supply in the Rio Grande now between, say, the boundary of Texas on the south and the boundary of Colorado on the north?

Mr. HANNETT. The water supply has been inadequate. Texas sued the State of New Mexico.

We are fighting for what little water we have in New Mexico now. We had to come clear to the Supreme Court of the United States; and when we asked for the protection of a little mite that might help what little we have over there, the Senate conferees receded on that amendment. I do not doubt their good faith at all, but they have done a grave injustice to the State of New Mexico.

Mr. HANNETT. The water supply has been inadequate. Texas sued the State of New Mexico. We had a long and expensive litigation. It has been inadequate at times. We finally entered into a compact, and during the negotiations for this compact the States of Texas, Colorado, and New Mexico entered into an agreement for a joint investigation. A large sum of money was spent by the States and the Federal Government on what is known as the joint Rio Grande investigation. New Mexico asked that the feasibility and practicability of the San Juan diversion and of the transmountain diversion into the Rio Grande be investigated, and a large sum of money was devoted out of that sum to this investigation, and it was found to be feasible and practical.

Along the same lines, testimony was submitted by our State engineer, Mr. Thomas M. McClure. Testimony was submitted by Dr. Woehlke, of the Indian Bureau, concerning the rights of the Navajo Indians in San Juan County, N. Mex. But the appeal I want to make to this body is this: It is fair, and it is just. I know that we are not getting what we are entitled to. I know that California and Nevada and Arizona are getting the bulk of the benefit; but we do ask you, in all sincerity, that, whatever we get, you allow the State of New Mexico to do as it pleases with its share.

Mr. President, I do not want to proceed very much longer. I ask unanimous consent that the complete statements of Governor Hannett; Mr. Page; Mr. Thomas M. McClure, State engineer of New Mexico; and Dr. Woehlke, of the Indian Bureau; and a letter from me to Mr. Page and his answer be inserted in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. I desire to make an observation or two in connection with this matter and see if we cannot arrive at a practical understanding of the situation as it faces us.

I am in this position: If the Senator's amendments had been included in the conference report, I would have cheerfully voted for the conference report. I can see no harm or injury to any other State that would come about by including his amendments. Upon the other hand, the failure to enact them, in my judgment, does not reflect in any adverse manner on the State of New Mexico, for this reason:

If these provisions were contained in the bill, after all, it is a mere authorizing act. It does not carry one cent of money. So, in order to carry out the purposes which the Senator from New Mexico has in mind, whether his amendments are in the bill or are not in the bill, an appropriation by Congress would first be required to begin immediate investigations to determine the feasibility and practicability of diverting water from the San Juan over into the Chama and then into the Rio Grande. Let me add further that of my own personal knowledge I am satisfied that additional water for irrigation is the greatest benefit that can possibly come to the State of New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. May I ask the Senator a question at that point?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Suppose the Bureau of Reclamation were to decide that the project which they had been investigating was not feasible either from an engineering or from an economic standpoint, what would New Mexico get then, under the provisions of the bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. I will say to the Senator that I am so firmly convinced that an increased supply of water is absolutely essential for the Rio Grande Valley in New Mexico, and I am so firmly convinced that the only source of getting that water is from the San Juan watershed, that beyond question it is absolutely necessary that it must and will be done. Exactly how to do it is something else, but in the long run for a certainty the water must be brought out of the San Juan drainage basin over into the Rio Grande Valley. Irrigation has been practiced in that valley for as long a time, if not longer, than anywhere else in the United States. They know how to use the water. The present water supply is inadequate. An additional supply must be obtained in that way; and if it were necessary to do it in an unusual way, still the public interest would require that the water be brought from one drainage basin into the other.

If that is the case, the only way to find that out is by first using some money to make an engineering investigation. Conditions change. What turned out to be perfectly practicable in building Boulder Dam would have been utterly out of place 20 or 30 years ago; and so it is on many other irrigation-project investigations that must be made. We are living in a new and a live world, where better ways of doing things are constantly found. I say that this transmountain diversion in New Mexico is a thing which has to be done and a way will be found to do it.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is just the point. We think—anyway, some of the people of New Mexico have faith that they can also think, as well as the people here in Washington.

Mr. HAYDEN. But let us get at the practical proposition. All that there is in the bill is a promise. If and when the bill passes, a million and one-half dollars contributed by the consumers of power in southern California will be put in the Treasury of the United States subject to appropriation by Congress. The first thing to do then is to get an appropriation to do this work. I say to the Senator this is my honest judgment, as a friend of the State of New Mexico, as one deeply interested in the development of every water resource that we possibly can in the United States, primarily to acquire vested rights ahead of uses in old Mexico by developing projects in the United States. I want to see the work started everywhere within the Colorado River Basin. Following up that idea, I have conferred with the Bureau of Reclamation, and I have here a letter which I desire to read into the RECORD which promises that immediately this bill becomes a law estimates will be submitted, so that there can be enacted, before the present Congress adjourns, an appropriation to carry out the work.

If the Senator will permit me, I will read the letter at this time.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I shall be glad to have that done.

Mr. HAYDEN. It is addressed to me, based upon an inquiry I made:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, July 8, 1940.

HON. CARL HAYDEN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR HAYDEN: Some discussion has arisen as to the manner in which plans for development in the Upper Basin States, to be financed from the Colorado River development fund, will be prepared. Much work needs to be done in this basin and immediately on passage of the proposed Boulder Dam Adjustment Act it is planned to submit a Budget estimate for $320,000, to be divided equally among the States of Colorado, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming.

That would be $80,000 in each State—

It is particularly important that work be pushed in determining the feasibility of using the maximum water in the Upper Basin States permitted by the Colorado River compact. It is therefore hoped that such a Budget estimate will receive favorable consideration.

Sincerely yours,

EBERT K. BURLEW,
First Assistant Secretary and Budget Officer.

That money should be available within 30 or 40 days to put engineering parties in the field in New Mexico, in Wyoming, in Colorado, and in Utah to go to work this fall, and work as long as they can. If the altitudes are too high, they may have to drop the work in midwinter, but they will be ready to continue early in the spring.

What will be the result if we do not adopt the conference report? Just take the practical side of it. The money then will not be transferred from the consumers of power in Los Angeles to the Treasury of the United States. A million and a half dollars will not be available for appropriation by Congress.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I think they are more anxious to pass the bill than we are, because we are not getting anything.

Mr. HAYDEN. I am just stating the facts—that if this bill becomes a law, that money will then be transferred to the Federal Treasury. It will be a special fund. It will not be money raised from the taxpayers.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is the reason why I think it is right to have the State of New Mexico determine whether it is a feasible thing or not, because it does not come from the taxpayers, because it comes from a fund that will have been created by the power derived from some water source in the State of New Mexico in which the people of New Mexico have an interest.

Mr. HAYDEN. I understand; and if that provision were in the conference report I would cheerfully vote for it, because I can see no harm done to any other State; but it is not there.

We are faced with this practical proposition: We have a conference report here. If we adopt it, immediately, and the bill is signed by the President, the million and a half dollars will be transferred into the Treasury of the United States. Then a Budget estimate will be submitted, and an appropriation of $320,000 will be made to put surveying parties out to work this fall and winter. We will get immediate action on money, and I am satisfied that there will be no question about obtaining the money. I can pledge the Senator, as a member of the Senate Committee on Appropriations which has something to do with appropriations of this character, that he shall have my most hearty support in seeing that before this Congress adjourns the very thing that he wants done shall be done, which will convert a promise into a reality.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes; I fully understand that, and I appreciate what the Senator from Arizona has said with reference to getting an appropriation for the investigation; but the fund will still continue to increase. If, after they spend this money that the Senator from Arizona and I are going to help to appropriate, the Reclamation Bureau find that this thing is not feasible either from an engineering standpoint or from an economic standpoint, what is New Mexico going to get in the future?

Mr. HAYDEN. Let us look at the matter in this way: There will be $500,000 a year going into this special fund, and New Mexico's share of that $500,000 will be what? $100,000 a year?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I do not know. I wanted to have it divided equally. Then we would know what we are going to get.

Mr. HAYDEN. If it were divided equally, it would be $125,000 a year for each of the four upper-basin States.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct.

Mr. HAYDEN. One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars a year would have to accumulate for about how many decades and generations before it would be possible to build a substantial project in New Mexico to divert water from the San Juan River?

Mr. CHAVEZ. But at least we would know what we were going to have. As it is now, we do not know whether we are going to get a penny or anything else; and in our opinion—I am sincere about this——

Mr. HAYDEN. I want to compliment the Senator upon the way in which he has presented this case in behalf of his State; but speaking for all who are anxious to see final action, I want to assure him that so far as we are concerned, all of us, we shall do everything possible to see that his wishes are carried out, and immediately, not by a promise, but by actually putting the cash to work.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Of course, the cash will be all right. The only thing I want is to see that that cash is spent by someone who has an interest in the State of New Mexico.

I am not worried about the Senate. I know I have the confidence of my colleagues and that New Mexico will have its day in court before the Committee on Appropriations. But after we appropriate the money, who is to determine whether it is to be spent in the State of New Mexico, or the State of Wyoming, or elsewhere? That is why I object to this.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I very frequently have the same difficulty to meet in my own State of Arizona. There are those who sincerely believe that enormous quantities of water are available in the Colorado River, and can be used to irrigate great areas of land in Arizona, and they insist upon the right of the State of Arizona to acquire that water. Yet, as a practical matter, the only place where we will ever get money enough to build such great projects is the Treasury of the United States, and that is the true situation in New Mexico. The money will have to come from a Federal source. New Mexico is not rich enough to build this project by itself.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is why we want New Mexico to have something to say about it.

Mr. HAYDEN. Nor is Arizona ever going to have money enough to build great projects without the utmost help from the Federal Government.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct.

Mr. HAYDEN. But we can use the funds made available by this bill to demonstrate their feasibility.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HAYDEN. I am as thoroughly convinced as that I stand here that water will be diverted out of the headwaters of the San Juan River into the Rio Grande.

Mr. CHAVEZ. We would like to have something to say about it.

Mr. President, I have said about all I care to say regarding the matter. I maintain that we have been reasonable with this body. I still feel that the report of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation was a good report, based upon sound reasons and based upon conclusions arrived at after a complete hearing. I still think that this is a matter which affects the future rights of my State and that we are not asking very much when we say that the motion of the Senator from Nevada should be defeated, and that the bill should be allowed to go back to conference to see if we cannot work out something else.

I have extreme confidence in the Senator from Nevada, the Senator from Arizona, and the Senator from California, but whether we like it or not, due to the geographical location of the individual States, their interests are entirely different from those of the State of New Mexico. We were handicapped notwithstanding their sincerity of purpose. Notwithstanding the fact that the committee reported the amendments unanimously and the Senate voted them into the bill without objection, there was no proponent on the conference of one of the States greatly interested in the measure.

I know the Senators meant to do what was right, but, after all, they do represent other States than New Mexico and we feel that New Mexico should have been represented, and should be represented, even if it is necessary to increase the number of conferees. I hope the Senate will defeat the motion.

EXHIBIT A

STATEMENT OF JOHN C. PAGE, COMMISSIONER OF BUREAU OF RECLAMATION

Senator ASHURST. State your name and your position.

Mr. PAGE. John C. Page, Commissioner of Bureau of Reclamation.

Senator ASHURST. How long have you held that position?

Mr. PAGE. Since 1937.

Senator ASHURST. Senator CHAVEZ, you may proceed with any questions that you have.

Senator CHAVEZ. Mr. Page, prior to the money being obtained by the appropriation of the special bill appropriating $50,000 for the investigation of the San Juan, did the Reclamation Bureau make any studies of the possibilities or feasibilities of a project on the San Juan River for a transmountain diversion dam?

Mr. PAGE. Nothing of any consequence. We did make a preliminary reconnaissance. We thought that something could be developed there, but money was not available to make a complete investigation.

Senator CHAVEZ. After the Bureau had allocated this money under the appropriation, did you make an investigation and a survey of the possibilities of the transmountain diversion dam?

Mr. PAGE. We made a rather complete investigation of the thing in connection with the general Rio Grande investigation, sponsored by the National Resources Planning Board. At that time we made estimates on the cost of the work, the physical features that would be involved in making that transmountain diversion from the San Juan to the Rio Chama, and included that in the report of the National Resources Planning Board as an over-all picture on the Rio Grande.

Senator CHAVEZ. Did that include an investigation of the needs of the San Juan County people themselves, including the Navajo Indians?

Mr. PAGE. I think that took into account all prospective uses of the San Juan, with the expectation that probably some conservation work, storage, or something of that kind, would be necessary before there was water exported. That is, it would be necessary to augment the low water supply before an exportation was possible during that low water season. That did not ripen into what we consider now as the final answer. That is, there are quite a number of questions still left unsolved in connection with the San Juan-Rio Chama diversion, but that principle of protecting the Navajo and white settlers in the San Juan was given consideration at that time.

Senator CHAVEZ. Are you acquainted with the general needs of a water supply in the Rio Grande area, especially from the Colorado line down to the Rio Grande irrigation project at Elephant Butte?

Mr. PAGE. The water supply of the Rio Grande is entirely used. There is no excess water, no possibility of additional development, as we see it, on the Rio Grande unless water is imported. From our preliminary reconnaissance this San Juan-Rio Chama seems to be the best and only way in which New Mexico can use its share of the Colorado River water.

Senator CHAVEZ. Do you still have to make further surveys to come to a definite conclusion?

Mr. PAGE. To reach a final decision as to what the cost would be, and the details of that thing, we should have some drilling, dam site drilling, and some more detailed study on the geology of the transmountain tunnel, and several things which should be cinched before we are willing to say that this is what it is going to cost.

Senator CHAVEZ. Is it your purpose, if this bill should be enacted into law, to use some of the money that will be created in this special fund?

Mr. PAGE. Undoubtedly, because we hope to use this money which would be made available by this law to make a complete inventory of all the possibilities of irrigation and development that the Colorado River water in New Mexico and the other States might have, and this is thus far the most attractive proposition that has shown up in that part of New Mexico.

Senator CHAVEZ. What other sources of water supply are there in San Juan County, outside of the tributaries of the San Juan?

Mr. PAGE. I think there are none that could be counted on for any material amount of water. They seem to be the only source from which you can get water enough to make it worth while.

Senator CHAVEZ. This Animas-La Plata project that has been discussed here is only a small item?

Mr. PAGE. Yes; and that is pretty well covered by a compact, and pretty well used. The storage on the La Plata will help the situation. It has already ripened into an interstate compact.

Senator CHAVEZ. That can only be used by the people who are now using that water?

Mr. PAGE. Yes.

Senator CHAVEZ. And will not provide additional acreage or an additional supply for anything else?

Mr. PAGE. There seems to be no possibility of developing any additional area.

Senator CHAVEZ. Are there any projects contemplated at or near Aztec in San Juan County?

Mr. PAGE. I cannot answer that positively, but none of any consequence that I know of.

Senator CHAVEZ. Then, in short, the only possibility to get additional water in the Rio Grande Valley would be through a storage transmountain diversion?

Mr. PAGE. Under the present investigation, that is the fact.

Senator CHAVEZ. And the San Juan is the only source of water supply from which New Mexico could get its proportionate share of the 7,500,000 acre-feet that is allotted under the original compact?

Mr. PAGE. That seems to be the only opportunity we found.

Senator CHAVEZ. So, you feel New Mexico, as far as your end of it is concerned, is on the right road to get that water, if it is at all feasible or proper?

Mr. PAGE. Definitely so; yes.

Senator ASHURST. Did you wish to interrogate Mr. Page on any other matter, just now?

Senator CHAVEZ. That is about all.

Senator ASHURST. Mr. Page, you are at liberty to make any statement you choose for the record.

Mr. PAGE. I am in no position to make a statement.

Senator ASHURST. All right, Mr. Wallace.

STATEMENT OF ARTHUR T. HANNETT, SPECIAL ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL OF NEW MEXICO

Senator ASHURST. Will you please give the reporter your full name and occupation for the record?

Mr. HANNETT. Arthur T. Hannett, lawyer; post-office box 497, Albuquerque, N. Mex.; special assistant attorney general; attorney before the United States Supreme Court; also attorney general for a good many years—25 or 26 years.

Senator ASHURST. Governor, you may proceed to make any statement that you wish.

Mr. HANNETT. As you gentlemen all well know, this particular bill has been debated over a period of years by the States involved. The four upper-basin States formed an organization—more or less of an organization—and employed an electrical engineer of national reputation by the name of Sands, also Mr. Tipton, of Colorado, a hydraulic engineer, to advise us on the practical effect that this bill would have on the various States and the revenues produced from the sale of electric energy at Boulder Dam. Mr. Sands made a report and from that report deduced certain conclusions. California, with its experts, differed on many of those conclusions. We held, as I said, numerous meetings, and the final meeting was held at Phoenix, Ariz.

New Mexico and its representatives felt at all times that under the original bill the rights and interests of the upper-basin States were inadequately protected. We feel that that is true as to this proposed bill.

At Phoenix, Ariz., the four upper-basin States, in a meeting, voted 2 to 2 as to whether the bill in the form then proposed would have the backing of the upper-basin States—Wyoming and New Mexico voting "No." The meeting broke up about midnight. Mr. McClure and I were leaving the next morning early, and I think it was about 4 o'clock in the morning when we had a conference with Judge Stone and Dr. Harlan H. Barrows, of the National Resources Commission, in which we finally agreed that New Mexico would take the position that it would not fight the bill, but we wanted the record to show, and the record does show, that, while we were not going to fight the bill, we did not approve of it; nor did we claim to have the power to control any action that would be taken, either by our Congressman or our Senators.

I would like to make a brief statement as to why we feel that the bill as it stands now does not adequately protect New Mexico.

Under the terms of the bill, as we see it, based upon the report of Mr. Sands and Mr. Tipton, the State of California will benefit, over the period of time, not less than $100,000,000—probably $150,000,000. That is not a nebulous thing; it is capable of being figured out in dollars and cents. The States of Nevada and Arizona will benefit definitely, without any question, substantially $300,000 each year. Under the bill, as we see it, as far as the State of New Mexico and the other upper-basin States are concerned, there is nothing definite as to what any State is going to get.

We have gone along; we have been a compact State; and we have gone along with the four upper-basin States, and our relations have been very pleasant, but we feel that this bill should have made some definite provision as to what New Mexico was going to derive, if anything. As it stands now, as we conceive it, we have not a thing under the old bill, and we think the old bill was inequitable.

We think the new bill is inequitable. We think, under Mr. Sands' report, it shows that instead of getting $500,000 a year we should receive $1,000,000 a year. That report was available to us at a meeting in Denver, and it was available at the Phoenix meeting, together with Mr. Tipton's report. At that time each of the four upper-basin States were in accord and backing up Mr. Sands' report, and it is our firm belief that it was a fair, able, and honest report. Utah was particularly vigorous in denouncing the bill, and Wyoming likewise, and Colorado to some lesser extent.

When we met in Phoenix, Utah's position had been reversed and Colorado's position very much modified. Wyoming and New Mexico finally stood as opponents to the bill.

Senator MCCARRAN. Wyoming and New Mexico were opposed to the bill?

Mr. HANNETT. Wyoming and New Mexico were opposed to the bill. I do not claim to have any technical knowledge, either as a hydraulic engineer or as an electrical engineer, but, from the discussions that we had, and from the study that I made of Mr. Sands' report—both our Senators have it—I still believe that that would have been an equitable basis for the distribution of this fund; that is, the upper-basin States should have had the $1,000,000 a year instead of the $500,000, considering the benefits that have been definitely pegged down to Arizona, Nevada, and California. As it stands now, we have an undivided interest in a fund which will be spent by a Government agency. Whether there will ever be a substantial development in New Mexico out of that fund is problematical.

It has always been our position that whatever New Mexico is to derive out of this should be pegged down like Nevada's rights are pegged down and California's rights are pegged down. After all, the share we get, compared to the benefits of California, for instance, is trifling. When I say California will receive $100,000,000, that is the minimum. My guess is it is probably somewhere between $130,000,000 to $150,000,000, based on Mr. Sands' report, a large part of which is highly technical, and I am not in a position to discuss the technical details.

Senator CHAVEZ. Governor, may I interrupt you right there? The Mr. Sands you refer to is an engineer of national reputation throughout the United States?

Mr. HANNETT. I understand he has a national reputation. He was selected by Judge Stone and Mr. Tipton, and we four upper-basin States paid them the honorarium that they asked. While I understand they differed widely in some of their findings with California engineers, I have no reason to question the fairness nor the integrity of the California engineers nor the good faith or the integrity of Mr. Sands. Perhaps somewhere between the figures of each lies the truth. I do not know; I am not an engineer.

I think that covers what I desire to say, unless there are some questions.

Senator CHAVEZ. Governor, you mentioned that, under the Sands report, $1,000,000 a year instead of $500,000 a year would appear more equitable to the upper-basin States.

Mr. HANNETT. That was the thought and the belief of all four upper-basin States at the Phoenix meeting.

Senator CHAVEZ. And you further contend, as a representative of the New Mexico water interests, that whatever amount it might be should be set up definitely in the legislation, so that New Mexico may know just exactly what it is going to get?

Mr. HANNETT. That has always been our hope.

Senator CHAVEZ. Whether it is part of the $500,000 or part of the $1,000,000?

Mr. HANNETT. Be it ever so small, we think we ought to know what it is and that we are going to get it.

Senator CHAVEZ. And that the legislation should contain wording or be clarified to such an extent that the New Mexico water authorities could decide as to what to do with their little mite?

Mr. HANNETT. That is exactly right.

Senator CHAVEZ. Now, what particular projects, if any, did the New Mexico authorities have in mind with reference to this legislation?

Mr. HANNETT. We have three projects in mind: The Navajo Indian Tribe in San Juan County, an area that can be developed; there is a small area along the San Juan River in San Juan County, and some development on the Animas and La Plata. The project that we feel is of the greatest importance to the State of New Mexico is what is generally known as the San Juan-Chama diversion.

Senator CHAVEZ. Is there any source of water supply there by which New Mexico can avail itself of any rights it might have under the compact outside of the San Juan?

Mr. HANNETT. No.

Senator CHAVEZ. That is the only one?

Mr. HANNETT. Yes.

Senator HATCH. That is the San Juan-Chama diversion?

Mr. HANNETT. Yes.

Senator CHAVEZ. What is the situation, Governor, with reference to the water supply in the Rio Grande now between, say, the boundary of Texas on the south and the boundary of Colorado on the north?

Mr. HANNETT. The water supply has been inadequate. Texas sued the State of New Mexico. We had a long and expensive litigation. It has been inadequate at times. We finally entered into a compact, and during the negotiations for this compact the States of Texas, Colorado, and New Mexico entered into an agreement for a joint investigation. A large sum of money was spent by the States and the Federal Government on what is known as the joint Rio Grande investigation. New Mexico asked that the feasibility and practicability of the San Juan diversion and of the transmountain diversion into the Rio Grande be investigated, and a large sum of money was devoted out of that sum to this investigation, and it was found to be feasible and practical.

Mr. Debler, of the Reclamation Bureau, at a meeting held by the upper four basin States at Green River, Wyo., stated that its feasibility had been established, and that practically all of the engineering was completed except the final details for contractors' bids, and so forth, and obtaining the right-of-way.

Senator CHAVEZ. Governor Hannett, if I lead you on, you will understand it is not because we want to violate the rules of the court. Over here we are very informal, and it is only to refresh your memory on certain matters. A chart was introduced at the hearings here last week by Judge Stone which included what purported to be the project that Mr. Debler had in mind at the time that you had the gathering at Phoenix, wherein the San Juan-Chama diversion was not included. Have the New Mexico authorities at all times been insisting on this project being taken care of?

Mr. HANNETT. Absolutely. It is our principal stake in the Colorado River.

Senator HATCH. Governor, you have spoken about the interest of New Mexico and that it should be pegged out. Is that interest different from the other upper-basin States? If so, explain it for the record.

Mr. HANNETT. Well, in a way it is. Colorado has some thirty-odd projects, I believe, and the other States have numerous projects. We have two very small projects and one major project. Our major project is such that unless we have assistance from some source other than the ordinary course of placing the burden on the landowner, in all probability our hope in this respect, and our desire will not be fulfilled, and the transmountain diversion will probably be a long time coming.

Senator HATCH. Well, now, as a matter of fact there must be some outside financing of that project?

Mr. HANNETT. Yes.

Senator HATCH. It can be placed in there with some outside financing?

Mr. HANNETT. No question about that.

Senator HATCH. This is the only chance, as far as any of us know, to get any funds for that purpose, is it?

Mr. HANNETT. That is right. That is what we have got in mind. I think it is important to Texas, too. It is important from an international standpoint, because of the ultimate shortage of water that is going to follow in the Elephant Butte district and the Juarez area in Mexico.

Senator HATCH. Under the treaty obligations with Mexico?

Mr. HANNETT. The treaty obligations with Mexico. They have got the All-American Canal there. You are going to hear reverberations when they are going to start to hold the Republic of Mexico down to 30,000 acre-feet per year.

Senator CHAVEZ. Along those lines, of course, we all understand that the water you seek creates a right in the Western States. A suggestion has been made at the hearings here that one of the reasons for this bill is that possibly Mexico might appropriate some of the waters of the Colorado in the basin. Is not that the same position we take, that unless we avail ourselves of our rights now and within the near future make use of some of that water, we might possibly lose out to the lower basin States or the Government of Mexico?

Mr. HANNETT. That is right.

Senator CHAVEZ. I am going to hand you, Governor Hannett, a proposed amendment that I prepared. It might not be in the correct wording, but I want you to look at it and see whether it might cover more or less your views on this.

Mr. HANNETT. I do not like to read it without giving it some study. I would like to have a few minutes' time to consider it.

Senator CHAVEZ. Can we read it for the benefit of the Senators here? Of course, if it has to be changed it can be changed.

Senator ASHURST. Certainly. If you will, Mr. Clerk, you may read the amendment, please.

The clerk [reading]:

"Amendment. On page 6, line 20, after the word 'factors' and before the period, insert a colon and the following: 'Provided, That any moneys appropriated pursuant to the authorizations contained in this subsection shall be available for (1) the completion by the Bureau of Reclamation of a survey of the transmountain diversion project on the San Juan River in the State of New Mexico and (2) for the construction of such project; and such project shall be designed so as to adequately provide for the irrigation needs of San Juan County, N. Mex., including those of the Navajo Tribe of Indians; and, after providing for such needs, any water from such project remaining available for use shall be used as the State of New Mexico may determine.'"

Mr. HANNETT. I think that covers it.

Senator MCCARRAN. Have you appropriations filed pursuant to a State law that would meet this amendment?

Mr. HANNETT. What do you mean?

Senator MCCARRAN. Has the State of New Mexico ever attempted to exercise its right in the way of appropriating water?

Mr. HANNETT. No. We have determined upon the Colorado River compact. We have an undivided interest in the 7,500,000 acre-feet of water.

Senator MCCARRAN. But prior to the compact, what, if any, steps were taken by the State of New Mexico to appropriate the waters of the natural flow of the Colorado River?

Mr. HANNETT. I do not think any State has, including the State of New Mexico.

Senator MCCARRAN. You have in the State of New Mexico, I take it, as in other Western States, the law that prior appropriation is a prior right. Then I take it you have your statute providing for the filing of appropriations under your State engineer administration, whatever it may be called.

Mr. HANNETT. That is right.

Senator MCCARRAN. I think that is true, is it not, Governor?

Mr. HANNETT. That is true.

Senator MCCARRAN. Now, do I understand, Governor, from your statement made to the committee here, that at the time of the adjournment of the Committee of Sixteen, the State of New Mexico and some other State refused to concur in the agreement?

Mr. HANNETT. In the meeting of the four upper-basin States, that broke up with Utah and Colorado approving, Wyoming and New Mexico disapproving.

Senator MCCARRAN. Then you met at a later hour and said while you did not approve it, you would not oppose it. Is that my understanding of it?

Mr. HANNETT. That is right. While we did not approve it, we were not going to oppose it, and we were not attempting to answer for or bind the hands of either of our Senators or Congressmen.

Senator MCCARRAN. Is that your attitude now?

Mr. HANNETT. That is our attitude now. We feel that the law is inequitable, just as we felt then, but we are not here opposing, we are here explaining our position.

Senator CHAVEZ. And you think that modifications to clarify the rights of the State of New Mexico should be included in the bill?

Mr. HANNETT. I think they should be included in the bill, and I think that meets the objection that Mr. McClure and I have had to the legislation.

Senator MCCARRAN. Under the existing Boulder Canyon Act, do you recall how long it would be before the State of New Mexico would receive any money at all?

Mr. HANNETT. I think it would be in the most remote future, and I think likewise, under the bill as it stands now, it would be equally remote.

Senator CHAVEZ. Governor Hannett, you stated in answer to Senator McCarran that we had some interest in some 7,500,000 acre-feet.

Mr. HANNETT. We had an undivided interest, just exactly as Colorado, Utah, and Wyoming have.

Senator CHAVEZ. The statement was made last week that all the possible water we could get out of the San Juan would be something like 200,000 acre-feet.

Mr. HANNETT. The San Juan diversion would give us 350,000 acre-feet.

Senator CHAVEZ. Three hundred and fifty thousand?

Mr. HANNETT. Yes.

Senator CHAVEZ. Which would be a small amount considering our so-called equitable interest in the 7,500,000 acre-feet?

Mr. HANNETT. That is correct.

Senator CHAVEZ. The rest of the waters of the San Juan would still flow down into the Colorado and be of beneficial use, both at the dam and for other purposes below the dam?

Mr. HANNETT. Yes. There is a precedent for transmountain diversion. Colorado is diverting from the Colorado River in the Big Thompson, I think, substantially 350,000 acre-feet.

Senator CHAVEZ. Do you want to ask him any questions?

Senator ASHURST. No. Thank you, Governor.

Senator McCarran, are there any further questions?

Senator MCCARRAN. Not of the Governor.

Senator ASHURST. Your next witness, Senator Chavez.

Senator CHAVEZ. Mr. McClure, our State engineer.

STATEMENT OF THOMAS M. M'CLURE, STATE ENGINEER OF NEW MEXICO

Senator ASHURST. Give your name, your address and occupation for the record, please.

Mr. MCCLURE. Thomas M. McClure. State engineer. Secretary of the Interstate Streams Commission. Santa Fe, N. Mex.

Senator CHAVEZ. What part, Mr. McClure, have you taken in the development of the proposed legislation?

Mr. MCCLURE. I have attended all meetings that have taken place on the Colorado River matters since 1933, as State engineer and representative of New Mexico.

I would like to go into just a little history, if I may, Senator, in regard to the unique position that the San Juan River has in relation to the other tributaries of the Colorado.

Senator MCCARRAN. May I ask a preliminary question?

Senator CHAVEZ. Certainly.

Senator MCCARRAN. How long have you been State engineer?

Mr. MCCLURE. Seven years.

Senator MCCARRAN. Prior to that were you connected with that bureau?

Mr. MCCLURE. I was connected with the State on highway work, but not in the hydraulic end.

Our interest in the San Juan is due to the fact that San Juan is the largest water-producing stream in New Mexico. Some three-fifths of all the water of the streams in New Mexico flow through the San Juan River. It is also the least used. The San Juan flows out of New Mexico into Utah through a barren space for which, up to the present time, no feasible use has been developed, in which the waters of the stream after leaving New Mexico can be used.

Of the 7,500,000 acre-feet allotted to the upper basin under the Colorado River compact, we have a mean annual flow leaving New Mexico of approximately 2,500,000 acre-feet per year.

Senator ASHURST. Out of the San Juan?

Mr. MCCLURE. Out of the San Juan; yes, sir. That water is unavailable for any other uses except in the Boulder Canyon project after leaving New Mexico. We feel for that reason that we have an appreciable interest in developing that water under the Colorado River compact.

Senator McCARRAN. What would you say the acre-foot flow was per year?

Mr. McCLURE. A mean average of approximately 2,500,000 acre-feet per year. Our major project of putting that water to use in New Mexico is the transmountain diversion from the San Juan to the Chama and Rio Grande Basin, which is decidedly overappropriated; that is, the Rio Grande Basin water is. It involves shortages on that stream in some areas practically every year.

The other project for the utilization of that water would be our Navajo Indian project, which is a very expensive project. The lands are scattered and the construction of canals, the construction of storage facilities at the present time, with lifts that might be necessary for pumping to utilize all the lands that are irrigable, is far beyond our anticipation at this time. There are some 50,000 acres of land under irrigation in New Mexico on the San Juan.

Our interest in the adoption of amendments to this bill before us is in order to get a full protection for New Mexico, so that we can see a possible way of helping to finance the development of this transmountain diversion, so that we can put to beneficial use the equitable portion that we have in the 7,500,000 acre-feet allotted to the four upper States.

We felt, on the basis of the Sands report, that we had arrived at an equitable apportionment. Taking all factors into consideration, placing the rate of falling water at Boulder Dam on a competitive basis, both for steam and taking into consideration the district, we have definitely shown by facts that were brought out in our meetings that the rate of falling water at Boulder Dam was far below the rate of either T. V. A., Bonneville, or any other project of the United States of major hydroelectric plants. Mr. Sands worked with the Los Angeles engineers, among which there is a material difference of opinion in three or four matters, in which they never reached an agreement in any way. However, we felt that the Sands report, being made by Mr. Sands, who is an outstanding electrical engineer in the West, was sound and consistent in regard to the principles used nowadays. He corrected at several times after taking into consideration new developments which the Bureau of Power and Light had brought into the efficiency of their lines and their set-up out there. The upper-basin States, as Governor Hannett said, approved this report and accepted it as being the basis for consideration. That is New Mexico's stand. We see no reason now to go back of that On that basis, why, we feel that we should be fully protected for our development of the Colorado River Basin.

Under the joint investigation of the Rio Grande, which was conducted by the National Resources Committee, under the Planning Board, which was a factual investigation of three States, Texas, New Mexico, and Colorado, for presenting the factual data, which did consummate itself into a compact and settle the controversy of the Rio Grande, a full investigation at an expenditure of some $52,000 was made on the transmountain diversion. Its feasibility was established at that time, and an estimate of cost was made. The sounding of dam sites, the drilling of dam sites, the geology study, everything is complete with probably the exception of final design for contracting and construction work and for obtaining the right-of-way. There were two projects set up in that—that is, two lines run—and an estimate of cost was made of both of those for economy's sake, to determine which was the most economic. Under the Rio Grande compact the project is agreed to by Colorado with the qualification that present and prospective uses of the State of Colorado will not be injured. They have one small diversion that was studied at the same time as this, which would involve only 52,000 acre-feet of water.

Senator ASHURST. May I ask you there, Is the relief you seek expressed in the amendment that was just read? Is that what you seek?

Mr. McCLURE. I believe it is; yes.

Senator ASHURST. You do not ask any additional amendment or change?

Mr. McCLURE. No.

Senator ASHURST. Except this amendment?

Mr. McCLURE. I think that will cover it very well, Senator.

Senator CHAVEZ. May I ask a question?

Senator ASHURST. Senator CHAVEZ.

Senator CHAVEZ. Governor Hannett stated that if the transmountain diversion project was concluded we would use 350,000 acre-feet, more or less.

Mr. McCLURE. That is right.

Senator CHAVEZ. If we use 350,000 acre-feet, there would still be a little better than 3,000,000 acre-feet to go down the Boulder Dam?

Mr. McCLURE. There would be a little less than 2,000,000 acre-feet.

Senator CHAVEZ. A little less than 2,000,000 acre-feet?

Mr. McCLURE. Yes.

Senator CHAVEZ. So we do not use all of the water, or hardly any of the water, that would flow down the San Juan River?

Mr. McCLURE. None at all, hardly. We have 50,000 acres that are depleting their quota of that stream. That, of course, has been under irrigation for many years and is included. Above that we still have approximately 2,500,000 acre-feet per year passing out of the State.

Senator CHAVEZ. Senator Hatch, do you want to ask any questions?

Senator HATCH. No; I do not.

Senator CHAVEZ. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission of the committee to insert in the record of committee hearings, excerpts of testimony on the subject matter contained in the Report of Proceedings of the Fact Finding Committee of the Upper Colorado River Basin States, Green River, Wyo., July 1938, volume 2, page 286, as follows:

"Mr. WALLACE. What is the status now as to construction?

"Mr. McCLURE. I believe that the project with the exception of right-of-way would be practically ready for construction, wouldn't it, Mr. Debler?

"Mr. DEBLER. I would say this, the work is in the same State as we usually proceed to construction. You couldn't get construction contracts, but if money became available for construction we would then proceed to the final location surveys and the designing of the dam.

"Mr. WALLACE. The surveys are nearly enough complete to determine the feasibility?

"Mr. DEBLER. No further surveys needed for feasibility."

STATEMENT OF WALTER E. WOEHLKE, ASSISTANT TO THE COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Senator ASHURST. Your full name for the record, sir.

Mr. WOEHLKE. Walter E. Woehlke. Assistant to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.

Senator CHAVEZ. Mr. Woehlke, are you acquainted with the whole area of the Colorado River Basin that includes the San Juan River and the tributaries?

Mr. WOEHLKE. I am fairly familiar with that whole region, Senator.

Senator CHAVEZ. Will you kindly state to the committee in your own words what, if any, interest the Navajo Indians might have under this compact, the possibilities of the development of those interests under the pending legislation, and anything that you may care to say to the committee?

Mr. WOEHLKE. May I first state, Senator, the Indian Service is interested in the proper development and use of the waters of the San Juan on both sides of the Continental Divide, both in the Rio Grande area and in the San Juan Basin as such. In the Rio Grande Valley, to which it is contemplated to divert 350,000 acre-feet of the San Juan waters, the Indian Service is interested in some 20,000 acres of irrigable and irrigated land from which some 14,000 Pueblo Indians now derive the better part of their living.

As Governor Hannett and Mr. McClure stated, there is a shortage, a deficiency, in the supply of water in the upper Rio Grande Valley even so far as the presently developed and cultivated land is concerned. So, from that angle the Indian Service is distinctly interested in making possible the diversion of the surplus water of the San Juan to the Rio Grande Valley.

So far as the San Juan Basin is concerned, the Indian Office has to look after some 50,000 Navajo Indians who are now deriving the bulk of their living from the operation of livestock. Some 10,000 Navajo families are making use of a total area which, for livestock, would be sufficient only to supply a fairly decent living to 600 white families, on the basis of about 1,000 sheep units per white family. So that you have the effort of these 10,000 Navajo families to subsist in an area on livestock which will support enough livestock to take care of approximately 600 white families.

On top of that, the Navajos are increasing very rapidly. In fact, the preliminary returns, census returns from one of the Navajo districts in which we had counted 1,200, indicated in this district there were approximately 1,800 Navajos. So that when the census returns are all completed, we may find that we have in excess of 60,000 Navajos trying to make a living on an area which will support only 600 white families.

There is no possibility of enlarging the Navajo Reservation as such, so as to provide more range for these 50,000 or 60,000 people, so that they might increase their livestock operations. There is no chance for doing that. So that these people are caught in a steel ring in which they are confined within their reservation boundaries, and within that steel ring they are expanding very rapidly. So that the only way in which they can possibly manage to survive, in which they can expand their production, is through the supply of irrigable land.

The entire dependence of these 50,000 Navajos is not on livestock. Approximately 25 to 30 percent of their total livelihood is derived from their dry farming, floodwater and irrigation farming. The lot which this irrigated land plays in their support may be judged by the fact that about 1¾ percent of the total Navajo land surface which is under farming operations, both floodwater and irrigation, supplies over 30 percent of their total income. So that the only hope that lies ahead of the Navajos for self-support, continued self-support, is through the development of additional irrigated land, and the only source of water for such irrigated land is the San Juan River.

There is under consideration, and has been under consideration for some time, the feasibility and possibility of providing storage on the San Juan River to supply some 50,000 to 60,000 or 70,000 acres with irrigation water for the benefit of both the Navajo Indians and of the white residents in San Juan County and other people in the San Juan Basin.

Senator CHAVEZ. May I interrupt you there?

Mr. WOEHLKE. Yes.

Senator CHAVEZ. We have several good, first-class white communities in that valley, have we not?

Mr. WOEHLKE. Oh, yes.

Senator CHAVEZ. Hard-working people?

Mr. WOEHLKE. Very hard-working.

Senator CHAVEZ. Were not they more or less the overflow of the white settlers that came from Utah into the upper waters of the San Juan?

Mr. WOEHLKE. Yes.

Senator CHAVEZ. Where they built nice homes and tried to eke out an existence with the shortage of water, water that has not been developed to its full extent?

Mr. WOEHLKE. In that isolated region the settlers that came in there from Utah in the early days have built up a series of communities that are models of their kind. There, again, any expansion of those communities is at the present time impossible, because the low water flow of the San Juan is completely appropriated; and if some of the present projects under contemplation go through, there will be a distinct shortage in this low-water flow covering a period of about 2 months during the growing season. So that even for the preservation of the communities that have been established there for a good many years, the additional storage is vitally necessary.

Senator KING. And the only source of supply is the San Juan River?

Mr. WOEHLKE. The only source of supply is the San Juan River. As Mr. McClure and Governor Hannett stated a while ago, the cost of storage and of distribution to the areas of land which are feasible and economically adapted to cultivation; in that area the land is very expensive, so that some sort of additional nonreimbursable contribution is vitally needed for that whole project.

Senator CHAVEZ. Is there any other source of water, other than the San Juan River, under the compact?

Mr. WOEHLKE. There is none whatsoever.

Senator CHAVEZ. So if we expect to derive any benefits whatsoever under the compact, we will have to avail ourselves of legislation such as this that is now pending, provided it is adequately protected and defined?

Mr. WOEHLKE. That is correct.

Senator KING. May I ask a question?

Senator ASHURST. Certainly, Senator KING.

Senator KING. Are there any Federal lands in the vicinity of the territory which you are describing which might be given to the Navajos as a quid pro quo for the land we have taken from them?

Mr. WOEHLKE. There are such lands; yes.

Senator KING. Unoccupied?

Mr. WOEHLKE. No. There is no unoccupied land in the entire area.

Senator CHAVEZ. We have some very fine possibilities for irrigation of land of their own.

Senator KING. I was wondering if there were not some lands which were suitable for grazing of sheep or cattle which the Government owned, the title to which had not passed to private ownership, so that the Government, if it were so inclined, would transfer some of the Government lands to the Navajo Indians.

Mr. WOEHLKE. It could be done by act of Congress.

Senator KING. What I am trying to get at is whether there is any land not occupied, belonging to the Government, which might be utilized by the Navajo Indians for grazing purposes.

Mr. WOEHLKE. Senator, all the area in there is being used now, and in most instances it is being overused.

Senator HATCH. May I ask a question right there?

Senator ASHURST. Certainly, Senator HATCH.

Senator HATCH. Mr. Woehlke, even if whatever lands might be available around there were included in the boundary, it would not solve this problem of the Navajo Indians?

Mr. WOEHLKE. No.

Senator HATCH. Irrigation is about the only way in which to solve that problem?

Mr. WOEHLKE. Yes.

Senator CHAVEZ. They can do more with 10 or 12 acres of irrigated land than they can with 640 acres of grazing land.

Senator MCCARRAN. I would like to ask the witness whether or not this Navajo project—I style it the Navajo project for brevity—is a self-liquidating project in contemplation?

Mr. WOEHLKE. It could not be a self-liquidating project.

Senator MCCARRAN. That is what I thought. So it is not economically a commendable project excepting as it is humanely commendable, is that true?

Mr. WOEHLKE. It would be economically commendable, Senator, because unless the additional irrigated area is supplied to the Navajos, they will, sooner or later, become public charges.

Senator CHAVEZ. Absolutely dependent, with the probability of rationing.

Senator MCCARRAN. I am asking him this question in view of the history of reclamation. Reclamation has always gone forward on the principle that any contemplated project was self-liquidating, was economically feasible. So I am just looking at what you are describing in the light of reclamation in the past.

I take it that it would not measure up to that standard?

Mr. WOEHLKE. No; it would not measure up to it.

Senator KING. They would have to have a specific grant.

Mr. WOEHLKE. Yes.

Senator KING. From the Federal Treasury.

Mr. WOEHLKE. Yes.

Senator CHAVEZ. We are fair in New Mexico; we want the Navajos to get full benefit of whatever rights we might have under the compact of the different States from the waters of the San Juan.

Mr. WOEHLKE. As I see the situation, throughout that Navajo country the battle for range is so exaggerated, the demand for range on the part of all interests, white, Spanish-Americans, and Indians, is so terrific that practically throughout that area heavy overgrazing has resulted.

Senator MCCARRAN. Are not you under the Taylor Grazing Act?

Mr. WOEHLKE. Not the Navajo Reservation.

Senator CHAVEZ. Not the reservation proper. That is their own.

Mr. WOEHLKE. The adjacent territory in which both Navajos and whites operate and where the Spanish-Americans run their flocks is under the Taylor Grazing Act.

Senator MCCARRAN. The Indians are allocated certain commensurate rights, are they not, under the Taylor Grazing Act, those who graze cattle, livestock?

Mr. WOEHLKE. They are just beginning along that line, but nevertheless, with that allocation, the total demand on the range on the part of all parties is so great and the stocking in the past has been so exaggerated that a reduction rather than an expansion of the livestock business is essential.

Senator MCCARRAN. Of course, that is true in all of the Western States. Under the Taylor Grazing Act administration there has been a very decided reduction in the use of the range.

Mr. WOEHLKE. In this particular area, the overstocking and overgrazing has been more than the average, so that any expansion through grazing land, if you take into consideration the established rights of white and other operators, is absolutely impossible.

Senator MCCARRAN. Let me see if I understand you there: The way I understand it is that these Navajos are an agrarian Indian; is that right?

Mr. WOEHLKE. They are principally stock raisers.

Senator MCCARRAN. They have no rights on the open public domain now?

Mr. WOEHLKE. Yes; they have.

Senator CHAVEZ. They have some allotments.

Senator MCCARRAN. What I am getting at is this: If you increase the base, then you must increase the commensurate rights on the open public domain so as to comply with the base. Do I make myself clear?

Mr. WOEHLKE. Yes.

Senator MCCARRAN. Then, if you increase the commensurate rights on the open public domain and it is already overstocked, how are you going to improve the situation?

Mr. WOEHLKE. That is exactly what I am saying, Senator; you cannot improve the situation.

Senator MCCARRAN. That is what I am trying to get at. Why do you want to increase the base? Why would it be economically feasible to increase the base; that is, the enclosed land, so to speak? That is what I term the base, the lands that will support the livestock during the winter, the nongrazing season that is recognized, as I understand it, in the Taylor Grazing Act as the base lands. If you are going to increase the base, which you propose to do by this reclamation project, what are you going to do with your livestock interests?

Mr. WOEHLKE. On the contrary, what we are endeavoring to do through the irrigation project is to decrease the dependence of the Navajo on that.

Senator MCCARRAN. On the open public domain?

Mr. WOEHLKE. Yes; under any conditions, to substitute irrigated farming for their dependence on livestock, their excessive dependence on livestock.

Senator MCCARRAN. Now, let me ask you one question there. The project that you have described to the committee, has that been approved by the Reclamation officials?

Mr. WOEHLKE. No; it has not been, because it has not been considered by them as yet.

Senator MCCARRAN. I understood you were speaking of the same conditions that Mr. McClure spoke of, and I understood him to say it had been approved, and that lines were run, surveys were made.

Senator CHAVEZ. I think he referred to the Debler report, which included the project you speak of.

Mr. WOEHLKE. The San Juan storage project.

Senator CHAVEZ. The San Juan storage project.

Senator MCCARRAN. That is what you are talking about?

Mr. WOEHLKE. Yes; but the investigations of that project have by no means been completed.

Senator MCCARRAN. I have no more questions.

Senator HATCH. One more question, if I may, Mr. Chairman.

Senator ASHURST. Senator HATCH.

Senator HATCH. The Indian people already have some irrigated lands; is that right?

Mr. WOEHLKE. Yes.

Senator HATCH. That they are farming?

Mr. WOEHLKE. Yes.

Senator HATCH. I think you said that dry land and irrigation together was about 25 percent of their present source of income.

Mr. WOEHLKE. The present source of income, and the total percentage of surface acreage represented by the irrigated and dry farm land, was about 1¾.

Senator HATCH. There is no question in your mind but that if the water could be made available the Indians themselves could be diverted from their old type of occupation, that of stock raising, to irrigated farming and be successful at it?

Mr. WOEHLKE. They would have to be. In fact, the distribution of the acreage which now, for instance, is irrigated under the arid-lands project was based on the desire to take people out of the livestock business and put them on a farming basis.

Senator ASHURST. Are there any more questions, Senator KING?

Senator KING. No more questions.

Senator MCCARRAN. Mr. Chairman.

Senator ASHURST. Yes., Senator MCCARRAN.

Senator MCCARRAN. At this point, and at the behest of Senator PITTMAN, of Nevada, my colleague, and myself, I desire to have inserted in the record a wire of the date of May 28, from Gov. E. P. Carville, of the State of Nevada, approving H. R. 9877 as it is now in the House, and which will also be S. 4039.

Senator ASHURST. That will be printed in the record, there being no objection.

The telegram referred to is as follows:

CARSON CITY, NEV., May 28, 1940.

Hon. P. A. MCCARRAN,
United States Senator,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Re Boulder Dam bill H. R. 9877, have conferred with attorney general and Colorado River Commissioners Caton and Clark. Commissioner Smith ill and cannot be reached. Bill present form has approval attorney general, Caton, and myself. Clark opposes measure because of elimination "in lieu of taxes," stating this would deprive Clark County of opportunity presenting basis for portion of money for that county. Attorney general says "In my opinion the bill as amended eliminating 'in lieu of taxes,' is entirely constitutional and legal and the whole bill is more satisfactory than as originally drawn." Caton says, "I am in favor of bill as amended and hope it will go through." I approve bill in its present amended form and consider Nevada amply protected.

E. P. CARVILLE, Governor.

Senator MCCARRAN. Mr. Chairman.

Senator ASHURST. Senator MCCARRAN.

Senator MCCARRAN. I draw the committee's attention to section 15 of H. R. 9877. It is not in the Senate bill before this committee, but is before the Committee on Rules, as I understand it, in the House at the present time.

Senator ASHURST. Yes, Senator.

Senator MCCARRAN. With that in mind, may I say to the committee that this amendment, section 15 of the House bill, has been the subject of very careful and really extensive study by those of us who are interested in the labor angle of this, by the Interior Department, and by, I think, every interested group, and out of that study we have agreed on, and I am now submitting to the committee, and asking to be incorporated in the record a provision to take the place of section 15 of the House bill. Please understand it is not in the bill before the Senate.

Senator ASHURST. The secretary will read the amendment proposed by Senator MCCARRAN.

Senator MCCARRAN. To take the place of section 15.

Senator ASHURST. Your amendment will become section 15 of the Senate bill; is that right?

Senator MCCARRAN. Yes; I guess that is right.

The CLERK (reading):

"All laborers and mechanics employed in the construction of any part of the project, or in the operation, maintenance, or replacement of any part of the Boulder Dam shall be paid not less than the prevailing rate of wages or compensation for work of a similar nature prevailing in the locality of the project. In the event any dispute arises as to what are the prevailing rates, the determination thereof shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior, and his decision, subject to the concurrence of the Secretary of Labor, shall be final."

Senator MCCARRAN. Now, let me say, Mr. Chairman, by way of repetition, for which I apologize, that this matter has been worked out meticulously, and has, I am advised, the concurrence of the Secretary of the Interior, and is pursuant to law as the law now exists. In other words, the Government being the employer, if controversies arise as to the rate of pay the matter would be submitted to the Labor Department under the law for conciliation. But it is the desire of some of us, and the desire of the Department of the Interior, inasmuch as the Department of the Interior has control of the dam, that the Secretary of the Interior should have the right and privilege and it should be his prerogative to have the decision, subject to the concurrence of the Secretary of Labor.

I thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator ASHURST. Your amendment will be on the table ready for action.

Senator CHAVEZ. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission of the committee to insert in the record of committee hearings a copy of my letter of June 1, 1940, to Hon. John C. Page, Commissioner of Reclamation, Department of the Interior, and a copy of Mr. Page's reply dated June 4, 1940, as follows:

Hon. JOHN C. PAGE,
Commissioner of Reclamation, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PAGE: In connection with your testimony during the hearings on S. 4039 before the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, I desire to obtain from you confirmation of the following interpretation of the statement you made to the committee.

You stated that the San Juan River is an important tributary of the Colorado River and that the San Juan is the only stream tributary to the Colorado which can be used to advantage in the State of New Mexico under the terms of the Colorado River compact.

You also stated that the San Juan, through the proposed transmountain diversion in the Chama, is the only source through which the deficiency in the water supply of the middle Rio Grande Valley can be supplemented.

You agreed that a portion of the flow of the San Juan could be diverted for the relief of the Rio Grande Valley and that another part of the flow of the San Juan could be used beneficially by the landowners of San Juan and adjacent counties in New Mexico, including the Navajo Tribe of Indians.

You stated that, aside from the information compiled during the joint Rio Grande investigation, no intensive study of the San Juan-Chama project had been made until an appropriation of $50,000 became recently available.

You stated that the projects on the San Juan River, being the only ones through which the State of New Mexico could possibly profit under the terms of the Colorado River compact, would be given early priority and their investigation would be carried to completion as soon as the investigation fund accruing under section 2 (d) of S. 4039 became available to the Reclamation Service.

I understand this statement to be a pledge by the Commissioner of Reclamation that, as soon as the above-mentioned fund becomes available, he will allocate a sufficient sum, estimated to be not less than $50,000, for the completion of the Chama-San Juan investigation and that additional sums will be immediately available for the initiation and completion of an investigation of a project for the storage and distribution of San Juan floodwaters for the benefit of the residents and landowners of San Juan and adjacent counties, including the Navajo Tribe of Indians.

I would appreciate the favor if you would let me know by Monday, June 3, whether this interpretation of your statements to the Senate committee is correct.

Yours sincerely,

DENNIS CHAVEZ,
United States Senator.

[Reply]

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF RECLAMATION,
Washington, June 4, 1940.

Hon. DENNIS CHAVEZ,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR CHAVEZ: Your letter of June 1, 1940, asked me to amplify and confirm the statement which I made before the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation holding hearings on S. 4039.

The details of the statement which you included in your letter are substantially in accordance with my understanding and intention in introducing this testimony. I prefaced my remarks by stating that complete information on all the details of the proposed San Juan-Rio Chama diversion was not available, but from the information which had been gathered this appeared to be the major opportunity for New Mexico to obtain Colorado River water, and that the diversion to the Rio Chama would remedy a deficiency in the water supply of the Rio Grande Valley. We have not attempted to indicate where this imported water could best be used in New Mexico, but there is definitely a deficiency in the water supply of the middle Rio Grande Valley.

Our studies indicate that approximately 350,000 acre-feet could be diverted to the Rio Chama, after retaining in the San Juan River sufficient water to supply a large development in San Juan and other adjacent counties in New Mexico, including the Navajo Indian Reservation.

I estimated that $50,000 would be sufficient to obtain definite information on which concrete estimates could be made for this project, and that early completion of this investigation would be desirable. My statement constituted a promise that whenever the program would permit and funds were provided, the investigation of the San Juan-Rio Chama would be completed and that at the same time there should be studied the necessary storage works on the San Juan River for the benefit of the adjacent area.

I trust this will furnish the information you desire.

Very truly yours,

JOHN C. PAGE, Commissioner.

MARINE AND WAR-RISK INSURANCE FUND

During the delivery of speech of Mr. CHEVEZ,

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana with the understanding that the matter which he has in charge will take only a few moments and will not involve long debate.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I have asked the Senator to yield in order that I may ask for the consideration of an emergency measure, House Joint Resolution 582. I think we can dispose of it in 2 or 3 minutes if the Senator will yield with the understanding that it will not displace the pending business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the joint resolution by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 582) making an appropriation to enable the United States Maritime Commission to establish the marine and war-risk insurance fund.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I wish to state to the Senator that I shall not object to the consideration of the joint resolution, but I am opposed to it. Under the guise of national defense we commit a good many, I will not say crimes but mistakes, and project the Government more and more into the field of private endeavor. We are going now into the insurance business on a national scale. I shall vote against the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with an amendment on page 2, line 10, after the word "hereunder," to insert "and all such expenses shall be certified by the Chairman of the Commission in each case as necessary and reasonable."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, let me say briefly in explanation of the joint resolution that its purpose is not to place the Federal Government into private business, but it is to authorize the Federal Government through the Maritime Commission to step into the insurance field when the private American insurance market cannot take care of the insurance of our vessels, their cargoes, and their crews. Under the joint resolution the Maritime Commission is authorized to insure and reinsure only when the rates to be obtained from private companies are unreasonable.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERTON. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was merely going to say that the joint resolution is fashioned after the act of 1917, under which the Government made a profit of seventeen and one-half million dollars.

Mr. OVERTON. That is correct. We hope that no loss will be experienced in the administration of the joint resolution if it should be enacted into law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be offered the question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the joint resolution.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. OVERTON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

PROMOTION OF TRAVEL IN THE UNITED STATES—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BILBO submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6884) to encourage travel in the United States, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment to section 1 of the bill and agree to such section as it was passed by the House, and the House agrees thereto;

That both Houses agree to the balance of the bill as passed in identical form by both Houses;

That said section 1 of the bill as agreed to by the conferees, following the enacting clause, shall read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed, through the National Park Service, to encourage, promote, and develop travel within the United States, its Territories and possessions, providing such activities do not compete with the activities of private agencies; and to administer all existing travel promotion functions of the Department of the Interior through such Service."

HATTIE W. CARAWAY,
THEO. G. BILBO,
A. H. VANDENBERG,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

CLARENCE F. LEA,
A. L. BULWINKLE,
CHAS. A. WOLVERTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 326) for the payment of awards and appraisals heretofore made in favor of citizens of the United States on claims presented under the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, United States and Mexico, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. BLOOM, Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON, and Mr. FISH were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6056) for the relief of Antal or Anthony or Tony Zaicek or Zaiczek.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H. R. 7696. An act to amend the United States Grain Standards Act, to provide for the grading of soybeans, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 10100. An act to establish the composition of the United States Navy, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes.

BOULDER DAM—CONFERENCE REPORT

After the conclusion of speech of Mr. CHAVEZ,

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9877) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate and to put into effect charges for electrical energy generated at Boulder Dam providing for the application of revenues from said project, authorizing the operation of the Boulder Dam power plant by the United States directly or through agents, and for other purposes.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate long, but I desire to add a word or two as to what my colleague, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] has said. He has ably presented the position of New Mexico in his remarks, as he ably presented to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation the amendments he thought, and I thought, would safeguard the interests of our State. It is with deep regret that I observe the conference report presented here today, and note that the conferees on the part of the Senate receded and the House conferees prevailed, and the amendments are not now included in the conference report.

A question was raised by the able Senator from Arizona as to the possibility of Congress enacting other legislation, and I think both Senators from Arizona perhaps said that this was only an authorization measure. In a sense they are correct in that statement, but in the bill itself, not in the conference report, provision is made for what I believe to be complete and absolute power in the Secretary of the Interior to determine what projects shall be built, not only in my State, but in all the States, the upper and the lower Basin States.

Mr. HAYDEN. Is that any different from the power he has always had?

Mr. HATCH. The power he has always had under the general reclamation law, with funds which come from the Federal Treasury; but the Senator from Arizona himself pointed out the difference in the situation, that these are not Federal funds, although they may, and probably will have to be, supplemented later on with appropriations from the Federal Treasury. When that time comes we will all be working together, I am sure. But it will require further acts of Congress.

Under the bill as it now stands, absolute and complete power is given to the Secretary of the Interior over funds which are not Federal funds in any sense or manner. I object to that provision of the bill; although it is too late to object to a provision of the bill when it is before us in a conference report. So far as New Mexico is concerned, the amendments offered by my colleague would have taken care of the situation, to some extent.

Mr. President, as I stated, I shall not delay the Senate. I did want to say that, on account of the rejection of the amendments offered by my colleague, I shall join him in voting against the conference report. I do not know whether we will have a roll call vote or not. If we do not, I want the RECORD to show that I vote against the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 3046.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities", approved August 2, 1939, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities", approved August 2, 1939, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. It shall be unlawful for (1) any person employed in any administrative position by the United States, or by any department, independent agency, or other agency of the United States (including any corporation controlled by the United States or any agency thereof, and any corporation all of the capital stock of which is owned by the United States or any agency thereof), or (2) any person employed in any administrative position by any State, by any political subdivision or municipality of any State, or by any agency of any State or any of its political subdivisions or municipalities (including any corporation controlled by any State or by any such political subdivision, municipality, or agency, and any corporation all of the capital stock of which is owned by any State or by any such political subdivision, municipality, or agency), in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States, or by any such department, independent agency, or other agency of the United States, to use his official authority for the purpose of interfering with, or affecting, the election or the nomination of any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, Member of the House of Representatives, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner from any Territory or insular possession."

SEC. 2. The third sentence of section 9 (a) of such act of August 2, 1939, is amended to read as follows: "All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they may choose and to express their opinions on all political subjects and candidates."

SEC. 3. Section 10 of such act of August 2, 1939, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. The provisions of this act shall be in addition to and not in substitution for any other provision of law."

SEC. 4. Such act of August 2, 1939, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"SEC. 12. (a) No officer or employee of any State or local agency whose principal employment is in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States or by any Federal agency shall (1) use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or a nomination for office, or affecting the result thereof, or (2) directly or indirectly coerce, attempt to coerce, command, or advise any other such officer or employee to pay, lend, or contribute any part of his salary or compensation or anything else of value to any party, committee, organization, agency, or person for political purposes. No such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns. All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they may choose and to express their opinions on all political subjects and candidates. For the purposes of the second sentence of this subsection, the term 'officer or employee' shall not be construed to include (1) the Governor or the Lieutenant Governor of any State or any person who is authorized by law to act as Governor, or the mayor of any city; (2) duly elected heads of executive departments of any State or municipality who are not classified under a State or municipal merit or civil-service system; (3) officers holding elective offices.

"(b) If any Federal agency charged with the duty of making any loan or grant of funds of the United States for use in any activity by any officer or employee to whom the provisions of subsection (a) are applicable has reason to believe that any such officer or employee has violated the provisions of such subsection, it shall make a report with respect thereto to the United States Civil Service Commission (hereinafter referred to as the 'Commission'). Upon the receipt of any such report, or upon the receipt of any other information which seems to the Commission to warrant an investigation, the Commission shall fix a time and place for a hearing, and shall by registered mail send to the officer or employee charged with the violation and to the State or local agency employing such officer or employee a notice setting forth a summary of the alleged violation and the time and place of such hearing. At such hearing (which shall be not earlier than 10 days after the mailing of such notice) either the officer or employee or the State or local agency, or both, may appear with counsel and be heard. After such hearing, the Commission shall determine whether any violation of such subsection has occurred and whether such violation, if any, warrants the removal of the officer or employee by whom it was committed from his office or employment, and shall by registered mail notify such officer or employee and the appropriate State or local agency of such determination. If in any case the Commission finds that such officer or employee has not been removed from his office or employment within 30 days after notice of a determination by the Commission that such violation warrants his removal, or that he has been so removed and has subsequently (within a period of 18 months) been appointed to any office or employment in any State or local agency in such State, the Commission shall make and certify to the appropriate Federal agency an order requiring it to withhold from its loans or grants to the State or local agency to which such notification was given an amount equal to 2 years' compensation at the rate such officer or employee was receiving at the time of such violation; except that in any case of such a subsequent appointment to a position in another State or local agency which receives loans or grants from any Federal agency, such order shall require the withholding of such amount from such other State or local agency: Provided, That in no event shall the Commission require any amount to be withheld from any loan or grant pledged by a State or local agency as security for its bonds or notes if the withholding of such amount would jeopardize the payment of the principal or interest on such bonds or notes. Notice of any such order shall be sent by registered mail to the State or local agency from which such amount is ordered to be withheld. The Federal agency to which such order is certified shall, after such order becomes final, withhold such amount in accordance with the terms of such order. Except as provided in subsection (c), any determination or order of the Commission shall become final upon the expiration of 30 days after the mailing of notice of such determination or order.

"(c) Any party aggrieved by any determination or order of the Commission under subsection (b) may, within 30 days after the mailing of notice of such determination or order, institute proceedings for the review thereof by filing a written petition in the district court of the United States for the district in which such officer or employee resides; but the commencement of such proceedings shall not operate as a stay of such determination or order unless (1) it is specifically so ordered by the court, and (2) such officer or employee is suspended from his office or employment during the pendency of such proceedings. A copy of such petition shall forthwith be served upon the Commission, and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record upon which the determination or the order complained of was made. The review by the court shall be on the record entire, including all of the evidence taken on the hearing, and shall extend to questions of fact and questions of law. If application is made to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and it is shown to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence may materially affect the result of the proceedings and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, the court may direct such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Commission may modify its findings of fact or its determination or order by reason of the additional evidence so taken and shall file with the court such modified findings, determination, or order, and any such modified findings of fact, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. The court shall affirm the Commission's determination or order, or its modified determination or order, if the court determines that the same is in accordance with law. If the court determines that any such determination or order, or modified determination or order, is not in accordance with law, the court shall remand the proceeding to the Commission with directions either to make such determination or order as the court shall determine to be in accordance with law or to take such further proceedings as, in the opinion of the court, the law requires. The judgment and decree of the court shall be final, subject to review by the appropriate circuit court of appeals as in other cases, and the judgment and decree of such circuit court of appeals shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States on certiorari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 28, secs. 346 and 347). If any provision of this subsection is held to be invalid as applied to any party with respect to any determination or order of the Commission, such determination or order shall thereupon become final and effective as to such party in the same manner as if such provision had not been enacted.

"(d) The Commission is authorized to adopt such reasonable procedure and rules and regulations as it deems necessary to execute its functions under this section. The Civil Service Commission shall have power to require by subpena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all documentary evidence relating to any matter pending, as a result of this act, before the Commission. Any member of the Commission may sign subpenas, and members of the Commission and its examiners when authorized by the Commission may administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses, and receive evidence. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such documentary evidence may be required from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing. In case of disobedience to a subpena, the Commission may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence. Any of the district courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpena issued to any person, issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Commission, or to produce documentary evidence if so ordered, or to give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. The Commission may order testimony to be taken by deposition in any proceeding or investigation, which as a result of this act, is pending before the Commission at any stage of such proceeding or investigation. Such depositions may be taken before any person designated by the Commission and having power to administer oaths. Such testimony shall be reduced to writing by the person taking the deposition, or under his direction, and shall then be subscribed by the deponent. Any person may be compelled to appear and depose and to produce documentary evidence before the Commission as hereinbefore provided. No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing documentary evidence or in obedience to a subpena on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is compelled to testify, or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, before the Commission in obedience to a subpena issued by it: Provided, That no person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

"(e) The provisions of the first two sentences of subsection (a) of this section shall not apply to any officer or employee who exercises no functions in connection with any activity of a State or local agency which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States or by any Federal agency.

"(f) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) The term 'State or local agency' means the executive branch of any State, or of any municipality or other political subdivision of such State, or any agency or department thereof.

"(2) The term 'Federal agency' includes any executive department, independent establishment, or other agency of the United States (except a member bank of the Federal Reserve System).

"SEC. 13. (a) It is hereby declared to be a pernicious political activity, and it shall hereafter be unlawful, for any person, directly or indirectly, to make contributions in an aggregate amount in excess of $5,000, during any calendar year, or in connection with any campaign for nomination or election, to or on behalf of any candidate for an elective Federal office (including the offices of President of the United States and Presidential and Vice Presidential electors), or to or on behalf of any committee or other organization engaged in furthering, advancing, or advocating the nomination or election of any candidate for any such office or the success of any national political party. This subsection shall not apply to contributions made to or by a State or local committee or other State or local organization.

"(b) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) The term 'person' includes an individual, partnership, committee, association, corporation, and any other organization or group of persons.

"(2) The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution.

"(c) It is further declared to be a pernicious political activity, and it shall hereafter be unlawful for any person, individual, partnership, committee, association, corporation, and any other organization or group of persons to purchase or buy any goods, commodities, advertising, or articles of any kind or description where the proceeds of such a purchase, or any portion thereof, shall directly or indirectly inure to the benefit of or for any candidate for an elective Federal office (including the offices of President of the United States, and Presidential and Vice Presidential electors) or any political committee or other political organization engaged in furthering, advancing, or advocating the nomination or election of any candidate for any such office or the success of any national political party: Provided, That nothing in this sentence shall be construed to interfere with the usual and known business, trade, or profession of any candidate.

"(d) Any person who engages in a pernicious political activity in violation of any provision of this section shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned for not more than 5 years. In all cases of violations of this section by a partnership, committee, association, corporation, or other organization or group of persons, the officers, directors, or managing heads thereof who knowingly and willfully participate in such violation shall be subject to punishment as herein provided.

"(e) Nothing in this section shall be construed to permit the making of any contribution which is prohibited by any provision of law in force on the date this section takes effect. Nothing in this act shall be construed to alter or amend any provisions of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925, or any amendments thereto.

"SEC. 14. For the purposes of this act, persons employed in the government of the District of Columbia shall be deemed to be employed in the executive branch of the Government of the United States, except that for the purposes of the second sentence of section 9 (a) the Commissioners and the Recorder of Deeds of the District of Columbia shall not be deemed to be officers or employees.

"SEC. 15. The provisions of this act which prohibit persons to whom such provisions apply from taking any active part in political management or in political campaigns shall be deemed to prohibit the same activities on the part of such persons as the United States Civil Service Commission has heretofore determined are at the time this section takes effect prohibited on the part of employees in the classified civil service of the United States by the provisions of the civil-service rules prohibiting such employees from taking any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

"SEC. 16. Whenever the United States Civil Service Commission determines that, by reason of special or unusual circumstances which exist in any municipality or other political subdivision, in the immediate vicinity of the National Capital in the States of Maryland and Virginia or in municipalities the majority of whose voters are employed by the Government of the United States, it is in the domestic interest of persons to whom the provisions of this act are applicable, and who reside in such municipality or political subdivision, to permit such persons to take an active part in political management or in political campaigns involving such municipality or political subdivision, the Commission is authorized to promulgate regulations permitting such persons to take an active part in such political management and political campaigns to the extent the Commission deems to be in the domestic interest of such persons.

"SEC. 17. Nothing in the second sentence of section 12 (a) of this act shall be construed to prevent or prohibit any officer or employee of a State or local agency (as defined in section 12 (f)) from continuing, until the election in connection with which he was nominated, to be a bona fide candidate for election to any public office and from engaging in any poltical activity in furtherance of his candidacy for such public office, if (1) he was nominated before the date of the enactment of this act, and (2) upon his election to such public office he resigns from the office or employment in which he was employed prior to his election, in a State or local agency (as defined in section 12 (f)).

"SEC. 18. Nothing in the second sentence of section 9 (a) or in the second sentence of section 12 (a) of this act shall be construed to prevent or prohibit any person subject to the provisions of this act from engaging in any political activity (1) in connection with any election and the preceding campaign if none of the candidates is to be nominated or elected at such election as representing a party any of whose candidates for Presidential elector received votes in the last preceding election at which Presidential electors were selected, or (2) in connection with any question which is not specifically identified with any National or State political party. For the purposes of this section, questions relating to constitutional amendments, referendums, approval of municipal ordinances, and others of a similar character, shall not be deemed to be specifically identified with any National or State political party.

"SEC. 19. As used in this act, the term 'State' means any State, Territory, or possession of the United States."

SEC. 5. (a) No person or firm entering into any contract with the United States or any department or agency thereof, either for the rendition of personal services or furnishing any material, supplies, or equipment to the United States or any department or agency thereof, or selling any land or building to the United States or any department or agency thereof, if payment for the performance of such contract or payment for such material, supplies, equipment, land, or building is to be made in whole or in part from funds appropriated by the Congress, shall, during the period of negotiation for, or performance under such contract or furnishing of material, supplies, equipment, land, or buildings, directly or indirectly, make any contribution of money or any other thing of value, or promise expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, to any political party, committee, or candidate for public office or to any person for any political purpose or use; nor shall any person knowingly solicit any such contribution from any such person or firm, for any such purpose during any such period. Any person who violates the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years.

(b) Nothing in this section shall be construed to permit any action which is prohibited by any provision of law in force on the date this section takes effect.

SEC. 6. Such act of August 2, 1939, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 20. No political committee shall receive contributions aggregating more than $3,000,000, or make expenditures aggregating more than $3,000,000, during any calendar year. For the purposes of this section, any contributions received and any expenditures made on behalf of any political committee with the knowledge and consent of the chairman or treasurer of such committee shall be deemed to be received or made by such committee. Any violation of this section by any political committee shall be deemed also to be a violation of this section by the chairman and the treasurer of such committee and by any other person responsible for such violation. Terms used in this section shall have the meaning assigned to them in section 302 of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act, 1925, and the penalties provided in such act shall apply to violations of this section."

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

Before the question is put, I should say that the matter which is now before the Senate is a bill which we debated in the Senate for some 2 weeks in March, and which has been the subject of debate in the House of Representatives for the last 2 days. If any Senator wants to raise a question, I shall be very glad to afford him the opportunity. If not, I am ready for the question to be put.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is this a conference report?

Mr. HATCH. The question is on a motion to concur in the amendment of the House.

Mr. McNARY. I do not recall, and I ask the able Senator whether anyone opposed the particular provisions contained in the House amendment, or their philosophy, when the matter was before the Senate?

Mr. HATCH. The changes made in the House, insofar as the bill debated in the Senate was concerned, relate to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], which was defeated in the House, and is not now in the bill. The House also added a provision relating to the $3,000,000 expenditure provision, which has been discussed in the newspapers generally, a provision prohibiting campaign committees expending more than $3,000,000. That is a limitation. That was not in the bill as it passed the Senate, but was added in the House.

Mr. McNARY. That is in the bill now?

Mr. HATCH. It is included in the motion to concur.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, did the House debate the Bankhead amendment?

Mr. HATCH. That is included in the bill, was not stricken out, but on the floor of the House some additional language was added to that amendment. This is the new language:

This subsection shall not apply to contributions made to or by a State or local committee or other State or local organization.

That was added in the House on the floor yesterday, and is the only change, so far as I can discover, in the original Bankhead amendment, which reads:

It is hereby declared to be a pernicious political activity, and it shall hereafter be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, to make contributions in an aggregate amount in excess of $5,000.

That is the provision the Senator had in mind, I am sure.

Mr. President, I renew my motion that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the Senator from New Mexico about an amendment which was adopted in the Senate at my instance, the purpose of which was to qualify one of the provisions in the bill.

The bill as passed by the Senate provided that the interpretations which the Civil Service Commission had put upon the term "political activity" should in substance be read into the bill. Among the interpretations was one which would prohibit practically any official who came within the provisions of the measure from aspiring to another office. I had offered a minor amendment which would make it possible for one who happened to be a minor official or State official and who, the community thought, had demonstrated his capacity for a higher place, to be promoted by his community or his district or his State.

Mr. HATCH. That is not the amendment to which I referred.

Mr. ADAMS. I understand that.

Mr. HATCH. The amendment to which the Senator refers, I think, is retained in this language in the bill, and I will ask the Senator if I am correct. I read from page 14:

SEC. 17. Nothing in the second sentence of section 12 (a) of this act shall be construed to prevent or prohibit any officer or employee of a State or local agency (as defined in sec. 12 (f)) from continuing, until the election in connection with which he was nominated, to be a bona fide candidate for election to any public office.

That is the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. That has not been changed, as I recall, from the exact form in which it left the Senate.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BILBO. I have not had an opportunity to examine the bill since the House amended it. I want to ask when the legislation is to go into effect.

Mr. HATCH. The bill, as it left the Senate, contained no provision about when it should go into effect. It would become effective as any other law, after being passed by both Houses and being signed by the President. The House committee inserted a provision, after the bill was reported from the Judiciary Committee, that the bill should not become effective until after October 1. That committee amendment was defeated on the House floor yesterday, and the bill is just as it left the Senate in that regard. It will become effective as soon as it is passed by both branches of the Congress and signed by the Executive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] to concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

"STOP HITLER NOW"—ADVERTISEMENT BY COMMITTEE TO DEFEND AMERICA BY AIDING THE ALLIES

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I desire to speak only briefly about a matter that I think has interested many in this country and in the Senate for some period of time. That is the background of an advertisement called "Stop Hitler Now." I shall tell the Senate who financed in part the printing of this advertisement throughout the United States. The reason why it is important as an advertisement is just this. This advertisement that appeared all over the United States on the 10th day of June—"Stop Hitler Now"—said this:

This advertisement, appearing in newspapers from coast to coast, has been paid for with funds contributed by a number of patriotic American citizens who believe in all seriousness and sincerity that the safety of our country, the whole future of our national faith, is gravely threatened by the world revolution of Hitlerism.

The advertisement is signed:

Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies.

I have discussed the formation of this committee before and shall add more later.

The reason this ad is important is this: I picked up the New York Herald Tribune of the 12th day of June, and saw this headline:

"Stop Hitler" drive backed by Roosevelt.

Then it says in the article:

When 200 newspaper correspondents crowded into the President's oval study this afternoon for their semiweekly conference with the President they saw spread out on his desk tear-sheets of the full-page advertisement headlined "Stop Hitler Now," such as were published yesterday in the New York Herald Tribune and other papers. The advertisements were signed by the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, whose national chairman is William Allen White, Emporia, Kans., publisher. The author of the advertisement, as revealed this morning in the New York Herald Tribune, was the playwright, Robert Emmet Sherwood.

President Roosevelt said that, upon learning that Mr. Sherwood was the author of the advertisement, he had read it and found it to be a great piece of work and extremely educational for the people of the country.

A great piece of work. Now, let us see who paid for the advertisement. I have found out, and I think the Senate should have the facts. You find it is not the little fellows who paid for this advertisement "Stop Hitler Now!" Let us see who did. You find in that list the directors of international banks, and I will name them in a moment. You will find directors of corporations of Great Britain and the British Empire. No wonder they are interested. But they make it appear that they are doing so for America. We find bondholders of foreign countries that are so involved. We find international lawyers who have business in the countries now involved in war. We find directors of steel companies that are selling steel in this war. We find directors of manganese corporations, we find directors of mechanical-equipment corporations that make equipment for warring nations. We find directors of oil companies. Anyone knows what oil means in time of war. We find a director of a celluloid company, we find directors of metal companies, we find directors of electric companies, directors of steamship lines, and others interested in aircraft corporations.

We find these directors and their families paying for the advertisement which the President said was great work in his press conference.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Has the Senator read the names of those persons?

Mr. HOLT. Not yet. I am coming to that. I wish to speak briefly because I want the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] to have the floor later.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I wish the Senator would give the names.

Mr. HOLT. I shall do so. I find directors of these small banks. Listen to these banks. The directors of these banks, or the families of directors, paid for this advertisement. Who are they?

No wonder they want Hitler stopped. Director of J. Pierpont Morgan & Co., director of Drexel & Co., directors of Kuhn, Loeb & Co.—Senators have heard that name before—Kuhn, Loeb & Co., international banking. No wonder Kuhn, Loeb & Co. helped finance such an advertisement. A director in Lehman Bros., another international banking firm, helped pay for this "Stop Hitler" advertisement, and a number of others.

I ask that a part of the list I referred to be placed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The partial list is as follows:

Guaranty Trust Co., with branch offices in Antwerp, Brussels, Havre, Liverpool, Paris, and London, controls French-American Banking Corporation jointly with Comptoir National d'Escompte de Paris and First National Bank of Boston. This corporation does an international banking business.

Kuhn, Loeb & Co., international banking.

Drexel & Co., interlocked with J. P. Morgan & Co.

J. P. Morgan & Co., interlocked with banking operations in London and Paris and one of the best known international banking firms.

Lehman Bros., international banking.

Mr. HOLT. Now let us come down to actual individuals who paid for the advertisement. I have a list of the names. I do not intend to go into it in detail. But you find it is not the fellows who get killed in battle or the fathers of those who get killed in battle that paid for this "Stop Hitler" advertisement. Who do we find helped pay for it? First we find—not Averell Harriman, but Mrs. Averell Harriman. She is one who helped pay for it. The name "Harriman" is quite well known in this country in finance. Mrs. Harriman was one of those who helped pay for the "Stop Hitler" advertisement.

Another one was Mrs. H. P. Davison. Senators all know who H. P. Davison is, the big international financier. He also is a stockholder in many companies. The wife of the financier, Mr. H. P. Davison, helped to pay for that advertisement.

Who else?

Mrs. Daniel Guggenheim. Senators have heard that name "Guggenheim" in international banking. The wife of Daniel Guggenheim helped pay for it.

Here is another name of one who helped pay for it. A name that can be found among international bankers—that is the name Schiff, a banker of New York City, who studied banking in England before he became a partner of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. Mrs. John Schiff helped to pay for this advertisement.

Who else? Fredrick Warburg, partner of Kuhn-Loeb & Co. These are just "little" bankers who helped to pay for the advertisement.

Who else? Cornelius D. Whitney. Whitney helped pay for it. He wanted to stop Hitler. Another man whose name is so well known that he needs no description from me, and that is Thomas W. Lamont, director of J. Pierpont Morgan & Co., the former purchasing agents for England. He helped to pay for this advertisement "Stop Hitler Now!"

Who else paid for it? Joseph Thomas of Lehman Bros. Lehman Brothers! Senators noticed that Governor Lehman was active. Would it be for reasons that I do not care to state? But here we do find a partner of Lehman Bros. helping to pay for an ad placed in the newspapers, a full-page ad the purpose of which is to get America stirred up to interfere in the war.

Now who are these individuals that I mentioned just a moment ago? Not only international bankers, may I say, but individual members of corporations that are profiting as a result of this war.

Mr. President, I ask in order not to detain the Senate too long, to place in the Record the nature of the corporations so involved by their directorships in this "Stop Hitler" advertisement. Names of the corporations shall be given to the Senate at a later date.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The list is as follows:

Type of corporations: Iron and steel, chemicals, mechanical equipment, oil, metals, celluloid, electrical equipment, aircraft, munitions, steamship lines, smelting and refining, steel castings, barbed wire manufactures, shell casings, foreign owned and controlled financial and industrial companies, other corporations producing other materials necessary for war, international banking, international insurance.

Mr. HOLT. Then directors of the Columbia Broadcasting System. You hear plenty of war talk on the air. I ask, Mr. President, to place their names in the RECORD, those who donated to the "Stop Hitler" ad.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I. D. Levy, chairman, board of directors, WCAU, and director of Columbia Broadcasting.

Jerome H. Louchheim, bank director, and director of Columbia Broadcasting.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I venture to say that some of these persons will not be so popular a few months from now.

Mr. HOLT. The other day Henry Luce, editor of Time magazine, was on the air. It is stated he started his magazine program after he had secured a loan from Lamont, of Morgan & Co., and others. Luce says that we should go further into the war. He helped to pay for the "Stop Hitler" advertisement. Perhaps that will explain why Life magazine tries to show the country that we are in danger of invasion. Week before last Life magazine had the Germans over here already. I wonder if Mr. Luce's interest in this particular group with the international bankers has anything to do with the attitude of the magazine. He helped to pay for the "Stop Hitler" advertisement.

The list includes the names of outstanding film and theater personages. Who they are and what they do are understood by many.

We have all heard the name of Goldwyn. Samuel Goldwyn helped to pay for the "stop Hitler" advertisement. Why is Mr. Goldwyn so interested? I might discuss that question, but I think the recent press dispatches sufficiently show Mr. Goldwyn's interest, so I need go no further.

Let me give the names of some of the other individuals in the theater and motion-picture industries who helped to pay for the advertisement: Maxwell Anderson, Fred Astaire, Irving Berlin, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Lynn Fontanne, Myrna Loy, Alfred Lunt, Paul Muni, and Robert Sherwood are a few who helped to pay for it.

It has been said that Hollywood is the best place on earth for "suckers." We find those individuals donating. Perhaps an explanation is needed why the theaters are putting out hate films and hate plays to stir up America with propaganda for war.

Why are pictures which create hate being shown? Through hate is one of the best-known ways of propaganda so that we will feel that we should go across the sea and become involved in war. Why have certain individuals in the theatrical and motion-picture industries helped to pay for the advertisement?

Let me add that this advertisement had President Roosevelt's approval. He said it was great work. The advertisement was paid for by those connected with the banking firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the banking firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., Lehman Bros., by those in the steel industry, the oil industry, and the electrical manufacturing industry, and other industries which profit from war.

I do not care to detain the Senate longer in this connection; but when the Senate knows the full and complete list of individuals who helped to pay for the "Stop Hitler" advertisement, it will realize that the project is backed and permeated from one end to the other by international financiers. Their interest in stopping Hitler is that they want America—American boys—to protect and expand their investments. They want American boys to do the work. This propaganda was promoted by the President's own support of this advertisement from the White House press conference. It is backed by men who made millions out of the last war, men who were never neutral in the last war, and are not neutral in this one.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. We are now told that American soldiers will not be sent abroad.

Mr. HOLT. Yes. I understand that another campaign promise was that we were to balance the Federal Budget and cut expenses 25 percent. Those are only campaign promises.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Let me refer also to an earlier slogan—"He kept us out of war." I am wondering if the two slogans have equal value. I hope the last one will be found to be of greater weight and more value to the American people than the earlier one.

Mr. HOLT. I thank the Senator, and I am very glad he made that statement. I hope the last slogan does not go the way of other campaign promises of the past.

There is one other brief matter since I am discussing bankers, if the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] will not think I am trespassing upon his time. A number of times the President has spoken against personal-holding companies, and against those who would evade taxation by setting up such companies. He asked for legislation; but the week before we adjourned for the Republican national convention we picked up the newspaper, and whom did we see appointed as a Secretary to the President of the United States? We saw the name of James V. Forrestal, appointed as Secretary to the President of the United States. That may not mean anything to many of you, but who is James V. Forrestal? I will tell the Senate by reading from the Evening Star of 1933. He was the president of Dillon, Read & Co. This is the article from the Evening Star:

Taxes are evaded by Dillon, Read member's deal; James V. Forrestal tells Senate probers of company in Canada; says he did not pay on $864,000 profits; New York banker explains financing methods through personal corporation.

This is the man whom the President has appointed to be his secretary, after telling the people about the terrible holding companies, one of which was formed by his appointee. I read from the article:

A Dillon, Read & Co. member told Senate investigators how he paid no income tax in 1929 on a stock profit of $864,000 by means of setting up a personal company in Canada.

James V. Forrestal, the banker, testified between puffs on a pipe that the tax would have been far in excess of $95,000 if he had made the sales direct.

Questioned closely by Ferdinand Pecora, committee counsel, Forrestal said he had made an income-tax return on the Canadian company this year after disclosures before the inquiry committee in the investigation of other bankers.

As a result, he said, a tax of $6,000 was paid and another levy of $95,000 was under consideration.

The witness testified at length about various transactions with the Canadian company, including a $800,000 loan, and then Senator Couzens, Republican, of Michigan, said:

"In effect all these transactions were doing business with yourself, weren't they?"

"Certainly, for myself," the witness replied.

"Just shifting money from one pocket to another," Couzens added.

"I hadn't thought of it as such," the witness replied.

The article proceeds to state how a holding company was set up in Canada, and how another holding company was set up in Delaware, in order to protect Forrestal from paying taxes to the Federal Government. Now the President of the United States brings him in as his secretary, and it has been stated he is to be a liaison for Wall Street. Was there a whitewash to his past confessed record of setting up a holding company in order to evade taxation? That is an appointment which does not come to the Senate for confirmation.

Mr. President, I should like to have the entire article from the Evening Star printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TAXES ARE EVADED BY DILLON, READ MEMBER'S DEAL—JAMES V. FORRESTAL TELLS SENATE PROBERS OF COMPANY IN CANADA—SAYS HE DID NOT PAY ON $864,000 PROFITS—NEW YORK BANKER EXPLAINS FINANCING METHODS THROUGH PERSONAL CORPORATION

A Dillon, Read & Co. member told Senate investigators today how he paid no income tax in 1929 on a stock profit of $864,000 by means of setting up a personal company in Canada.

James V. Forrestal, the banker, testified between puffs on a pipe, that the tax would have been far in excess of $95,000 if he had made the sales direct.

Questioned closely by Ferdinand Pecora, committee counsel, Forrestal said he had made an income-tax return on the Canadian company this year after disclosures before the inquiry committee in the investigation of other bankers.

As a result, he said, a tax of $6,000 was paid and another levy of $95,000 was under consideration.

The witness testified at length about various transactions with the Canadian company, including an $800,000 loan, and then Senator Couzens, Republican, of Michigan, said:

"In effect, all these transactions were doing business with yourself, weren't they?"

"Certainly for myself," the witness replied.

"Just shifting money from one pocket to another," Couzens added.

"I hadn't thought of it as such," the witness replied.

In 1929, after he had transferred some of his stock holdings to the Canadian company, Forrestal said he paid an income tax of $300,000, both State and Federal. He testified that he did not know how much it would have been if the company had not been organized.

Not long before testimony was given the committee that Forrestal sold 16,788 shares of stock for $53 a share which he had acquired for less than a dollar each.

Relating how he had formed a private company for tax purposes which was controlled by himself and Mrs. Forrestal, he said he had obtained 37,000 share of United States and Foreign stock, a Dillon, Read & Co. investment trust.

He testified he bought 7,500 at 20 cents a share, 17,000 at 75 cents, and the remainder at $10, a total of $139,250—one-seventh of what he obtained for the 16,788 shares.

QUESTIONED ON BEEKMAN DEAL

Pecora questioned Forrestal first about formation of the Beekman Corporation, Ltd., of Canada in 1928 or 1929.

He said he held 70 percent of the capital stock and his wife 30 percent in the Beekman Co. of Delaware, which owns the Canada company.

Questioned by Pecora, Forrestal said he obtained 37,000 shares of United States and Foreign; Dillon, Read & Co. investment trust.

In July and August 1929, he testified he transferred 20,000 shares of the stock to the Beekman Corporation of Canada without any consideration.

Paul M. Strieffler, an employee of Dillon, Read & Co., is president of both the Delaware and Canadian companies, the witness said, and John Vincent, a personal friend, is vice president and secretary.

Pecora questioned Forrestal at length about the specific tax advantages derived from the companies, but the witness said he did not know.

"Naturally, I had the desire to pay the minimum taxes which I could legally," Forrestal said.

Shortly after transferring 20,000 shares to the company, he sold 16,788 of them for $896,000, Forrestal said, explaining that was at a price of $53 a share.

Pecora asserted this was stock which the banker acquired at 20 cents a share in the formation of the investment trust.

Forrestal said that out of his total block of 37,000 shares, he obtained 7,500 at 20 cents, 17,000 at 75 cents and the balance at $10.

PRICE PEGGING CHARGED

Into a tale of pyramiding profits to Dillon, Read & Co., from Brazilian and Bolivian bonds, Pecora yesterday interjected a charge of pegging prices by market operations and concealment of impending defaults.

Evidence to show payment of interest on some of the Brazilian securities was made by Dillon, Read from a special fund created from the bonds, instead of a remittance from Brazil, and that bond holders were not apprised of whence the money came, was put before the market inquisitors.

During the day's hearing he developed that the New York Banking House and Associated Bankers realized approximately $6,000,000 in profits from handling about $130,000,000 in bonds, of the two South American republics, virtually all of which now are in default, and valued at only a fractional part of the amounts for which they were sold.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE, CHESTER, ILL.

Mrs. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 1959, House bill 8372.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, to what does the bill relate? I think it would be proper to have the clerk read the title of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 8372.

Mr. McNARY. That depends upon what the bill is. May the title of the bill be stated by the clerk for the information of the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 8372) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Chester, Ill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3097) for the relief of Katherine M. Drier, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 458. An act extending the benefits of the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act of May 24, 1928, to provisional, probationary, or temporary officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard who served during the World War;

H. R. 2751. An act to repeal sections 3711, 3712, and 3713 of the Revised Statutes, which relate to the purchase in the District of Columbia of coal and wood for public use, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9576. An act relating to the admission to St. Elizabeths Hospital of persons resident or domiciled in the Virgin Islands of the United States.

KATHERINE M. DRIER

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3097) for the relief of Katherine M. Drier, which were, on page 2, line 5, to strike out "follows" and insert "if an additional award in the sum of $160,000 with interest at 5 percent per annum from January 1, 1920, had been entered by the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, on behalf of Katherine M. Drier", and to strike out lines 6 to 17, inclusive.

Mr. PITTMAN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, yesterday in this Chamber I listened with much interest to our distinguished friend and colleague the senior Senator from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] as he discussed our naval program. I was very happy, indeed, and fortunate to have been in the Chamber at that time, since I found that the information provided was really worth while for any American citizen, particularly in view of the fact that we are all now interested in the subject of national defense.

At the time I sat listening to the Senator from Massachusetts I was wondering, to be perfectly frank, whether or not our armed forces—particularly in respect to naval armaments, battleships, cruisers, submarines, and the forces of the air in conjunction with the Navy Department—would ever be called upon to participate in aggression or a war beyond the shores of America. While I sat listening I found before me a message from the President of the United States. I now desire to read a brief paragraph from that message:

> That we are opposed to war is known not only to every American but to every government in the world. We will not use our arms in a war of aggression; we will not send our men to take part in European wars.

I shall be perfectly frank in stating that when I read that statement, a part and portion of the message of the President of the United States sent to the Congress yesterday, a great load was lifted from my heart, because I had grieved constantly for a month for the American mothers who had been led to believe by many that the time was not far off when their sons would be called upon to fight upon foreign shores in a war that is not our war, to spill their blood upon foreign soil in a controversy that interests itself exclusively in the settlement of territorial lines.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am very happy to yield to my distinguished colleague from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I am wondering if the Senator places any more value in that statement than he attached to the statement "He kept us out of war," in 1916?

Mr. REYNOLDS. In answer to the Senator's statement, I wish to say that I am always willing and glad to read any statement that actually conveys my viewpoint. I am very optimistic; I am ever endeavoring to look upon the bright side of life and to see the radiant gold of the sunshine but never the clouds above. So, I want to believe all that I read or hear to the effect that we are not going to participate in anybody else's wars, wars which are no business of ours; and I want to continue so to believe, for I know, as my distinguished colleague does, that American mothers have been very greatly worried for many months past for fear, as I have said, that the day might arrive—an unhappy one—when their sons would be taken from their arms and their lives would be sacrified upon yonder foreign shores. So, I hope sincerely that every single word of the statement I read in which the President of the United States said that never would our armed forces be called upon to fight upon foreign shores will be accepted at face value, because the mothers of America will find great relief in that statement, particularly in view of the fact that 90 percent of the American people have ever been positively opposed to our participation in the wars of other nations, including the second world war, which is but one of more than 300 that have taken place upon the continent of Europe within the past 700 years. I know that my friend and distinguished colleague the able junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] has prayed time and again that never would we be sucked into the unfortunate controversy which rages beyond our shores.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am always happy to yield to my distinguished leader.

Mr. BARKLEY. In view of the inquiry made by the Senator from Minnesota, I think it ought to be stated——

Mr. REYNOLDS. I will say to the Senator that I was going to pursue that matter during the course of my remarks.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it ought to be stated that the statement contained in the message of the President yesterday is not in the slightest degree inconsistent with anything he has said or done during the entire European situation.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And at the Chautauqua conference he employed the words, "I hate war."

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct. I think it may be said truthfully that no man who was ever President of the United States, or the head of any other government, ever undertook to exercise his influence on other nations more consistently than did President Roosevelt to prevent, in the first place, the breaking out of the war in Europe. While he has in his public statements and in his recommendations to Congress sought to arouse a sense of the necessity for us to prepare ourselves for any emergency or any exigency that might arise, there is nothing in anything the President has ever said or in anything he has ever done which would indicate that he ever had the slightest intention or desire that we should involve ourselves in a European war or send our Army over there or take any physical part in the conflict that is now raging in Europe. It is unfair, it seems to me, to him; it is unfair to the Government of the United States; it is unfair to the American people for these constant jibing efforts to be made here to create the impression that the President of the United States at any time has desired to send the Army of the United States to Europe or to any foreign country to fight their battles.

So far as the campaign of 1916 is concerned, everybody who is familiar with it knows that President Wilson, who was then a candidate for reelection, never at any time used the argument that he had "kept us out of war"; he never at any time obligated himself that we would not ultimately go into the war; but many of his enthusiastic friends, campaigning over the country, did say—and that was the truth—that up to that time he had "kept us out of war"; and he had. It was a truthful statement. The events that ultimately led us into war no one could have foreseen; and they transpired after the election in 1916, at which Woodrow Wilson was reelected President of the United States.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am very happy to yield to my distinguished colleague the junior Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want to say to the Senator from Kentucky that it is also true if the conditions that existed during the campaign at the time of the election had continued as they were then we would not have gotten into the World War.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. But the German Government inaugurated a new policy of sinking our ships and marking off of territories.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true. I do not believe that any president or the head of any government ever led his people into war with a heavier heart than did Woodrow Wilson in the spring of 1917.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President——

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am very happy to yield to my friend from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The statement of our distinguished leader is very reassuring and we need to be reassured. The statement of the able Senator from Texas reminds us that conditions may change. Conditions did change at the time of the World War, and we did get into that war in spite of the country being told that we would be kept out of it. I devoutly hope and pray that the present administration will see to it that we stay out of war; but I have been greatly disturbed about it and, in view of our experience in the World War, I do not think that we can be blamed. If, however, this course of "keeping out of war" is pursued, so that we shall remain at peace, no one will be happier than the Members of the Senate, I am sure—all of them.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I can very readily appreciate the anxiety experienced by my distinguished friend from Minnesota. I never look at him, to be perfectly frank, but that I derive inspiration and hope, for, I recall, as we all do, that when Congress was called upon to vote a declaration of war in 1917 he was one of the very few who then sat in the other House of the National Congress who said, "No, I shall never vote to spill the blood of the sons of American mothers upon foreign soil in order that they may participate in making settlement of quarrels that are no business of ours." So I say, with perfect candor and in all sincerity, I can appreciate how he feels and the anxiety he has experienced, because I know of no man who gives more time to thoughts concerning the welfare and the safety of the American people than does the Honorable ERNEST LUNDEEN, of Minnesota.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF SENATOR NORRIS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I gladly yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from North Carolina to yield to me briefly, in order that I may comment on a very happy event of this day.

We have all the profoundest respect and affection for the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. I doubt very much whether any Member of this body within the recollection of any of us has rendered greater constructive service to the American people or has done it with more unselfishness and with greater vision, than has the Senator from Nebraska. Today he celebrates the seventy-ninth anniversary of his birth. I sincerely trust that he may live many years to celebrate other birthdays; that he will honor the Senate and the United States of America with continuous membership in this body; that he may continue to serve the American people.

I congratulate Senator NORRIS. I congratulate the Senate on having him as a Member. I hope he will not only enjoy this day but will enjoy many more birthdays which he may celebrate as milestones in a peculiarly useful and honorable life, as a private citizen and as a public servant.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, never during my service in this body have I more happily yielded than at the present time, because I was very glad to learn of the birthday of our distinguished colleague. I want to say that for him we all have the deepest respect and very great admiration. I take advantage of this opportunity to wish for him many happy returns of the day, because no more valuable Member has any Congress of the United States ever had than the Honorable GEORGE W. NORRIS, our beloved colleague.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. REYNOLDS. I happily yield to the senior Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I hope I may not mar the beauty and symmetry of the speech of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and that of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] in the gratulatory vein in which they speak of the able senior Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. President, there is an eloquent line in Shakespeare's Coriolanus in which Brutus refers to the great patriot, and says:

How youngly he began to serve his country.
How long continued.

Those lines seem to apply justly to this really great man, GEORGE W. NORRIS, a product of American soil, who in storm, in sunshine, has been and I believe will be in history the commanding Senator of our time. The laurels that he wears so gracefully he won honorably. He is secure from envy. He is beyond the range of eulogy in usefulness as a statesman; and in attempting to describe his career, which will always be an inspiration to many a storm-tossed American boy, I realize the futility of words.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, happily I yielded to these distinguished Senators, particularly at this time.

REGISTRATION OF CERTAIN ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another matter, not related to this?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. I desire to make inquiry.

Some time ago the House of Representatives passed a measure, House bill 10094, to require the registration of certain organizations carrying on activities within the United States, and for other purposes. One of the purposes of the bill was to require the registration with the Attorney General of every organization subject to foreign control which engages in political activities, and so forth.

Mr. President, I realize, as does every other Senator, that freedom of expression is a fundamental principle of the American Government; but with America today a vital and really serious problem has arisen, in that certain organizations, many of whose members are aliens enjoying the hospitality of the United States, nevertheless engage in subversive activities, designed to overthrow the United States.

That bill has been referred to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. The chairman of the Judiciary Committee named a subcommittee to consider the bill, to investigate it, and to report, which subcommittee is composed of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] as chairman, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER].

I understand that Congress is to adjourn for a week. I see present the able chairman of the subcommittee. I ask him what progress has been made on that important bill, if he will not consider such a question amiss.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I very gladly yield to the Senator from Texas, because the Senators are now discussing a subject in which for years I have been vitally interested, as they know.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator for his courtesy in yielding.

In answer to the Senator from Arizona, I desire to say that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] has for years, practically ever since he has been in this body, been a very militant advocate of measures to prevent subversive activities, and to keep out undesirable aliens, and to deport undesirable aliens now here.

The bill to which the Senator from Arizona refers is popularly known as the bund bill. Of course, it does not apply to the bund by name any more than it does to other organizations. The bill, on page 3, lists the character—not the names, but the character—of organizations which are subject to the bill and which must register; for instance, every organization subject to foreign control which engages in political activities. That is simply symbolic of a number of other related provisions bringing certain organizations within the terms of the measure.

In the case of organizations within the terms of the measure, on page 5 there are 14 paragraphs which set forth the information they must file with the Attorney General. I will say that there are no penal provisions in the measure except for failure to register, if the organizations are liable to register. The bill creates no new crimes other than that; and the view of the subcommittee, so far as I am able to ascertain it, is that the measure will be reported to the full committee on the theory that there can be no harm in requiring the fullest publicity of organizations of this kind and their activities. We believe that publicity is one of the greatest weapons against wrongdoing that there is anywhere in the armory of truth, and we believe that the vaunted freedom of speech and freedom of the press are in harmony with that idea; and while people have freedom of the press and freedom of opinion they ought not to conceal from the public any of the purposes of organizations of this character.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, may I at this juncture inquire of the distinguished Senator whether or not the bill—and I must confess that I have not read it carefully—requires organizations, for instance the bund, to provide the governmental department with which they are to register with the names and addresses of their members?

Mr. CONNALLY. It does.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I think that is splendid, and I congratulate Senators upon it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Among other requirements, the bill requires the listing of the names of their members, and the places where they meet, and the names of their auxiliary and subordinate organizations. Let me say to the Senator that we had before us some days ago Mr. Kunze, the national leader, as he calls himself, of the German-American Bund.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I had a telegram from him yesterday.

Mr. CONNALLY. He vigorously protested against the measure as an infringement of constitutional rights and the right of the German-American Bund to have its own organization.

Yesterday we had another hearing, and we had before us Mr. Earl Browder, national head of the Communist Party in the United States. Among other things, Mr. Browder testified that he was in sympathy with the invasion of Finland by Russia and the taking over of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania by Russia. He also was in sympathy with the movement by which Russia seized Bessarabia and Bucovina from Rumania; and while he withheld any definite commitment on what he thought about Russia taking the Dardanelles, he said that if it were in line with their former policy he would probably favor that also.

I cite these facts merely to show the Senator from North Carolina and the distinguished Senator from Arizona the character of opposition that we have to this measure. Those two witnesses and those two groups are the only persons from whom we have had any protest whatever.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am very grateful to our distinguished colleague. I am very happy to have that information, which will provide encouragement for the American people.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. I hope the Senator from Texas and the other members of the subcommittee will not construe my question as a prod of any sort with intent to hurry them, but I now give notice that on Monday, the 29th of July, the main Judiciary Committee will assemble to consider the bill, and the Senators who are members of the Judiciary Committee will have due notice later on. I give notice at this time that the committee will consider the bill at that time—Monday, the 29th day of this month.

I thank the members of the subcommittee for their diligence.

Mr. CONNALLY. Allow me to say that the other members of the subcommittee are the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] and the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER]. The Senator from Connecticut is here.

Mr. ASHURST. I am not trying to prod the subcommittee. It would be improper for me to attempt to do so.

Mr. President, along the lines of this so-called bund bill, opulent with irony as are all human affairs, I know of no more bitter irony than the following:

When men are arrested who engage in criminal activities to overthrow the Government of the United States, the first tribunal and the first document to which they appeal for protection are the Court and the Constitution. These gangsters, "fifth columnists," and other antisocial persons when arrested always say: "Is there not something in this Constitution protecting me?" In their day of trouble, when brought to court for attempting to overthrow this Government, the disloyal appeal to that very Constitution for their deliverance.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And so has it been for years.

Mr. ASHURST. Which recalls one of the superlative ironies of history—and I will conclude with this, if the Senator will permit me. These are not my words, these are the words of a celebrated orator of bygone days, whose name I do not remember, but who said:

> If all the men who have fallen under American justice since the beginning of this Government could be resurrected at the foot of the gallows and were authorized to frame a government for themselves, they would formulate a government of the same kind as the Government under whose justice they fell.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am indebted to my distinguished friend, because he has talked very interestingly on a phase of a subject in which my colleagues know I have been vitally interested since the day I first took the oath of office as United States Senator. He stated the truth when he said a moment ago that those who would destroy this Government, and who are constantly attempting its destruction, are now appealing to the very thing they want to destroy, they are appealing for their protection to the very thing which they would destroy.

Mr. ASHURST. To paraphrase, the cornerstone they rejected is the one they gladly accept when in trouble.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Absolutely. Since a subject of such interest to me has been mentioned—I might add, without hesitation or exaggeration, of such great interest to the American people—in particular response to what the distinguished Senator from Texas said a moment ago in reference to the gentleman who heads the bund, and who was here day before yesterday to testify before his subcommittee, I wish to say that I knew that the head of the bund objected to the bill now being considered—that is to say, to require compulsory registration, and to require the furnishing of a list of the names and addresses of the members of the bund—because only yesterday or the day before I received a telegram from that gentleman which I wish to read to this body at the present time. This is dated New York, July 9, 1940, and reads:

> ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
> United States Senator, Washington, D. C.
> We protest against the adoption of the bill S. 4132 on the grounds that it is an attempt to enact bill of attainder, legislation which is expressly prohibited by the Constitution. Refer to my testimony before Judiciary Committee Monday, July 8, clearly showing that above bill is * * * in the name of law. The German-American Bund has never been convicted of any crime. This bill is all vicious and un-American.

That telegram was sent to me by Mr. G. Wilhelm Kunze, national leader, the German-American Bund, 178 East Eighty-fifth Street, New York City. He protested to me for the reason that only about 10 days ago I introduced two bills which would affect his organization. One was that mentioned as Senate bill 4132 in his telegram of the aforementioned date, which provides for the outlawing of the Communist Party and provides for the outlawing of the Nazi Bund or any other sort of Fascist organization. I can well understand why this gentleman is protesting to me, because if my bill shall be enacted, then his organization in this country will be destroyed. But I again point out to the able Senator from Arizona and call to his attention the very words of this man's telegram to me, in which he is appealing to the Constitution of the United States for protection and justice, whereas we find that the people connected with that organization, and with the Communist Party, are attempting now to destroy the things to which they appeal.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not wish to deliver a legal opinion—the Senate does not need one from me—but a vast deal of misconception exists throughout this country on the part of excellent citizens who I am sure would welcome this information.

An alien is a guest of the United States. He may be admitted or not, as the United States pleases. Forsooth, we would not be an independent power; we would be a vassal state, if aliens could come here and remain so long as they wished. One is not the master of his house if a guest may come and remain as long as he pleases. An alien is a guest of the United States, who may be deported at any time, for a good reason, for a bad reason, or for no reason at all. Is not that true?

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is quite true; and I thank the Senator very much.

In pursuance of the telegram of the gentleman who heads the German-American Bund, I might add that I surmise that he will likewise protest a bill I introduced about 10 days ago which would prohibit any labor union, organization, or association from having as its agent an alien, a member of the Communist Party, a member of the German-American Bund, or one who has been a member of any of those organizations for the past 2 or 3 years.

In addition to that, my bill would prohibit any American citizen who has been deprived of his citizenship by reason of conviction of a felony from holding office in a union or serving as an agent or representative of a union engaged in negotiations with industry which interests itself in interstate commerce. We can well understand the protest of these people who are constantly engaged in these activities which we believe to be subversive and un-American.

Mr. President, I may add in this connection that I hope the committees to which my bills have been referred will give them immediate attention, and I respectfully request that I be provided an opportunity to produce witnesses to testify to those respective committees in support of my bills, which measures would destroy and outlaw the Communist Party, the German-American Bund, and Fascist organizations whose members are not thoroughly in accord with our attitude toward the American Government.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I propound an inquiry to the Senator?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am very happy to yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I believe the Senator is a member of the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am not, I am sorry to say, but I am a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

Mr. GEORGE. I knew the Senator was a valued member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, but I wanted to address an inquiry to him regarding a bill which passed the House of Representatives some time ago providing for the deportation of Bridges. Has the Senator any information about that bill?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am informed by the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], who is chairman of the Committee on Immigration in the Senate, that he named a subcommittee to handle that matter, and I believe the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] was named as chairman of the subcommittee. When I learned that, I questioned the Senator from Utah about the matter. He is here and can speak for himself as to what has become of the bill, a bill in which we are all interested. So I gladly yield to the distinguished senior Senator from Utah in order that he may be provided an opportunity of answering the question so appropriately propounded by our distinguished and beloved friend from my sister State of Georgia.

Mr. KING. I can answer in a word. I am a member of the subcommittee named by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] to consider the bill to which reference has been made. One of the members of the subcommittee was out of the city for some time and reached Washington only a day or two ago. I think it is the purpose of the subcommittee to meet in the near future, I hope tomorrow or next day, for the purpose of determining the policy to be pursued.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am very happy to have that information, and I sincerely trust that there will be no delay. I know how interested the members of the subcommittee are. Insofar as I am concerned, I say without hesitation that I am in high hope that the subcommittee will recommend to the full committee a favorable report on the bill for the deportation of Harry Bridges. It was passed by the House.

I think Bridges should be deported. Of course, if it were left to the Department of Labor, where naturalization and immigration matters formerly rested, Bridges would never be deported, and in substantiation and proof of my assertion, just a few days ago I had inserted in the RECORD the names of 700 alien criminals who had been kept in this country by the Secretary of Labor, and who had been maintained by the American taxpayers.

I hope that Bridges will be deported soon. He is a menace to this country. He is one of the termites that has been boring from within.

Mr. President, you will recall that 7 years ago he was the one who created trouble on the Pacific coast, when the American flag was hauled down, and the American mails were held up, and millions of dollars of investments of American people, including those of widows and orphans, were destroyed as the result of the activities of that alien. I hope our distinguished friend, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], will see to it that the committee convenes at an early date, and that we may forthwith and without hesitation, but with joy and happiness, deport at least one alien criminal.

Since I have mentioned the words "alien criminal," let me say that I have had directed to me a number of inquiries from my colleagues, and a number of other interested American citizens as to what we propose to do with alien criminals, thousands upon thousands of whom are running at large and have not been apprehended. What shall we do with them when at last we locate them and put them under arrest? Suppose they have come from some country which has been absorbed by a totalitarian government. I wish to make a suggestion in pursuance to and in addition to the one I made the other day when I spoke upon this subject. I suggested that we provide detention camps in which to place alien criminals, but since making that suggestion I have received numerous letters from sundry citizens protesting against the establishing of detention camps in their States. They say it is all right to confine our own criminals in places of detention in Georgia and other States, but they do not want the criminals from foreign countries confined there. However, we must put them somewhere. I rather assume that Hitler would not want to take back alien criminals who came from Czechoslovakia, from Hungary, from Holland, from Belgium and France. He would say, "You have them. You let them come into your country. You fed them; you provided them with opportunities to rob the American people and destroy your form of government—you keep them."

That being the case, where shall we send them? I suggested that we provide detention camps in the various States, but there were protests against that. I later suggested that we provide camps on some island outside continental United States. I now have a better suggestion. France owes us a great deal of money, about $4,000,000,000, including interest on the debt. In addition to asking France to turn over to us her islands in the Caribbean Sea, the Leeward and the Windward Islands, and Miquelon and St. Pierre, near Newfoundland, I think we should ask France to turn over to us Devil's Island, near French Guiana. That would be the place to send these criminals. While we are asking for other islands to provide for our own national defense, I think we should ask for Devil's Island for that purpose.

Mr. President, getting back to the question of war. We are all opposed to war, but we are relieved now to know that the President of the United States has said specifically and without any hesitation apparently that our soldiers will not go to fight on foreign soil.

I have now before me the clipping to which I referred previously which says:

F. D. R. PLEDGE TO BE DEMOCRATIC PLANK

Administration sources today said a pledge to refrain from sending American troops to take part in European wars would be written into the 1940 Democratic platform.

I am very happy to know that, particularly in view of the fact that I am going to Chicago on Sunday. I was going before the platform committee and respectfully insist that we write such a declaration in our Democratic platform, because the American mothers demand to know whether or not we Democrats are going to send their sons to Europe. So now that much of my difficulty will be eliminated. But I am going to the convention anyway.

The first reason is that I shall have there the pleasure of seeing the most lovable character, and one of the most distinguished Members of the Senate, despite the fact that he is a young Member, and that is none other than our distinguished Presiding Officer, the honorable junior Senator from Kentucky to whom I always refer as "HAPPY" CHANDLER. If we had more "HAPPY CHANDLERS" on earth we would have a better world, because he spreads sunshine and joy, rather than lowering dark clouds to cover the heavens above. What we need is sunshine. Thank God for his smile, and his happy handshake, and his sincerity, and his interest in the American people.

Mr. President, knowing that from now on I shall have your undivided attention, I shall proceed. This article——

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. After hearing that scintillating remark about the Nation's needs, I wonder if the distinguished Senator would not agree that the new dealers need Wisconsin cheese?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I wish to say to the Senator that Wisconsin provides our dining room annually with a goodly portion of cheese, and it has always tasted good, and, insofar as I am concerned, I will say that I have never experienced any difficulty in digesting it without the aid of a digestive tablet.

Mr. LUNDEEN. If the Senator has any difficulty in that respect let him eat some Land O'Lakes butter.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator for that suggestion. I am happy to provide the Senator with an opportunity to bring attention to his great State, because I myself always seek the opportunity to advertise the greatest State in the Union—and that is North Carolina.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. What sort of advertising medium has the Senate of the United States become?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Does the Senator wish the Chair to answer that question?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I suggest that the Chair answer that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On second thought the Chair will leave the answer to the distinguished Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I have never lost an opportunity to use this Chamber to advertise North Carolina, and for that I need never extend an apology, because when words in a description of that great and beautiful State flow from my lips I know they are music to every ear upon which they fall.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Gladly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree with the Senator's fluent description of North Carolina, where my ancestors resided years ago.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is one reason it is such a great State.

Mr. BARKLEY. But I think the Senator from North Carolina will readily agree that there is a difference between the balmy atmosphere of North Carolina, and the music of her birds, and also her salubrious climate, and the Limburger cheese which has been so extensively advertised here today by the Senator from Wisconsin. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Of course I shall give the Senator an opportunity to answer the distinguished Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. WILEY. I am surprised at the ignorance of the distinguished senior Senator from Kentucky in his reference to the smell of Wisconsin Limburger cheese. When he referred to "smelly stuff" he must have referred to some of that "stuff" that comes out of the back hills of Kentucky. Wisconsin Limburger has arona. Our Cheddar, brick, and Swiss cheese also make the mouth water.

But I did not rise for that particular purpose, Mr. President. The Senator asked a question about what kind of advertising medium the Senate of the United States has become. I want to answer that by saying that on July 11, in the Washington Post, Harlan Miller's column had this to say:

F. D. R.'s mail: At the White House mail room they have counted during the last week 5,000 letters urging Mr. Roosevelt to run for a third term. He has been studying these letters, analyzing their source motivation.

I want to place before the country some real advertising showing real coordination between newspapers and the men behind the scenes who are trying to fool the people.

Mr. President, a few days ago something was said about some telegrams coming to the Philadelphia convention, as the result of a stupenduous popular outburst from people throughout the country. But in this capital of ours, and undoubtedly throughout the country, there is being circulated this card [exhibiting]. We do not know who got it out, but we know someone got it out for the purpose of sending the President this mail. I am going to read the card. Here is what it says on one side:

Please act at once and pass this on.
Rally round Roosevelt.
Will you do this at once?
Write to Franklin D. Roosevelt, the White House, Washington, D. C., and ask him to run again for the Presidency? A letter or even a postcard will do.
We need him desperately today. We need his leadership. We know he has never failed in his duty and we hope we can make him heed the voice of America with our plea to carry us through the next 4 years.
But we must write—today. Will you also ask two other friends to write and have them do the same with just two other friends? They can be men, women, or children because he's the President of all of us.
Please pass this card on, but write, right away. Millions of letters from us will show the politicians the man we want as President the next 4 years.

All this pressure is on the one side of this card. How is this for home-made advertising?

Then it says, "See other side."

On the other side it says:

Please act at once and pass this on.
Rally round Roosevelt.
It is your right as an American citizen to write to the President of the United States. At this moment it is also your duty.
You address him as follows: Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt, the White House, Washington, D. C.
You can begin your letter "Dear Mr. President," or "Dear Mr. Roosevelt."
Your letter need not be long, but it should be your own, in your own language, telling him that you personally believe he should serve the country another 4 years. If you wish, you can tell him why you think so.
Sign your full name and your address.

The committee which is investigating things in the Senate might take this card and investigate something. Apparently, this is a last-minute rush. It may explain why so many of our Democratic friends are not going to Chicago, and consequently will not come to "heaven," which they have been asked to visit. This bit of advertising at the last minute is a piece of showmanship at which Barnum would not fail to blush.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, for the moment I was not listening; but I understood the Senator to mention the Republican convention in Philadelphia. Did the Senator mention the Republican convention in Philadelphia?

Mr. WILEY. For what purpose does the Senator ask the question?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I was told that the Senator mentioned the Republican convention, and immediately said, "He must have thought of the Republican convention, because we were just talking about limburger cheese." [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Even if the Senator from Wisconsin did inadvertently mention the Republican convention, he ought not to be required to repeat the reference.

Mr. WILEY. I shall be very happy to have the distinguished Senator from North Carolina repeat his very brilliant remark. I did not quite catch the import of it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. It was simply this: The distinguished Senator from Wisconsin was talking about limburger cheese, and he immediately followed the discussion of limburger cheese by mentioning the Republican convention at Philadelphia. I was wondering if a discussion of limburger cheese gave occasion to the Senator to talk about the Republican convention in Philadelphia. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILEY. Apparently, attention of the distinguished Senator was so diverted by the remark of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky that he did not pay attention to my reading of the "push Roosevelt" card, which has recently been put into action, so that the Democrats, when they reach Chicago, will have nothing to say as to who shall be the nominee for President on their ticket.

This last-minute push, generated by folks behind the Executive, is convincing evidence that there is no spontaneous "push" by the people for a third term.

Quite revealing, Mr. President, is this "propaganda card." It has been gleefully said around the Senate in the past few days that the question of first place had been settled by the big boss, and that now there is competition on the floor of the Senate for second place only.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I am always glad to yield to my friend.

I wish to complete the reading of the article to which I referred a few moments ago, so that it may be embodied in the RECORD:

F. D. R. PLEDGE TO BE DEMOCRATIC PLANK

Administration sources today said a pledge to refrain from sending American troops to take part in European wars would be written into the 1940 Democratic platform.

Such a promise, designed to stop third-party talk, is contained in a tentative draft of the platform taken to Chicago yesterday by Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER, Democrat of New York, who will serve as chairman of the convention's resolutions committee.

NO AGGRESSION

President Roosevelt gave the tip-off on the important foreign-policy plank in his defense message to Congress yesterday.

"We will not use our arms in a war of aggression," he said. "We will not send our men to take part in European wars. But, we will repel aggression against the United States or the Western Hemisphere."

Similar, or almost identical language will be contained in the platform to be adopted by the convention next week, administration sources said.

WHEELER APPEASED

The Republican Party, at its Philadelphia convention 2 weeks ago, approved a keep-out-of-war platform. It contained no pledge to refrain from sending American soldiers to fight on foreign battlefields.

Such a pledge, if adopted by the Democrats, would appease isolationists, led by Senator BURTON K. WHEELER, Democrat of Montana, who have been strongly critical of the administration's policy of giving material aid to Britain.

Senator WHEELER recently threatened to bolt the party if it failed to go into the Presidential election campaign with a firm antiwar platform. He is a candidate for the Presidential nomination in the event Mr. Roosevelt turns down a third term and was among the first to applaud the Chief Executive's pledge yesterday.

Senator WHEELER said formation of a third party, so far as he was concerned, would be unnecessary if the Democratic Convention adopted a similar promise. He indicated he had been assured such action would be taken.

NO WAR PARTY LABEL

A pledge to keep American troops in this hemisphere, it was said, would take the sting out of some Republican efforts to pin upon the Democrats the label "war party."

One of the most outspoken Republican isolationists—Representative HAMILTON FISH, of New York—said yesterday the President's pledge was positive proof he will be a candidate for renomination.

Senators D. WORTH CLARK, Democrat of Idaho, and EDWIN C. JOHNSON, Democrat of Colorado, members of the Wheeler group, also expressed gratification.

As I stated a few moments ago, I was very happy to read that item in the afternoon newspaper.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. In that connection I am a little disturbed by the statement of Mr. Stimson, now Secretary of War, who is quoted as saying that we should convoy ships into the war zone. Before that occurs there might be no occasion for war; but if our ships should then be sunk, as the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] said, conditions might change. I might cite a number of such possibilities. The important thing is that we should have a foreign policy which will meet all such possible incidents. We have a north star which we can follow in reference to our foreign policy. In general, I refer to the foreign policy of Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, Cleveland, and a long line of statesmen, including Henry Clay. The great Andrew Jackson maintained that it would not be necessary for us to intervene in the affairs of Europe. No matter what the incidents are, they can be peacefully adjusted unless we are attacked here at home.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I will say to the distinguished Senator, partly in answer to his statement, that I am particularly interested in our foreign policy so far as it relates to our interest today in an adequate national defense. I do not think any of us has ever been specifically advised as to what we are supposed to defend, and why. Many questions have arisen in that connection. I think we should know definitely, in order that we may more definitely make our plans in reference to the national defense, in which we are now engaged.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the able Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I should like to say that we can have no better national defense than to follow the resolutions introduced by the able and distinguished Senator from North Carolina to acquire island bases along the Atlantic coast, and fortify those bases. Then we shall have real defense. We shall not have appropriations by the billion, which seem to evaporate, leaving nothing with which to defend ourselves. We shall have the islands; we shall have the American flag over them. We shall have air, land, and sea bases on them; and we shall have a line of fortifications to meet any threatening force which may come across the ocean should anyone be so mad as to attempt to attack us from across the Atlantic. I doubt whether anyone will try it. If they should, we can meet them at our fortified island bases. I am a supporter of the resolutions introduced and ably defended on the floor of the Senate by the Senator from North Carolina. I hope he will not become weary. I see no signs of that. He is a vigorous defender of all the ideas he presents in this hour of crisis, and I hope the Senator will press for the acquisition of those islands.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator from Minnesota for his tribute and compliment. In conclusion, I expect briefly to mention the resolutions to which he has referred; but, lest I neglect it, and since we are talking about American participation in the war—or, rather, about our nonparticipation—I wish to say that today I received a letter, in the form of a resolution, from Salisbury, N. C. It is signed by Mrs. Pearl Thompson, secretary of the Rowan Pomona Grange. It reads:

ROWAN POMONA GRANGE,
Salisbury, N. C., July 8, 1940.

HON. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Rowan County Pomona Grange in session on June 26, 1940, adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas there are groups in America seeking to involve the United States in the present European war and whereas we believe that the peace and security of the United States should be preserved: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Rowan County Pomona Grange hereby submits the following resolutions:

"First, that we urge the Congress of the United States to take all possible precaution in keeping the United States from entering the present conflict.

"Second, that we urge the Congress to build a defense program adequate to protect our country from foreign aggression.

"Third, that we urge the Congress not to send war equipment for foreign nations to help carry on their war that would weaken our national defense.

"Fourth, that a copy of this resolution be sent to President Roosevelt, Congressman R. L. DOUGHTON, and Senators J. W. BAILEY and ROBERT R. REYNOLDS."

Yours truly,

PEARL THOMPSON,
Secretary, Rowan Pomona Grange.

In conclusion, since it was mentioned by my colleague from Minnesota, and since we are vitally interested in national defense at this hour, I wish to call one other matter to the attention of the Members of this body.

Several months ago I introduced two resolutions. One of them authorized the President of the United States to enter into negotiations with the Republic of France for the purpose of endeavoring to acquire the island possessions of France in the Western Hemisphere, the price to be agreed upon to be deducted from the billions of dollars which are due us, and have been due us for more than 25 years past.

That resolution went to the Foreign Relations Committee, and our very able and genial chairman immediately dispatched it to the State Department. To date we have never heard from the State Department in reference to that resolution.

A day or so later I introduced another resolution, which authorized the President of the United States to enter into negotiations with Great Britain with a view to acquiring the possessions of Great Britain in the Western Hemisphere, the price to be agreed upon to be deducted from the more than $5,000,000,000 due us from Great Britain and the interest thereon. To date we have not heard from the State Department, despite the fact that the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate immediately had the resolution conveyed to the State Department.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be glad to yield in a moment.

Yesterday afternoon I made a tabulation of the amount of money which we have appropriated during the present Congress for national defense. I am appalled at the total of the appropriations, which reveals to me that we have made appropriations to the extent of more than $17,000,000,000 for ships of the air, for the Navy and naval vessels, for the marines, for the Army, for every branch of the service. Mr. President, I want to know why I have not heard from the administration; I want to know why I have not heard from the State Department as to those suggestions. Why do I want to know? Because I am aware that our actual first line of defense is—where? It is in the Pacific and in the Atlantic. It is there where those islands are and where our bases and fortifications should be. We are putting forth great efforts to provide national defense, and are spending $17,000,000,000 of the taxpayers' money for that purpose, while in the Caribbean Sea, in the Leeward and Windward Islands, extending from Port of Spain in Trinidad only a stone's throw off the coast of Venezuela in South America northward, we find island possessions of Great Britain—Nassau, where the Duke of Windsor will be Governor General; Bimini, only 50 miles off the coast of Florida; Bermuda, only 500 miles due east from the coast of North Carolina—possessions for which the British Empire have no earthly use.

I say now is the time when we should endeavor to secure peacefully from the British those islands for which they have no earthly use, but which we need as outposts in the Atlantic. We would have done well if we had entered into negotiations months ago with the Republic of France, when that Government was in a position legally to have negotiated with us, because it is now under the iron heel of Hitler and the totalitarian dictators, and it will be a long time before they will agree ever to permit France, which is soon to become a Fascist State, to enter into negotiations with us for French possessions on our coast.

In addition to possessions in the Leeward and Windward Islands, France has two islands that for years I have advocated we acquire, namely, Miquelon and St. Pierre, which are only 15 miles off Newfoundland. Three years ago when returning from Labrador, I visited those island possessions of France near the Crown colony of Great Britain—Newfoundland—I realized that we needed those islands, but nobody is paying any attention whatsoever to acquiring those islands from a nation that has no use for them, and now, that Hitler has taken over France, we may experience great difficulty and trouble in ever becoming the possessor of those islands.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President——

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. As I recall, about 20 resolutions have been introduced on this subject. It appears now that none of them will ever be heard from. I do believe that our State Department should discover the resolutions which the able Senator from North Carolina has offered regarding our islands, and the resolutions which I have presented about these island bases. If they would look around they might discover some resolutions; and let us see if we can have some action on them.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I will say to the Senator that everyone who knows anything about national defense must be aware that we have got to have those islands in the Caribbean and that no nation with any sense would permit a foreign nation to own islands or to be possessed of property 50 miles off its own coast, whether that nation were friendly or unfriendly. The Senator will recall that we actually have no outposts in the North Atlantic. The only one we could possibly get, because it is the only island base in the North Atlantic, is Bermuda. We ought to have that, because 95 percent of the revenue derived by the Government at Hamilton, Bermuda, comes out of the port of New York.

In reference to Miquelon and St. Pierre, the President, addressing the joint session of Congress not so long ago in yonder House, pointed out to us there assembled that, with modern transportation, a plane could fly from Greenland to Newfoundland within 4 hours. Yet we make no attempt to acquire those island possessions. We spend $17,000,000,000 for national defense, and here are outposts which we can get for nothing if we would only take the proper steps.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President——

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator is absolutely correct, of course, and more than $17,000,000,000 will be expended upon weapons which in the not distant future will become obsolete and absolutely disappear like mist before the morning sun. After some years they will have to be replaced, whereas, if we acquire the islands——

Mr. REYNOLDS. When I first suggested that we acquire them they could have been obtained legally without difficulty, because then France was managing her own affairs.

Mr. LUNDEEN. That is very true, and if we had acquired the islands we would have something definite and positive and everlasting in the way of national defense, whereas military weapons pass with time and become obsolete.

The Senator is of the majority party, and I am supporting his resolutions, for, if we are to have anything done about this matter, it must come through the leadership of the majority party; it must come from the distinguished leader of the majority, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]; it must come from the Senator from North Carolina. We are pleading with the majority party and asking them to kindly give this matter their attention before it is too late.

Now, when such large sums are being appropriated, it is well to remember, as the Senator has well stated, that the islands could have been acquired without any payment whatever.

I advocated some time ago that we should acquire the Danish islands. I heard something about jibes a while ago. Well, I was jibed when I made that suggestion. My suggestion was smiled at; it was intimated that it was not made seriously. Today it is realized on all sides that the United States needs the Danish islands and possessions in the Western Hemisphere. We need the Danish, Dutch, British, and French possessions. There are important Danish possessions, and also other possessions, not to mention Dutch Guiana, French Guiana, and British Guiana. The United States should have all of these under its Government and its flag.

Mr. REYNOLDS. As a matter of fact, likewise we ought to be possessed of Curacao, which is an important island in the Caribbean Sea, located between Trinidad and the Panama Canal.

I must confess that I am very much interested in our acquiring these possessions in the North Atlantic, for we must have these outposts, and, as a matter of fact, while Martinique and other islands are now in the possession of France, France is under the control of Germany, which is a potential enemy of this country.

While speaking of islands and resolutions, about 2 years ago I introduced a resolution in the Senate, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and sent to the State Department, authorizing this Government to ascertain the legal status of Wrangell Island. Of course, only about one person in a million ever heard of Wrangell Island, but Wrangell Island is going to be one of the most important islands in the world. I see before me our distinguished friend, the leader of the minority [Mr. MCNARY], who has been recently selected as one of the standard bearers of the Republican Party. I know that he is thoroughly familiar with world affairs; he knows particularly his section of the country, and I observe now that he is very much interested. I want our Government to ascertain to whom Wrangell Island belongs, because, within a few years, certainly within a quarter of a century, Wrangell Island will be one of the most important outposts in all the world. The first American flag was placed on Wrangell Island about 1860 by an officer of the Jeanette or New York Herald expedition, which was lost in the Arctic. Wrangell Island is about the size of Jamaica. An airplane flying from the west coast direct to Manila in the Philippine Islands would go straight across Wrangell Island. It is only a few miles from northern Siberia and only a few miles from the mainland of northern Alaska, directly on a line from Point Barrow. I could not even get the United States Government to ascertain to whom that island belongs. It is now occupied by a dozen "chucksees" or Siberian Eskimos, and about 15 Soviet soldiers. They know the value of it, and are now establishing fortifications there. I had a letter about it the other day. I referred the letter to the Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Louis Johnson. I cannot explain why our Government, when we are spending $17,000,000,000 on national defense, does not interest itself in ascertaining the legal status of Wrangell Island, for if we should ever get into trouble with Russia that would be one of the most important spots we could possibly be in possession of. I cannot understand why we do not immediately endeavor to acquire the British and French possessions in the Caribbean and in the North Atlantic. They are of no use to the British and French, but we need them.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President——

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am very happy to yield to my friend from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Of course, the able Senator from North Carolina is absolutely right about the islands. I think there is nothing more important before the country today than the very question we have been discussing. Perhaps there may be a little impatience about consuming any time on the subject; but this is an important subject, and why should we always have hindsight about these things? Why not have a little foresight and a little vision on these matters?

I wonder if the able Senator from North Carolina will not agree with me that we should possess ourselves of all of these vital island bases on both coasts, not only on the Atlantic but on the Pacific—all island bases that in any way threaten the lifeline or defenses of America; not only the islands belonging to one nation, say the Danish, but also the Dutch, the French, and the British?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in reference to the Pacific, as the Senator well knows, because I have had the opportunity from time to time of discussing these matters of national interest, we should acquire the islands south of the Equator belonging to Ecuador. I have understood that negotiations have been had by the German Government with the officials at Quito, the capital of Ecuador, in regard to their acquisition. In addition to that, it is just as important for the protection of the Pacific entrance to the Panama Canal that we acquire Goose Island and Cocos Island, both of them, I believe, belonging to Costa Rica. By the way, in pursuance of the matter of protection in that end of the world, Senators know we have experienced a great deal of trouble in making settlement with Mexico in regard to the millions of dollars that we allege they owe us for confiscated oil lands and farm lands and all that sort of thing.

I have suggested from time to time that we endeavor to settle those differences by way of entering into negotiations with Mexico with a view to acquiring Lower California, which is known as the Mexican Peninsula of California, because if the Senator has ever been in those waters he knows and has observed that there are really deep waters between the eastern part of the Mexican peninsula and the western shores of the mainland of Mexico, sufficient to secrete or conceal a fleet there; and the contour of the land is such, even at the point of the peninsula, that without difficulty great air bases could be established there; and that is very important.

But here is another thing that is entirely encouraging: For a number of years, since my visit to the Aleutian Islands, I have endeavored to impress upon the American people the fact that we should establish more bases in the Arctic, and in Alaskan waters, and in the Bering Sea. This spring an appropriation of $12,300,000 was made for additional naval fortifications at Unalaska, and it was stricken out by some Appropriations Committee; but when everybody became excited about the present war that appropriation was put back, and several million dollars, according to my recollection, were added to it.

I have consistently advocated that we fortify the Aleutian Islands, because they extend as an arm into the Pacific toward Japan for more than 1,200 miles, and the most western one of that group is the island of Attu. Attu is only about an hour and a half from Japanese territory, and from Attu across into the Mukden territory is only about a couple of hours. But I noticed in the press the other day that General Arnold or somebody connected with the Navy is going to make a flying trip up into Alaska to give more attention to those fortifications, which long ago should have been attended to. I assume that the reason he is now making this trip by air is that he has learned—at least, I observed through the press—that the Russians are fortifying the Little Diomede Island. They are fortifying Wrangell Island, which belongs to us. They are fortifying other islands in that section, and they are fortifying along the Siberian coast, which is not far withdrawn from Ouellen.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I will say to the Senator that I began my service on the Committee on Territories in 1916, and am somewhat familiar with the Alaskan scene. Of course, the Fairbanks air field should have been built a long time ago, and the Kodiak defenses and other defenses up there, and the Sitka base for seaplanes should have been completed a long time ago. We were up there in 1937, and I found a base that could accommodate only six or eight seaplanes, whereas it could easily, with a very small expenditure, accommodate 100 seaplanes. I will say to the able Senator that I have introduced resolutions covering all of the islands on the west coast.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Cocos, and Goose, and those of Ecuador?

Mr. LUNDEEN. All of the islands within a radius, I think, of 1,800 miles of the Panama Canal; to acquire them by negotiation and purchase from the Latin nations.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is splendid.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Before we enter into this madness of appropriations which approach $20,000,000,000, and before we enter into more hysteria, let us get down to brass tacks and acquire some real land by negotiation and by purchase and by credits on debts due us, and put the American flag over that land, and have something to show for this great expenditure.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And establish bases there, so that if ever we are attacked not a single drop of American blood will be spilled upon our soil.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator is correct; and I appreciate that he has brought so ably to the attention of the American public and the Senate this very important question.

SIX MEN AND WAR

"This is my war!" proudly exclaimed Isvolski, Russian Ambassador to Paris in 1914. "This is my war!" might well be the boast of Franklin D. Roosevelt when he surveys the catastrophe that is engulfing civilization in Europe today. Europeans have frankly stated what Americans have long suspected, that England and France would have settled their differences with Hitler over the conference table instead of seeking the bloody arbitrament of war, had they not counted upon promises, open and implied, from Mr. Roosevelt and his ambassadors. Poland would not have rejected the reasonable solution proposed time and again by the Fuehrer if England had not encouraged Warsaw with her notorious "blank check," which bounced back as did her I O U to Uncle Sam, worthless and dishonored. The promises of London and Paris were convincing to Warsaw because Mr. Bullitt's soft whispers hinted of a "gentlemen's agreement" between Mr. Roosevelt and the Allies, pledging the United States to come to the aid of England and France.

DOCUMENTS IN THE POLISH ARCHIVES

When the Germans invaded Warsaw they found various documents in the Polish archives. Among these were some purporting to recount conversations between a number of Polish and American diplomats. Most prominent among the latter were William C. Bullitt, our Ambassador to France; and Joseph P. Kennedy, our Ambassador to Great Britain.

I hold in my hand photostatic copies of the documents which the Germans claim to have found in Warsaw. I do not know whether or not these documents are genuine. I hope they are forgeries, but I am afraid they are not. I am afraid they are genuine, both because of the evidence contained in the papers themselves and because of innumerable speeches and other utterances by the President and other high officials of our Government which inevitably arouse the suspicion that they are encouraging secret commitments to the Allies.

Mr. President, the reason I bring up this subject today is because I favor an investigation into this whole matter of diplomatic commitments.

THE GERMAN WHITE PAPER

I have here an American edition of these papers, bearing the imprint of Howell, Soskin & Co., New York, which reproduces under the title "The German White Paper," the full text of the Polish documents and the report on American Ambassador Bullitt's war attitude. In his foreword to this edition, C. Hartley Grattan points out that the White Books, Black Books, Blue Books, etc., published by the various belligerents are colored solely by the interests of the nations involved.

If—

Remarks Mr. Grattan, himself a distinguished historical critic—

by any chance a belligerent does take up a line desirable for the American people as well, that is not because of any solicitude for us. It is because the policy which we think is desirable happens to be one which also serves the belligerent's purpose.

"What Americans have to get straight is what policy will best serve their own interests. This cannot be done if flighty and emotional individuals guide public opinion. They are too apt to decide that it is more important that our policy help or hinder the policies of other nations than that it serves our own interests. We cannot, it should be clear, conclude that American policy is wrong because it happens to fit in with what Germany would like to have us do; nor that it is right because it happens to serve the interests of Britain and France. To argue in that fashion is to use criteria which are irrelevant to the issue. What we have to decide is what line best serves American interests and stick to it.

THE BRITISH AND FRENCH GUARANTEE TO POLAND

"The documents were released in Berlin and presented by the German Government as those found by Germans in the Polish archives after the Poles had fled. They are a war-booty of Germany and were made known to the world without the wishes or desires of the senders or addressees. They were interpreted by German commentators as evidence of the fact that certain American ambassadors accidentally may have involved American diplomacy in a way that might have encouraged the British-French guaranty to Poland. Such encouragement of the British-French policy was certainly out of line with the expressed American policy of nonintervention, and the Germans have tied the disturbing fact of the diplomatists' apparent support of American participation on the Franco-British side to the familiar argument: The ambassadors encouraged the policy of 'encircling' Germany and, in their view, if 'encirclement' led to war, the United States would, in the end, support the Allies with its fighting forces.

DIPLOMATIC DENIALS

Both President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull have called into question the authenticity of these documents. Unfortunately similar diplomatic denials in the past have not always been reliable. A diplomatic denial is too often merely a circumlocution for a shorter and uglier word.

The majority of experts who have examined these documents are inclined to believe in their authenticity and hold that any alterations which may have been made are not of a sort to change the general character and meaning embodied in the statements.

Under the date of August 8, 1938, appears a letter from department 2 of Polish General Staff to the Polish Foreign Minister in Warsaw. The document contains the following statement made to the writer by Commander Gade, American Naval Attaché:

ONE THOUSAND AIRPLANES ARE TO BE SENT

We are completely on the side of democracy so far as ideas are concerned. At present the possibilities for speedy aid to Great Britain and France are being studied in America. One must conclude that help shall not be sent as in the World War, only after 1 year when the first American soldiers intervened actively, but in the course of 7 to 10 days. As soon as the war begins 1,000 airplanes are to be sent.

Most vocal and active of all in urging European States to take a strong attitude toward the dictatorships and in giving assurance of American aid to Britain and France has been Ambassador Bullitt. In a letter of November 21, 1938, the Polish Ambassador to the United States, Count Jerzy Potocki, tells the Polish foreign minister in Warsaw of the importance and influence of Mr. Bullitt:

THE ENTIRE SCALE OF VERY COMPLICATED EUROPEAN PROBLEMS

Since Bullitt regularly informs Roosevelt about the international situation in Europe, and particularly about Russia, great attention is given his reports by Roosevelt and the State Department. Bullitt speaks vividly and interestingly. Nonetheless, his reaction to events in Europe resembled the view of a journalist more than that of a politician, for in his conversation he alluded to the entire scale of very complicated European problems. From them he draws very negative conclusions.

Further on in the same letter, the Polish Ambassador calls attention to Mr. Bullitt's hatred of Germany and Hitler and his assurance that the United States would certainly come into war on the side of Britain and France if they took up arms against Hitler:

MR. BULLITT'S HATRED OF HITLER AND GERMANY

About Germany and Chancelor Hitler he spoke vehemently and with great hatred. He said that only energy at the end of the war would put an end to a future great great German expansionism. To my question asking how he visualized this future war, he replied that above all the United States, France, and England must rearm tremendously in order to be in a position to cope with German power. Only then, when the moment is ripe, declared Bullitt further, will one be ready for the final decision. * * *

In reply to my question whether the United States would take part in such war, he said, "Undoubtedly yes, but only after Great Britain and France had made the first move."

I think these matters should be investigated. Perhaps these papers are spurious. Perhaps they have been manufactured by the German Government. But let us look into it.

When papers like these are given to the world, and newspaper correspondents are called in to examine them and we are all asked to examine them, they may still be false, but it is about time we looked into the matter.

I believe our foreign relations should be given close attention now. Great appropriations for war may be necessary but our foreign relations may be equally important.

Feeling in United States is so tense against nazi-ism and Hitlerism, he said, that there is today a psychosis among Americans similar to that before America's declaration of war on Germany in 1917.

PEACE HANGING ONLY BY A THREAD

This propaganda, this war psychosis is being artificially created. The American people are told that peace in Europe is hanging only by a thread and that war is inevitable. At the same time the American people are unequivocally told that in case of a world war, America also must take an active part in order to defend the slogans of liberty and democracy in the world.

President Roosevelt was the first one to express hatred against fascism. In doing so he was serving a double purpose; first he wanted to divert the attention of the American people from difficult and intricate domestic problems, especially from the problem of the struggle between capital and labor. Second, by creating a war psychosis and by spreading rumors concerning dangers threatening Europe, he wanted to induce the American people to accept an enormous armament program which far exceeds United States defense requirements.

Just before Mr. Bullitt left Washington to return to Paris, he had a half-hour conference with Ambassador Potocki, which the latter summarizes as follows:

A WHOLE TRUNK FULL OF INSTRUCTIONS

The day before yesterday, I had a longer discussion with Ambassador Bullitt in the Embassy where he called on me. Bullitt leaves on the 21st of this month for Paris, from where he has been absent for almost 3 months. He is sailing with a whole "trunk" full of instructions, conversations, directions from President Roosevelt, the State Department, and Senators who belong to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. In talking with Bullitt I had the impression that he had received from President Roosevelt a very detailed definition of the attitude taken by the United States towards the present European crisis. He will present this material at the Quai d'Orsay and will make use of it in discussions with European statesmen. The contents of these directions, as Bullitt explained them to me in the course of a conversation, lasting half an hour, were:

1. The vitalizing foreign policy, under the leadership of President Roosevelt, severely and unambiguously condemns totalitarian countries.

2. The United States preparation for war on sea, land, and air which will be carried out at an accelerated speed and will consume the colossal sum of $1,250,000,000.

3. It is the decided opinion of the President that France and Britain must put an end to any sort of compromise with the totalitarian countries. They must not let themselves in for any discussions aiming at any kind of territorial changes.

4. They have the moral assurance that the United States will leave the policy of isolation and be prepared to intervene actively on the side of Britain and France in case of war. America is ready to place its whole wealth of money and raw materials at their disposal.

Shortly after Mr. Bullitt's return to Paris, the Polish Ambassador to Paris, Mr. Jules Lukasiewicz, sent the following communication to the Polish Foreign Minister in Warsaw:

A SURVEY OF WASHINGTON'S POLICY

A week ago, the Ambassador of the United States, W. Bullitt, returned to Paris after having spent 3 months' holiday in America. Meanwhile, I had two conversations with him which enable me to inform Monsieur Minister on his views regarding the European situation and to give a survey of Washington's policy.

1. A foreign policy of the United States which endeavors to take part directly in the development of affairs in Europe does not exist. Such a foreign policy, moreover, would not be possible, as it would not be endorsed by public opinion which has not changed its isolationist attitude in this respect. On the other hand, there is an extremely increased interest on the part of the American people in the European situation. Compared with this, even domestic events move into the background and lose the attention which they formerly enjoyed.

The international situation is regarded by official quarters as extremely serious and being in danger of armed conflict. Competent quarters are of the opinion that if war should break out between Britain and France on the one hand and Germany and Italy on the other, and Britain and France should be defeated, the Germans would become dangerous to the realistic interests of the United States on the American continent. For this reason, one can foresee right from the beginning the participation of the United States in the war on the side of France and Britain, naturally after some time had elapsed after the beginning of the war. Ambassador Bullitt expressed this as follows:

WE SHALL END IT

"Should war break out we shall certainly not take part in it at the beginning, but we shall end it."

In the opinion of Ambassador Bullitt, the above-mentioned attitude of competent Washington circles lacks all ideological elements, and results entirely from the necessity to defend the realistic interests of the United States, which would be seriously and directly menaced both from the Pacific as well as from the Atlantic Oceans, in case of a Franco-British defeat. Ambassador Bullitt states that the rumor according to which Roosevelt allegedly said that United States' frontier was the Rhine was false. On the other hand, he expressed the conviction that the President certainly said that he sold airplanes to France because the French army was the first line of defense of the United States. For this quite coincides with his views.

HOSTILITIES TOWARD GERMANY—FRIENDSHIP WITH BRITAIN

From these documents we learn that not only did Mr. Bullitt give the Polish authorities assurance of America's hostility toward Germany, of our friendship with Britain and France, and of the probability that we would come into the war on their side, but he even appears to have urged Britain to back up Poland in opposing Germany. This is of great importance, because such action by Britain was a chief cause of the outbreak of the second world war. In a letter of March 29, 1939, Ambassador Lukasiewicz, wrote to his Foreign Minister in Warsaw that Mr. Bullitt had communicated with Ambassador Kennedy in London, urging him to get in contact with Prime Minister Chamberlain and to request the latter to guarantee British support of Poland:

BULLITT MAY RENDER US DECIDED SERVICE

Ambassador Bullitt declared himself completely in accord with my point of view. The following day, the 25th, he informed me that he had adopted my opinions, and, making use of his privileges, had instructed the American Ambassador in London, Kennedy, to call today, Saturday, at the residence of Prime Minister Chamberlain, and to repeat everything to him, emphasizing, categorically, the responsibility of the English Government. Saturday, the 26th, Ambassador Bullitt received in my presence a telephone call from Ambassador Kennedy regarding the conversation held with Chamberlain.

Concerning this I have already informed you, Mr. Minister, in the telegram which I sent immediately after my visit to Ambassador Bullitt. I believe that Ambassador Bullitt will certainly exaggerate, somewhat, the importance of statements made by his colleague regarding the English Government, but I consider it my duty, Mr. Minister, to inform you of all the aforesaid because I considered that collaboration with Ambassador Bullitt in times so difficult and so complicated may render us decided service.

ACTIVELY MEDDLING IN POLISH-BRITISH RELATIONS

In a letter of March 29, 1939, Count Edward Raczynski, the Polish Ambassador in London, wrote to the Polish Foreign Minister in Warsaw of his conversations with Ambassador Kennedy, indicating that the latter was actively meddling in Polish-British relations. It seems that Mr. Kennedy made the point that Poland must be forceful and warlike in its attitude toward Germany, or else the conciliatory element in the British Government might be unwilling to give any guarantee to Poland. He also gave the impression that the question of American aid to Britain would be likely to depend upon the degree of zeal shown by Britain in guaranteeing and protecting Poland:

I asked Mr. Kennedy point-blank about the conference which he is supposed to have had recently with Mr. Chamberlain concerning Poland. Kennedy was surprised and declared categorically that a conversation of such special significance never took place. At the same time, and thereby contradicting his own assertion to a certain extent, Kennedy expressed displeasure and surprise that his colleagues in Paris and Warsaw "who are not, as himself, in a position to get a clear picture of conditions in England," should talk so openly about this conversation. As I saw that I would not attain very much in this way I turned the conversation to the present situation and begged the Ambassador to judge Britain's willingness for armed action. I have already reported to you, Mr. Minister, by telegram on this part of the conversation. Kennedy—who intimated that his opinion was based on a series of talks with local, competent quarters—declared he was convinced that should Poland decide to resist Germany by arms, especially with regard to Danzig, it would draw England in its wake. That would not be, as Kennedy emphasized, a result of greater cordiality than shown by Britain toward us in the past, but merely a result from political necessity. Should Poland, on the other hand, be undecided, then conciliatory elements in the government would use that, as the Ambassador said, to induce Britain to renounce binding itself to us. Mr. Kennedy is of the opinion that in local governments doubts continue to exist whether Poland is irrevocably determined to resist with regard to Danzig. In view of the present conditions which are changing with lightning speed, assurances of this kind would necessarily have been repeated frequently.

I thereupon touched on the Russian question. Mr. Kennedy was pretty reticent and obviously did not want to be drawn into discussion on British procedure towards Moscow (and also on difficulties which this procedure might encounter). He confined himself to the characteristic utterance that the British Government attached more importance to its cooperation with Poland than with Russia. That much I heard from Mr. Kennedy himself. On the other hand, there are rumors circulating among journalists here to the effect that the Ambassador actually did talk with the premier in recent days about eastern Europe. On this occasion, it is asserted that he emphasized that America's sympathies for England in case of a conflict would depend to a great extent upon the determination with which England would take care of European states threatened by Germany.

That Kennedy remained active in promoting British support of Poland is evident from a note by the Polish Commercial Counselor, Jan Wszelaki, regarding an interview which he had with Mr. Kennedy on June 16, 1939. Mr. Kennedy had been urging the British to make a cash loan to Poland. This they did shortly afterward, thus helping Poland to prepare for war. Mr. Kennedy went on to tell the counselor of the great influence his eldest son had with President Roosevelt and how his sons were planning to return to this country and give lectures which would influence American opinion:

KENNEDY URGING BRITISH LOANS TO POLAND

In conclusion the Ambassador told me that his two sons, who, of late, had toured the whole of Europe and who were able to see and learn much, intended, after their return to the United States, to give lectures on the situation in Europe and individual states at Harvard University. The Ambassador attached great importance to these lectures as an element for helping to shape American opinion.

"You do not believe," said the Ambassador, "to what extent my eldest boy, who was recently in Poland, has the ear of the President. I may say that the President believes him more than me. Perhaps for the reason that Joe presents the case with such conviction and such enthusiasm."

I am to see the Ambassador again next week, when I shall meet his son.

WE WOULD FIGHT BY THE SIDE OF FRANCE AND BRITAIN

We may now summarize some of the salient points brought out in these amazing documents. Polish Army officials were told of American sympathy for Poland, of our hostility to Germany, and of the probability that we would fight by the side of France and Britain.

The same point of view and the same assurances were expressed at length by Ambassador Bullitt to the Polish Ambassadors at Washington and Paris. To the latter he also made representations to the effect that he was urging Britain to guarantee Poland. The Polish Ambassador was also given assurance that the United States would aid Britain and France if they went to war to protect Poland.

Ambassador Kennedy in London urged Britain to guarantee Poland and to lend money to Poland to help the latter arm, and he told the Polish Ambassador that Poland should be strong, bellicose, and inflexible if she wished to assure British aid. He gave the impression that the more zealous Britain was in protecting Poland the greater the certainty of American aid.

BRITAIN IMPERILED HER SAFETY BY GUARANTEEING POLAND

All this surely helped on the second world war. Britain imperiled her safety by guaranteeing Poland. Poland was recalcitrant and unwilling to accept the reasonable German demands of March 1939. Thus any peaceful solution of the problem of Danzig and the Corridor was made impossible. In turn, Britain and France went to war more readily and more confidently because they had assurance of speedy American aid.

The second world war came last September, and the Roosevelt administration has moved as rapidly as it dared to aid Britain and France. It secured the repeal of the embargo and established a system of war trade which gave every advantage to the Allies. We are now giving them all aid short of war. There is grave danger that we will enter the war unless Germany wins before the Roosevelt administration can put the country into the war. Certainly, the friends of peace will need to be extremely energetic if they are to be able to avert this calamity.

AMERICAN WHITE PAPERS

The United States has as yet not issued any white book, green book, or blue book. But Joseph Alsop and Robert Kintner have sponsored the so-called American White Papers. This book is the best summary to date of the Roosevelt administration. It reprints entries in the diary of Mr. Berle, Assistant Secretary of State, and its purpose is to reveal the secrets closest to the President's heart. Neither the President nor Mr. Berle has repudiated the authors.

The book was a trial balloon to test public opinion. Every one of its predictions has come true. Every act of Mr. Roosevelt confirms the view of the authors that the President is determined to drag our country into Europe's war. Half a dozen men, in defiance of the majority of Congress and of the people, may send our sons to be slain in a war to defend, not the history inspired by George Washington, nor the sacred soil of our country, but His Majesty King George, late a guest in the White House. These six men are President Roosevelt, and Secretary Hull, Under Secretaries of State Welles and Berle, and Ambassadors Bullitt and Kennedy.

DANGEROUSLY LIKELY TO LEAD US INTO WAR

Alsop and Kintner show clearly that the President and Messrs. Hull, Welles, and Berle determine our foreign policy with slight regard for either public opinion or the constitutional rights of the Congress of the United States. Despite the fact that both the polls of public opinion and the votes in Congress on matters of foreign policy indicate that the people and their representatives wish to keep this country out of war, the administration is developing a foreign policy which, if the lessons of the past can teach us anything, is dangerously likely to lead us to war.

This policy may be stated as follows: If Great Britain and France are in danger of being defeated by the autocracies, we will at once give them every possible aid short of sending troops to Europe. But we should recognize that this is just what Mr. Wilson envisaged, even after he delivered his war message to Congress. In April 1917 Mr. Wilson said he was opposed to the idea of sending American soldiers to Europe. He thought that we would aid the Allies merely by loans and by sending our Navy to help suppress the German submarine menace. But it was not long before we passed the draft law, took millions of young men into the service, and shipped most of them to France to fight in the trenches.

THE ROAD TO WAR

The road to war under Woodrow Wilson is painfully clear. First, we said that we would not even extend credit to Britain and France. Then, in the autumn of 1914 we extended bank credit to them. A year later, we allowed our bankers to sell Allied bonds in the American market. A year and a half after that, we declared war in their behalf and made them great loans from the American Treasury. In a few months, we were drafting millions of men to fight by the side of British and French soldiers, and it was not long before Mr. Wilson was declaring that the American policy was "force, force to the uttermost, force without stint or limit, the righteous and triumphant force that shall make right the law of the world."

This is where "methods short of war" led us a quarter of a century ago. Do we want to be led into a similar calamity once more under cover of innocent-looking phrases? Alsop and Kintner make it clear that the administration has been held back from taking more rapid and drastic steps in favor of the Allies only because it knows that public opinion is so opposed to our involvement that a dangerous reaction might set in. But these authors also frankly state that the administration proposes to make use of every new trend in European affairs as a means of "dragging" the country behind their policies and bringing us closer to war.

DANGEROUS METHODS SHORT OF WAR

The invasion of Holland and Belgium and the victory over France will provide them with more powerful aid in this campaign than anything which has happened since the Chicago speech of the fall of 1937. Therefore, the events of the last few weeks impose a greater obligation than ever upon American friends of peace to be alert and courageous. There is grave danger that the administration may take advantage of some outburst of public indignation in this country to throw us into war before election day.

Since Alsop and Kintner obviously seek to develop sympathy for the partisan pro-Ally foreign policy of the Roosevelt administration, interesting questions arise as to how this compilation came about and was prepared.

One would get the impression that at times the authors were in very close conference. Indeed, the publication opens with an account of the scene on the morning of September 1, 1939, which could be authentic only if told by an eyewitness who was also listening in on the Presidential phone. Frequently, Alsop and Kintner assume to paraphrase and interpret President Roosevelt's most important opinions on foreign relations. How could they do this without fear of contradiction, unless the President had seen and approved their work? In his press conferences the President has frequently warned against the attempts of newspapermen to formulate his opinions or to speak for him. He has not hesitated to contradict newspapermen when they have tried to do so. It is significant that there has been no official repudiation of the pro-Ally interpretation of the foreign policy of the Roosevelt administration, as set forth in the American White Paper. Even more evidence exists that the authors were made a party to the mental processes of Assistant Secretary Berle. One would like to know how the authors secured free access to the personal diary of Mr. Berle.

KEEP THE UNITED STATES ALOOF FROM EUROPEAN SAVAGERY AND BLOODSHED

Those who wish to keep the United States aloof from the European savagery and bloodshed must be on the alert not only against the partisan diplomacy of the Roosevelt administration and its diplomats, and the secret agents of all belligerents, but also with respect to American organizations which mask under the most benign "front" sinister propaganda designed to swing American opinion into war on the side of the Allies.

Most dangerous and misleading of all these are the various movements designed to make us feel that Britain and France are primarily devoted to creating some form of world state which will provide for international organization and put an end to all war. This war is pictured as a struggle of the world-minded against the apostles of revolution and anarchy.

Just as in the first World War, so now we find a remarkable popularity of plans for European federation. They remind us of the League To Enforce Peace, suggested during the first World War by Hamilton Holt, William Howard Taft, and others, and eagerly snapped up by British propagandists.

THE "UNION NOW" TREASON

Far and away the most popular and influential plan for world federation which has been set forth recently is that embodied in Clarence K. Streit's stimulating book Union Now. Mr. Streit has summarized his views in an article recently published in the Living Age.

The weaknesses in Mr. Streit's proposal have been revealed in a trenchant pamphlet by Rosika Schwimmer, entitled "Union Now for Peace or War?" The danger that this well-meant proposal may be exploited by France and Britain to mislead Americans was emphasized in a skeptical article by C. Hartley Grattan, The Struggle for Peace, in the February 1940 issue of Harper's magazine.

The desirability of accepting what is good in this program, without at the same time becoming a sucker for allied propaganda, was urged by Mr. Alfred M. Bingham in a series of articles in Common Sense. Mr. Bingham has expanded his views in a book on The United States of Europe.

There are those who advocate the necessity of replacing the international anarchy which led to both the first and the second World Wars by some form of world-wide political organization. We need to be on our guard against being hoodwinked by hypocrites who obscure behind this noble ideal their own selfish determination to do exactly the opposite. They mean to organize for world power through world war.

The first World War should furnish us with ample warning. The British Government propagandists eagerly picked up the League To Enforce Peace idea, suggested by a group of strongly pro-Ally Americans, who looked upon Germany as a wild beast that must be chained up.

WARS TO END WARS

Under the guise of a proposed League of Nations, British propagandists used this idea as a means of ensnaring gullible Americans. Among those who fell for it were men as eminent as Woodrow Wilson and Colonel House. Indeed, Mr. Wilson merged and rationalized his many reasons for wishing to enter the war in the argument that a lasting peace must be made and a League of Nations brought into being to prevent any future wars. By such means, the war became elevated into a holy war to end all wars.

In the end, it all proved a snare and a delusion. The Allies used the League of Nations to enforce a brutal treaty that was founded upon and dedicated to international chaos. In due time this brought on a second world war. The United States was even more illogical. After having squandered our men and money for the alleged purpose of creating a new world order, we promptly spurned the League of Nations as soon as victory was ours.

A SECOND VERSAILLES

We are in grave danger of repeating the same farce once more. Already Britain and France are using "Union now" as a blind to cover up their actual plans to give us a second Treaty of Versailles, worse than the first, which envisages the breaking up of Germany, the restoration of small nations in Central Europe, and the revival of international anarchy. This would bring more than Hitler and a third world war. Perhaps we ought now to exclude France in our mention of Allies, since that empire is now at war with Britain. When you say "Aid the Allies," I ask which ally? France or Great Britain? Of course, it was Great Britain all the time, but we camouflaged that empire and its ambitions of world power and dominion by talking volubly about "our dear Allies."

There are those who agree with H. G. Wells that some form of world-state is mandatory. But international organization can never grow directly out of war. Both logic and experience unite in emphasizing the fact that we should keep out of war and make ourselves strong, independent, feared, and respected. Rarely, if ever, have the gullible been influential or respected.

One of the major forces which is helping to lead many Americans away from a sane neutrality and something which is seized upon with particular delight by our warmongers are the absurd and fantastic scare stories which are being circulated relative to the alleged ambition of Hitler and the Nazis to conquer the world, including the United States.

FANTASTIC PROPAGANDA YARNS

During the first World War we were treated to fantastic yarns about the Kaiser and his associates by German renegades like Richard Grelling. Today, this generation of German renegades is dishing out the same crop of exaggerations and slanders.

Most notable here are the books of Dr. Herman Rauschning, who was once one of Adolph Hitler's buddies. In the first World War the German renegades like Grelling and Dr. Muehlon could write with better taste against the Kaiser than Rauschning now shows, for they were German radicals who had never had much use for the Hohenzollerns.

Dr. Rauschning goes them one better in another way, namely, in that he combines their criticism of the German Government with the propaganda of the foreign alarmists like Andre Cheredame, who, in 1914–18 spread the myth of a pan-German ambition to swallow up the world.

Dr. Rauschning's first and most popular book was the Revolution of Nihilism. Here, along with many keen and commendable comments on modern German history and the Nazi regime, he gave us a fantastic tale about the Nazi plot to conquer the world. He even suggested that Hitler and his henchmen would not hesitate to grab the hammer and sickle out of Stalin's hand, if this proved necessary. Nazi-ism would subdue the world in behalf of the rights of the proletariat.

NAZIS AND ECONOMIC DOMINION

The Nazis have wanted economic dominion rather than military conquest and they wish this mainly over Central Europe and the Balkans. This may indeed be alarming enough, but these important realities with which we must reckon are only obscured by such senseless persons. We are led away from the real facts which must be mastered and faced.

Fantastic alarmist literature is really a disservice to those who wish to understand Hitler. He is portrayed as storming the Antipodes, planning world subjugation.

Now Dr. Rauschning has published another book entitled "The Voice of Destruction," which is sharing the popularity of his earlier volume. It provides us with more curdling bedtime stories about Hitler's plot to swallow the world, to which is added an attempt to convict Hitler of morbid diabolism out of his own mouth. His picture is taken seriously by many.

American journalists in favor of American entry into the second world war are relying more than anything else upon frightening Americans into the conviction that if Hitler defeats Britain and France, he will immediately set about occupying Asia, Africa, and the New World. Indeed, this sort of propaganda in the United States has already developed just about as atrocious absurdities as existed after we had been in the first World War for months.

WAR IN EUROPE NO HOLY WAR

It is high time that we debunked the whole notion that what is going on in Europe is a holy war. This is the cornerstone of the whole propaganda of the warmongers. To discredit this myth I could do nothing better than to quote a column by Prof. Harry Elmer Barnes in the New York World-Telegram on March 29, 1940:

No objective scrutiny of the European scene can produce any evidence of a holy war, whether we examine the peoples or their leaders.

Nothing is more absurd than the popular story for babes which tells us that all the nice people are on one side and all the forces of evil are on the other.

The British and the French are now telling us that they are the only ones who love liberty. But it was only a generation back that we were being told that British and American liberty came from the German backwoods and French liberty from Britain and America.

Some maintain that one people is more cruel and brutal than another. They point to the long-since-exploded German atrocities during the World War and to Hitler's treatment of the Jews.

THE WORLD'S GREATEST ATROCITY

But they overlook that fact that far and away the greatest atrocity in all human history was the British blockade of Germany for months after November 1918, as a result of which over 800,000 German women, children, and old people were starved to death and millions were emaciated and stunted.

Had Hitler tortured and then killed every one of the half million Jews living in Germany in 1933 such a foul and detestable act would still have left him a piker compared to Britain's blockade of 1918–19.

It is high time for a little logic and realism in a matter which so closely touches the future well-being of every American. If we go on ballyhooing the holy war we will sooner or later find ourselves wallowing in blood and clanking chains.

The best possible refutation of our warmongers and holy-war idealists, who claim that we can only set the world right and bring a just peace by entering the present European carnage, is the following sentence from a letter written to the London Times on August 25, 1937, by Lord Lothian, the present British Ambassador to the United States:

NO DEMOCRACY, NOR LIBERTY, NOR PEACE OUT OF A WORLD WAR

The lesson of the last war is that you get neither democracy, nor liberty, nor peace out of a world war, however noble the ends for which it is fought.

These sentiments may be buttressed by a quotation from one of our leading warmongers of today, written at a time when she was less under the spell of holy zeal. In the Pictorial Review of December 1929 Dorothy Thompson made the sane observation that—

If I had children I would tell them just one thing about the last war, and I would tell it to them over and over again: No nation won it. Everyone lost it.

Woodrow Wilson was never neutral in the first World War. He was unable to keep us out of the European carnage, though he kept us out of war for campaign purposes. This should serve as an adequate warning with respect to the difficulty of keeping aloof from Europe's second World War now. It is hard enough when we really try to be neutral.

ADMINISTRATION HAS BEEN FLAGRANTLY UNNEUTRAL

At the present time, we find ourselves in special danger because the Roosevelt administration has been flagrantly unneutral ever since the early autumn of 1937. It has offered unprecedented affronts to the governments and heads of governments with whom we are legally at peace and theoretically on good terms. Moreover, the President has not limited his expressions to the conventional channels of diplomatic intercourse but has proclaimed them from the housetops, through the press, and the radio.

Not only has the President been unneutral in his own pronouncements, but he has permitted to go unrebuked and has implicitly approved a vigorously pro-Ally interpretation of his foreign policy in the so-called American White Paper by Alsop and Kintner.

ARE SECRET COMMITMENTS BEING MADE?

According to the Polish documents, we find our Ambassadors abroad exceeding their duties and rights, urging foreign powers to take aggressive action, and making secret commitments for the United States to support such aggression. Poland was urged to take a strong stand against Germany. Britain was then requested vigorously to back up Poland. Then, in turn, the support of the United States was promised to Britain if war came as a result of these promises.

The administration has made no effort to investigate the authenticity of these incriminating Polish documents and to rebuke and punish our Ambassadors if they are guilty of such serious indiscretions. There seems little doubt that these indiscretions, if real, exerted a powerful influence in bringing on the second World War.

HYSTERICAL CRIES THAT WE ARE IN DANGER OF INVASION

Today we find ourselves faced with hysterical cries that we are in danger of invasion by European states, presumably Germany and Russia. There is no substantial basis for such excitement and alarm. We are undertaking a frenzied and expensive defense program without sound policy or logical plan. It is all too likely to duplicate and repeat the preparedness hysteria of 1915–16, which was the prelude to our entry in the first World War. If we are not careful, our present defense mania will land us squarely in the second World War. That war may not wait for us. It moves with rapid tempo. It may not last long enough for us to get in. It seems we are trying our best to be provocative and offensive to some of the world's greatest nations. If this second World War lasts long enough, we may get in. But if the hour of decision comes, I will vote "no" against entry into that war.

To save us from this calamity we should investigate at once the sources and authority of the American "white paper." We should investigate our ambassadors abroad and find out if they are meddling dangerously in the affairs of other countries and making secret and disastrous commitments for this country. We should investigate the aims and goals of the defense program which is now being crammed down the neck of this country with unseemly haste and without either rhyme or reason.

SERVE AMERICA ONLY, AND NO ONE ELSE

Our defense should serve American purposes only. It should not be used as a screen for unneutral aid to the British Empire. No one, neither the Allies nor the axis, can assail us if we are guided solely by American interests. We must take into protective custody, with the cooperation of our sister republics, every strategic point in the Western Hemisphere. We must bar from this American Hemisphere all the nations of Europe. We shall then be unassailable, even if both the axis powers and the Allies should combine against us at the end of the present war or at any time in the future. "Europe for the Europeans"; "Asia for the Asiatics"; "America for the Americans." If we adhere to this slogan, the lamp of liberty will continue to burn brightly in the Western Hemisphere, no matter what happens in Europe or Asia. The lamp of liberty will shine on—the symbol of American civilization—a beacon of hope for all mankind.

AUTHORITY TO RECEIVE MESSAGES AND SIGN ENROLLED BILLS

On motion by Mr. BARKLEY, it was Ordered, by unanimous consent, That, during the adjournment of the Senate following today's session, the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to receive messages from the House of Representatives, and that the President of the Senate be authorized to sign bills and joint resolutions examined and found truly enrolled by the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 4119) to provide for the transfer of certain land in the De Soto National Forest to the Secretary of War for use for military purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6884) to encourage travel in the United States, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9877) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate and to put into effect charges for electrical energy generated at Boulder Dam, providing for the application of revenues from said project, authorizing the operation of the Boulder power plant by the United States directly or through agents, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 582) making an appropriation to enable the United States Maritime Commission to establish the marine and war-risk insurance fund.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting several nominations, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry Dental Corps Reserve officers for appointment in the Regular Army, under the provisions of law.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of several officers for appointment, by transfer, in the Regular Army.

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the nominations of several officers for promotion in the Coast Guard.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask that the nominations in the Army, which I have reported, be confirmed en bloc, and that the President be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Army reported from the Committee on Military Affairs today are confirmed en bloc, and the President will be notified of their confirmation.

ADMINISTRATOR OF CIVIL AERONAUTICS

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, from the Committee on Commerce I report favorably the nomination of Col. Donald H. Connolly to be Administrator of Civil Aeronautics in the Department of Commerce, and ask that the nomination be confirmed, and that the President be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Col. Donald H. Connolly to be Administrator of Civil Aeronautics in the Department of Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed, and the President will be notified.

NOTIFICATION TO PRESIDENT OF CONFIRMATION OF NOMINATIONS

On motion by Mr. BARKLEY, it was Ordered, That the President be at once advised of all confirmations this day made, and that all resolutions of confirmation of nominations now in the hands of the Secretary of the Senate be transmitted to the President.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY, JULY 22, 1940

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, under the terms of House Concurrent Resolution 86, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) Thursday, July 11, 1940, the Senate adjourned until Monday, July 22, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JULY 11, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RAYBURN.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we are most grateful that the head that once was crowned with thorns, an eternal diadem now adorns our Saviour's brow. We pray Thee to send forth laborers into the harvest, for it is very great. May they come from the east and from the west, and from the north and from the south; may they declare Thy glory among the peoples and Thy marvelous works among all nations. Heavenly Father, hear our prayer, for we are all debtors and stand in the compassion and breath of Thy condescending love. Keep us this day within Thy shadow, O Lord, for there is no life without its need; there is no heart without its pain; there is no hope without its cloud; and there is no prayer without its doubt. We devoutly pray for Thy rich blessing to rest upon every section of our broad land. O Spirit of God, graciously bless our beloved Speaker, who guides and presides over the deliberations of the Congress; mercifully be with every Member, as duties freighted with far-reaching responsibilities are upon all; let Thy fatherly goodness be extended to all officers and employees. O Lord God, preserve us all in good health and strength, peace and happiness, and at the appointed time bring us together again without the loss of one. In our dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of Public Resolution 86, Seventy-sixth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the United States University of Pennsylvania Bicentennial Commission the following Members of the House of Representatives: Mr. SACKS, Mr. SHERIDAN, Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey, and Mr. RUTHERFORD.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 9576. An act relating to the admission to St. Elizabeths Hospital of persons resident or domiciled in the Virgin Islands of the United States.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. GUFFEY, of Pennsylvania; Mr. DAVIS, of Pennsylvania; Mr. HUGHES, of Delaware; and Mr. BARBOUR, of New Jersey, as the members on the part of the Senate of the United States University of Pennsylvania Bicentennial Commission, pursuant to Public Resolution No. 86, Seventy-sixth Congress, approved June 20, 1940.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 10100. An act to establish the composition of the United States Navy, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 3008. An act to authorize the President of the United States to dispose of certain public vessels, and for other purposes; and

S. 4119. An act to provide for the transfer of certain land in the De Soto National Forest to the Secretary of War for use for military purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 6884) entitled "An act to encourage travel in the United States and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mrs. CARAWAY, Mr. BILBO, and Mr. VANDENBERG to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 527) entitled "An act for the relief of J. J. Greenleaf," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. BURKE, Mr. BROWN, and Mr. TOWNSEND to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 326) entitled "An act for the payment of awards and appraisals heretofore made in favor of citizens of the United States on claims presented under the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, United States and Mexico," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. CONNALLY, and Mr. JOHNSON of California to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

KATHERINE M. DRIER

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 3097) for the relief of Katherine M. Drier, as amended by the committee.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding the provisions of section 4 (c) of the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of the German special deposit account in the Treasury of the United States, to Katherine M. Drier, an American citizen, formerly resident in Germany, the sum of $160,000, together with interest thereon at the rate of 5 percent per annum from January 1, 1920, being the amount due said Katherine M. Drier pursuant to an agreement between the United States of America and the German Government under which all the claims of said Katherine M. Drier against the German Government were settled and adjusted: Provided, That payment of such sum of $160,000 and interest thereon as herein provided shall be made as follows:

(1) There shall be paid forthwith to the said Katherine M. Drier an amount which bears the same proportion to such sum and interest thereon as the amounts heretofore paid out of such special deposit account to claimants on whose behalf awards have been made by the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, bear to the total awards so made to such claimants; and

(2) Payment of the balance of such sum and interest thereon shall be prorated on the basis of the amount of the respective payments authorized by section 2 (b) of the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, as amended, and remaining unpaid.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 6, strike out the word "follows" and insert "if an additional award in the sum of $160,000 with interest at 5 percent from January 1, 1920, had been entered by the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, on behalf of Katherine M. Drier."

Page 2, strike out lines 11 to 22, inclusive.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand the claim, the money is from the German fund?

Mr. HART. Yes; it does not take a cent out of the United States Treasury, but out of the German special-deposit account.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MEXICAN CLAIMS BILL

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 326) for the payment of awards and appraisals heretofore made in favor of citizens of the United States claims presented under the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, United States and Mexico, insist on the House amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Mr. BLOOM, Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON, and Mr. FISH.

NAVY CONSTRUCTION BILL

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 10100) to establish the composition of the United States Navy, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 25, strike out "$50,000,000" and insert "$65,000,000."
Page 3, line 1, strike out all after "material" down to and including "establishments" in line 9, and insert "or munitions at either private or naval establishments, and $35,000,000 for the expansion of facilities for the production of armor at either private or naval establishments. The authority herein granted for essential equipment and facilities, and for the expansion of facilities, shall include the authority to acquire lands at such locations as the Secretary of the Navy with the approval of the President may deem best suited to the purpose, erect buildings, and acquire the necessary machinery and equipment."
Page 3, line 17, after "Patrol", insert "escort, and miscellaneous."
Page 4, line 7, after "boat", insert "(except ships' boats)."
Page 4, line 10, strike out "without the consent of the Congress" and insert "except as now provided by law."

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Georgia explain the amendments?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the first amendment raises the amount of $50,000,000 to $65,000,000, and that is for the purpose of building an additional gun factory similar to the one here in Washington city.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Has the site been selected?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No place has been designated, and it is contemplated to scatter the plant over the United States in different units, probably from Milwaukee to Chicago, to St. Louis, to Pittsburgh, to Ohio, and various industrial centers where the material and labor will be available.

The other amendment is for the purpose of increasing from $20,000,000 to $35,000,000 the amount that can be expended in the armor-plate factories in the country. There are three factories—at Midvale, Carnegie, and Bethlehem—that engage in armor production. A portion of this money will be lent to these companies, if necessary, to expand their maximum capacity. A portion of the money will be used to build an addition to the Government-owned plant in Charleston, W. Va.

The other amendment puts a limitation of $50,000,000 on the total amount that can be expended for patrol boats or torpedo boats. When the House passed the bill they fixed the amount at $25,000,000. I may say that the Budget only recommends $25,000,000 in accordance with the President's message of yesterday, but the maximum limit is fixed at $50,000,000.

These are the only three important amendments.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And it is not necessary to spend the $50,000,000?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No; and they only ask for $25,000,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject of pending legislation against Messrs. Pearson and Allen, authors of The Washington Merry-go-Round.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include an address I delivered under the auspices of the American Legion Post, No. 2, Indianola, Miss., July 4, 1940.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

Mr. WHELCHEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. WHELCHEL addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. BALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. BALL addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an excerpt of a letter that I received from a constituent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include an address delivered by Rev. John J. Carey, of Hartwell, Nebr.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include an address delivered by Roland L. McDonald, State Commandant, Massachusetts Department of Marine Corps League.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

UNITED STATES GRAIN STANDARDS ACT

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 7696) to amend the United States Grain Standards Act, to provide for the grading of soybeans, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 5, strike out "(a)."
Strike out lines 7 to 13, inclusive.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 7696, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the Saturday Evening Post.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include two short letters.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REFUGEE CHILDREN

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. SANDAGER addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SANDAGER], who has just addressed the House, has called attention officially of the House to a matter which we are all hearing about through letters from our constituents. There seems to be a unanimity of opinion among the American people that they would like to do something to help the English children to come over here during the war and escape the ravages of war and bombing in England. I am heartily in sympathy with any sound constructive proposal, but it is up to the Congress to act. I hope the Congress will take into consideration immediately a number of bills that have been introduced. Perhaps we cannot do away with the quota even for the duration of the war, but at least we can do away with the monthly quota and lump it all together, so that these unfortunate children can come here immediately, provided bonds are given for their upkeep and care while here, and it does not cost our taxpayers any further financial burdens. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to advise the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SANDAGER], as well as the House, that just a few moments ago, seeking some information for a constituent, I spoke to the Assistant Secretary of State, Hon. Breckenridge Long, who advised me that he had talked over the telephone to Ambassador Kennedy this morning on the very subject which the gentlemen discussed, and that up to this hour, according to the Ambassador, no child in England had been refused a visa to come to this country; further, if the children are entitled to come here under our quota system, then it is the fault of those in Great Britain in not applying to the proper American authorities for their visa and not the fault of American officials here or abroad that children are not being sent to this country in larger groups.

Mr. FISH. I am glad to have that information.

Mr. COCHRAN. Now let me say also you should take into consideration that there is a country on the north of us, part of Great Britain, that should take and care for some of the children. Why bring them all into the United States?

Everyone sympathizes with the unfortunate children, especially at a time when their country is being bombed by the enemy. We have a liberal quota system at this time and, as you know, our quota system starts with the fiscal year, which was July 1. Why talk about the necessity for legislation when the quota can be used now for the children? I assume some feel our sympathies will run away with our good judgment at this critical period and they probably see an opportunity for increasing the quotas. Do not overlook the fact that so far most of the refugees are English children. When the time comes that there will be accommodations for children of other countries, countries that have practically been taken over by Germany, you will find a very large demand upon the people of this country to care for additional children. Much as I feel for the unfortunate people, still I also cannot overlook the fact that we have in our own midst children, American children, undernourished and in need of proper homes and assistance. Our neighbor on our north, Canada, is not being bombed by Germany. Surely, if children of a former queen can find safety there, the children of others can likewise be assured they are safe within its borders.

I am unwilling to let anyone blame the Congress at this time for not passing legislation throwing the doors open to those who have suffered as a result of Germany's activities.

Undoubtedly the children from Great Britain will be looked upon as being more desirable than children from some other countries but this Nation is not going to be able to do for all others what you want done for the English children. There are hundreds of thousands of orphan children in Poland, Finland, Sweden, Norway, Holland, and other countries which some organization will want us to care for. True there are citizens here who are financially able to guarantee to this country the children will never become a public charge but we cannot escape the fact that when the war is over the parents of many will want to follow their children to this country. What then? Will you authorize their admittance even in the face of exhausted quotas?

Do not forget our unemployed situation. It still exists and even the tremendous sums being advanced for national defense will not absorb all the unemployed. The Federal Government is spending hundreds of millions of dollars along with the States in helping our own widows and orphans and unemployables. We can ill afford to add to the burdens of our people who are taxed to care for them.

The situation affecting the refugees at this moment, with new quotas available, I want to make plain does not warrant an attack upon Congress. Ambassador Kennedy, speaking through Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Long, tells us every child that comes within our law, as well as rules and regulations, that has applied for a visa has been recognized. With such the case why should any Member rise and criticize? It is not justified.

ANTAL OR ANTHONY OR TONY ZAICEK OR ZAICZEK

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 6056) for the relief of Antal or Anthony or Tony Zaicek or Zaiczek, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Line 9, strike out all after "warrant" down to and including "States" in line 11.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is this bill?

Mr. LESINSKI. This is an immigration bill covering a seaman who was here illegally for over 15 years. The House passed the bill but attached an amendment to the bill that the alien never can become a citizen of this country. The Senate concurred in the bill, but struck out that last line, with the wording that he could not become a citizen. They struck that line out.

Mr. RICH. Are we going to permit him to remain here?

Mr. LESINSKI. Oh, yes. The bill has passed the House already and it has passed the Senate.

Mr. RICH. Why does he have to have four or five names?

Mr. LESINSKI. Of course, I do not know why.

Mr. RICH. Now, let us get this straight. Where is he from and are we going to permit him to remain here, and why?

Mr. LESINSKI. He has been here over 15 years.

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LESINSKI. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. I think I can answer the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The man in question has been here and has lived a decent life for over 15 years. He came in illegally by jumping a ship. The House has passed the bill and it has been unanimously approved. It has passed the Senate, but the Senate struck out that one provision, and the motion is to accept the Senate amendment to the bill. That is all there is to it.

Mr. RICH. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Suppose anyone comes in here illegally and remains 15 years, are we, by passing this bill, going to sanction the fact that everyone who has been here 15 years and has lived a good life can still remain in America?

Mr. MASON. No; but we have already sanctioned it and already passed the bill and the Senate has already passed the bill. This is just accepting the Senate amendment.

Mr. RICH. Well, if we have any more coming here and staying for 15 years, if they want the protection of America and want to remain here, they should either become American citizens, or we ought to send them back where they came from, because we are going to get more people in this country than we can take care of. We are going to take care of these 9,000,000 Americans that are out of work first. [Applause.]

Mr. LESINSKI. In answer to the gentleman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] and I were at the White House yesterday, and we expect certain legislation covering all this type of citizens and hope the Congress will pass it.

Mr. RICH. They never let me go to the White House, but I will say this, that if the White House does not pass such legislation that will prohibit these people from coming into this country and the Congress does not do it, we are going to be in trouble pretty soon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman this one question: The gentleman is chairman of the Committee on Pensions?

Mr. LESINSKI. That is correct.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], who has just spoken, is a member of the Committee on Immigration?

Mr. LESINSKI. Yes; and I am also ranking member of that committee.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman is also a member of that committee?

Mr. LESINSKI. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Now, I would like to ask this question: This change that you make is a very important change and somebody in the House is responsible for having put that amendment in there?

Mr. LESINSKI. The gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] was responsible for it. I spoke to him about it yesterday.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Has the gentleman consulted with those who were instrumental in that and with the minority membership on the committee?

Mr. LESINSKI. I have done so. I talked to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] about it today.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That has been referred to the Committee on Immigration and that committee is satisfied?

Mr. MASON. Oh, yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] just came in the Chamber. I would like to know if he has been consulted. He is the author of that amendment.

Mr. MASON. Yes; he was consulted.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I personally have no objection to agreeing to the Senate amendment.

Mr. CHURCH. You were the author of the amendment in the House when the matter came up the other day?

Mr. COSTELLO. Yes. I believe I offered the amendment at that time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article by Lawrence Dennis.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a letter which I have written.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, Mr. FULMER was granted permission to revise and extend his own remarks.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL], a distinguished member of the Committee on the Judiciary, was unavoidably detained this week in his district and was unable to be here yesterday during the consideration of the Hatch bill. During our deliberations in regard to that bill in the committee he took the same position which was taken by the different signers of the minority views. Had he been here yesterday he would have voted as we did. It is a matter of genuine regret to us, to the House, and to him that he was unable to be here.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the legislative business for the day I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

REFUGEE CHILDREN

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, the question was brought up a while ago about bringing children to this country. I, too, am in sympathy with taking care of the children whether they come from England, France, Germany, Holland, Belgium, or any other country. I think that is only humanitarian. But I think we ought to be very, very careful what we do in our zeal to take care of children. During their stay here they may be orphaned. We want to see that we do not have to look after them or take care of them the rest of their days.

It seems to me that the legislation that might be proposed here to take care of these children for the time being should be so framed that in our zeal to take care of them we do not permit them to remain here for years and years and find ourselves unable to get them out. We are glad to take care of these children for the time being, but our responsibility should cease when peace prevails in Europe and we can send them back. We hope that peace will soon come to Europe and we hope that peace will prevail in this country now and forever.

Let us try to take care of everybody in the world, but let us look after American children, American workmen, American individuals first. We are Americans and we must take care of our own people, but we want to do what we can to help everybody. We must, however, look after our own first. [Applause.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, apropos the matter of bringing child refugees into this country, the Members of the House may be interested to know that the Secretary of State has contrived an arrangement with the Western Union Telegraph Co. which I learned in connection with a case of my own only yesterday, whereby a citizen of this country who seeks to bring over a child from a foreign country, whether a relative or otherwise, can go to a Western Union office in any town and there file a telegram which is addressed to the consul in the foreign country in which the child resides, requesting the granting of a visa to a child and then offering to show that they are able and willing to take care of such child or children, and I assume, put up the statutory bond which will be required. That is the expeditious way, I understand, in which the Immigration and Naturalization Service and the State Department are now seeking to handle the individual refugee problem.

Aside from that there is the problem of mass refugees in which it is proposed to bring them over by the shipload. I am informed by the Immigration and Naturalization Service that they are of the opinion that they can best be sent to Canada and then the large group decentralized and the children sent to this country in small groups or as individuals. But alluding for a moment to the proposition of the red tape with which such things seemingly are encrusted, if a citizen can bring a cousin or a nephew, or a child from a foreign country by merely going to the Western Union telegraph office and there filing a notarized telegram, that certainly is cutting straight through red tape.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. As I understand it, they can come over here within the quota.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is correct. The quota for England and Ireland is 65,000 plus 18,000, a total of 83,000; and there is a tremendous amount of the quota that has been unused up to this time.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. They could bring in, as I understand it, a maximum from Great Britain of 6,300 in 1 year.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PITTINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

REFUGEE CHILDREN

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I asked for this 1 minute to make a correction. When I interrogated the gentleman from Illinois I understood that the quota from Great Britain and the British Isles amounted to 65,000 a year.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Sixty-five thousand for England and 18,000 for Ireland.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. In my colloquy with the gentleman I said they could send over 10 percent a year. I meant not more than 6,300 per month. As they come in they will be charged against the quota.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is correct. Of course, they come in as immigrants and each child must have a visa.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION, TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY, FISCAL YEAR 1941

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 583, making an additional appropriation for the Tennessee Valley Authority for the fiscal year 1941 to provide facilities to expedite the national defense; that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole, that general debate on the resolution extend for 2 hours, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and myself.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this matter comes to the House with hearings 27 pages long which have just become available. I understand that I am to meet with the statement that this is a matter of national defense. A short time ago I heard Mr. Lilienthal say over the radio that the T. V. A. was ready for any emergency. If that is so, this legislation is unnecessary. The T. V. A. has had nearly a billion dollars to spend in the last 7 years and it ought to be pretty nearly ready for any emergency which was contemplated when they were organized, and they then knew they were an adjunct to the national defense.

I have an abiding conviction, from what I have been able to read of the testimony so far in the short time I have had, that there is involved in this proposal other matters than national defense and that, as was done here not so long ago in connection with the tax bill, everybody knows a portion of the money raised under that bill only is to be used for national defense, the rest to go for the ordinary purposes of the Treasury. And so in this instance this alleged national-defense measure is to be used as the vehicle to provide T. V. A. with necessary requirements for ordinary peacetime operations. It is my firm conviction that the T. V. A. with its customary cupidity is taking advantage of a situation to enlarge its own facilities and to hoodwink again the American Congress and the American people. While I dislike very much to interfere——

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEAN. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman observes, of course, that my request was merely to bring the matter up for consideration and for a vote in any way the Members of the House might see fit to vote, not to pass the bill by unanimous consent.

Mr. McLEAN. I understand that, but my point is that the unanimous consent should not be granted because the House has not had sufficient time to digest this measure, to read the testimony, or know anything about it so as to be able to vote intelligently.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman permit me to propound a unanimous-consent request to speak for 10 minutes in order to explain to the House what is involved in this before the gentleman makes his objection? I would like the gentleman to have the information, in fairness to him.

Mr. McLEAN. If I may reserve my right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] may proceed for 10 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the courtesy of the gentleman from New Jersey, and I know of course his very intense feeling toward the T. V. A. May I say that if this were, as my friend from New Jersey has just stated, a scheme of the T. V. A. to come in under the guise of a national defense need to secure additional development of the T. V. A. area, I would heartily join the gentleman in opposing it. I have supported the T. V. A. program, believing that having been started, it should be rounded out. I voted for the last T. V. A. dam appropriated for by Congress, stating, however, to the House and to my constituents that under ordinary circumstances I believed that the T. V. A. development should not be further extended, that if it went further it would certainly be in competition with private industry, and that I believed it should not go ahead.

Let us see what this proposal is. It is a matter that has been brought to our committee, under the solemn statement of men, whose udgment, whose patriotism, and whose motives cannot be questioned, as a matter vitally necessary to the national defense program. It is critically necessary that the work be started immediately. This calls for the building of a dam in Tennessee on the Holston River for additional water storage and electric generating capacity for the T. V. A., for the construction of a steam electric generating plant to stabilize the T. V. A. electric power production, for the installation of additional generating capacity in empty stalls at existing down-river projects to utilize the added flow contributed by the new storage project, and for new transmission facilities required because of the added generating capacity.

What is the necessity for this? We had before our committee Mr. Knudsen of the Advisory Commission of the Council on National Defense. Mr. Knudsen told us that he was not a power expert and would not attempt to speak for them, but that he was interested in carrying out the plane-production program and the production of the other equipment required for national defense. He told us of the need for aluminum with which to build planes and that to get this aluminum there must be additional aluminum facilities. I want to quote a part of Mr. Knudsen's testimony:

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Knudsen, we will be very glad to hear whatever you have to say to us.

Mr. KNUDSEN. I am not a power man; I am a manufacturer. My interest in this project is purely to see that we get aluminum enough or duralumin enough to build the planes with. I suppose you know the average plane takes about 5 tons of this stuff.

Mr. WOODRUM. Five tons of aluminum?

Mr. KNUDSEN. Yes; that is the average, and my interest here in this project is to get aluminum enough for the planes, and the average quantity per plane is about 5 tons, meaning both in the frame itself and in the parts of the motor that are made of aluminum, such as the crankcase, pistons, and cylinder head. And in this area where the T. V. A. is located, that is outlined by the General Staff as area E. We have areas A, B, C, D, and E which are satisfactory to the General Staff for plant location purposes, being away from the shore, and in this area E, besides aluminum plants, we have some other plants projected, the actual location of which I am unable to give you at this time, because the sites have not been picked; but they are in this area E. So that there will be a call for power beyond what will be required for aluminum.

We were told that there would be a shortage of aluminum for plane production purposes by July 1, 1942, of 60,000,000 pounds. Mr. Knudsen said it was the job of Mr. Stettinius to find the aluminum for his use for planes.

Mr. Stettinius said he had gone over the matter carefully, had canvassed it every way, and, in order to have this aluminum, it was necessary to build additional facilities; that they wanted to build these facilities in the neighborhood of an existing plant in the T. V. A. area; that in order to do that they did not have the electric power to run it, nor could they get it from privately operated plants. Here is a pertinent part of what Mr. Stettinius said:

I have been over this matter for approaching 3 weeks now, with Mr. Dunn and the members of our staff, and I am perfectly confident, gentlemen, that from the standpoint of our aluminum production to meet the aviation program which Mr. Knudsen is responsible for, and a great many other developments in the southeastern section, we must have this added power.

Mr. WOODRUM. And you cannot get it from private industry?

Mr. STETTINIUS. We cannot, sir; and it cannot be delayed, for reasons which Mr. Dunn will bring out in his testimony. Not weeks but days count now, from the standpoint of speeding this work up, so that we can get the full effect of the spring floods 2 years hence.

* * * * * * *

Mr. WOODRUM. And the Council of Defense has been over that thoroughly and regards it as necessary and important, and that time is of the essence?

Mr. STETTINIUS. I do not think I can say "the Commission," but Mr. Knudsen, in charge of production, and I from the standpoint of materials, and Mr. Dunn, having jurisdiction of the power to be supplied, all definitely unite in the conclusion that this expansion is justified and must take place to meet the production ahead.

Mr. Knudsen and Mr. Stettinius brought before our committee as a witness Mr. Gano Dunn, president of the J. G. White Engineering Corporation of New York, one of the oldest consulting construction engineering firms in the United States. Mr. Dunn is personally known to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and perhaps to many of you gentlemen. He has been a persistent, a consistent, and a relentless foe of T. V. A. expansion. The firm of Mr. Dunn was the engineering consultant employed by Mr. Willkie when he contested the constitutionality of the T. V. A. Act.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. I believe the evidence was that one of his partners was the consultant. His firm was employed as the consultant.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I said his firm.

Mr. TABER. I believe Mr. Dunn stated that it was his partner in the firm who was the consultant.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I said his firm was employed, I may say to the gentleman. With that background, recognized as one of the leading power experts of the United States—the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] will join me in that statement—a man whose motives and whose ability cannot be questioned, he said to us that after surveying this whole situation he believes it is of the utmost vital importance to the defense program that this matter not only be acted upon favorably by the Congress but that we do not lose a single day in passing it. Why? Because this dam on the Holston River will take 2 years to construct. It will have the power ready just at the time the power is needed. They want to get their orders in for the machinery necessary for the steam electric generating plant. It is necessary to get those orders in before existing manufacturing operations are clogged up with other defense orders. They want to get them in early if they can and get started on them. They want to have the dam ready to be filled by the spring floods of 1942, in order to get this needed power.

Mr. Dunn was asked about other sources of power than T. V. A. He was asked about Bonneville, Grand Coulee, and private sources, and I commend to you the reading of his testimony on these points. When he was asked about getting it from private sources, here is what he said:

No one company system can furnish it. It would have to be furnished by transmission lines coming in from several different companies. It would be a good deal more expensive than the present power from T. V. A. There would be long delays in negotiating such a supply, and we have got T. V. A. right down there where the main plant of the Aluminum Co. is. Now, it is good management, when you want to increase a manufacturing plant and a power supply, to increase an existing manufacturing plant at an existing power supply. They are both right together in the Tennessee Valley. We found no other place as favorable as T. V. A. for this large block of power increase; and, as Mr. Knudsen said, it is not only for aluminum but for other national-defense projects as well. The increase, in our opinion, is justified on the aluminum alone, but almost every day now there is some new national-defense demand for power directed in the region of the Tennessee Valley.

When Mr. Dunn was asked how soon this appropriation would bring results, he said:

The steam will be ready in 18 months and the hydro in 24 months, provided you take prompt action; but there is a trigger action in this and, if the appropriation is not promptly provided, then there may be a whole year's delay, because you will miss the spring floods in filling the reservoir and with an empty reservoir you cannot get power even if your machinery is all installed.

When Mr. Dunn, a man of that unquestioned integrity and ability, backed by the Advisory Commission of the Council of National Defense, through the testimony of Mr. Knudsen and Mr. Stettinius, comes before our committee and begs and pleads with us not only to act favorably but to act with dispatch, I believe it is a matter that every Member of this House ought to give the very utmost consideration before he takes the responsibility of stopping that procedure.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I was very much impressed with the statement made by the gentleman from Virginia about the T. V. A. having a well rounded out plan. Can the gentleman tell us whether there has been a definite ultimate expansion program developed as far as the T. V. A. is concerned? Do they have a limit to their program, or are further additions to be brought up from time to time?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. As I understand, Congress has now authorized and appropriated for all of the expansion of T. V. A. that was in the original T. V. A. development plan. It is my understanding that the last dam which Congress authorized completed that project.

Mr. RICH. If the construction of this dam we are considering now is made necessary by reason of the necessity for the preparation for war, are there liable to be any further increases in the number of dams that the gentleman knows of? Was any statement to that effect made in the hearings?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It was stated in the hearings that it was thought that this power, together with other potential power coming in from Bonneville and other places that are in course of development, would probably meet the needs, but no man can see what the future is going to make necessary in this defense program. We have to act on it as it comes to us and as our judgment tells us the necessity requires. The problem we are laying on the door of the manufacturing industries of the country is a tremendous one. It is going to call for a maximum of all the energy and all the power we can find. It may be that there will be a necessity to develop other power somewhere or other. I would not undertake to say that.

Mr. RICH. We are doing this for the emergency. What is the emergency?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The emergency now is that the whole world is being overrun by a madman and, as the gentleman from Connecticut, I believe, said a few moments ago, America is awake to the fact that we have to prepare in this country to defend the Western Hemisphere against any eventualities. We cannot take any chance on it, and the gentleman does not want to take that chance. [Applause.]

May I say that there is no partisanship in this matter. This is not a partisan matter. There is not a man on the side of this aisle to my left who is not just as much interested and just as much committed to do whatever should be done for this defense program as the majority, and I know my friend from New Jersey feels that way. I do not ask you to forego any right to consider this matter on its merits, but I do plead with you today to give us a chance to consider it. It ought to be considered. It is more important than taking any recess for a Democratic convention, as important as that is. [Applause.]

I feel the responsibility here of using every possible method of parliamentary procedure at my disposal to get consideration of this matter. I do not care how you vote. Vote as you please. But I do say that I cannot see how any man can object to its consideration, when it comes here with the endorsement and the urgent appeal which brings it to us.

I do not want to take further time, because the House has been very indulgent. There is no politics in this. But I do want to read you what Mr. Willkie said when this question of the further development of power at T. V. A. was suggested in the press. Mr. Dunn, the engineer of whom I spoke, in testifying before the committee, said this:

> I would like to read a statement by Mr. Willkie into the record. Here is what Mr. Willkie said on that subject on June 15:
> "Nothing is more important than defense, and there is nothing which might and will mask more political logrolling than the flag-waving variety of national defense. But if some impartial group, the United States Army or its engineers, for instance, do say that the completion of these dams is a link in our national defense, the dams should be completed and as rapidly as those charged with our defense think necessary."

[Applause.]

Now, that is a patriotic statement, and I want to commend that statement to you gentlemen. I want to call upon you; I want to plead with you; I want to beg you to let us consider this vital and critical matter for national defense today, and I want to ask you gentlemen over there who have influence with my beloved and genial friend from New Jersey, to flock around him and put your arms around him in that consoling and persuading way that you use upon occasions and ask him to be good and gracious and kind and let the House take up this matter on its merits. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] may be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, no one is more interested than I am in seeing that everything that can be done to promote national defense is done. On the other hand, the promotion of national defense is vitally dependent upon our not wasting our resources and upon our not being led astray into appropriating funds for things that are not going to promote national defense. It is going to be almost daily from now on the stock argument of those who are trying to get money out of the Treasury for things that ought not to be done, to call it national defense.

I appreciate thoroughly the sincerity of the gentleman from Virginia and of the majority side of the House on this question. I appreciate the ability of Mr. Gano Dunn. I may say to you that I believe he is the foremost electrical engineer in America today. I have known him for many years. I think that probably no man knows more about that subject than he does, but here is the picture as I see it: I do not believe this matter has had proper consideration. We had hearings on it for a while on Monday afternoon and went into it as thoroughly as we could with the opportunity we had. Since that time I spent practically all my time gathering together information upon it, and, frankly, I am not satisfied with the information that I have gathered. I believe that with reference to the power dam that is involved in this resolution, that Mr. Dunn has been misled and has proceeded on the basis of statements made by the T. V. A. engineers and not on the basis of his own investigation. I am satisfied that the construction of this dam will yield very little primary power. It may yield some secondary power, but the most damning evidence on this question is contained in the independent offices hearings for 1940 and 1941, and I would like to yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] to read into the RECORD at this point the statement of Mr. Parker, the chief engineer of the T. V. A. on this subject on those two hearings, and I want to say to the House that I did not know about that testimony until after I arrived on the floor today.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not want to encumber the gentleman's remarks unduly, but let me say to the House that in the hearings on the independent offices bill for 1941, at page 1781, Mr. Parker, the chief engineer of the T. V. A., stated to us then that this dam on the Holston River would have very little relation to navigation, but would be valuable only for flood control.

In 1940, in the course of the hearings on the Tennessee Valley Authority appropriation, he stated also that these dams on the French Broad, the Little Tennessee, and the Holston River, one of which is contemplated in this bill, were not essential to navigation, and, incidentally, intimated to us that this stream was nothing more than a little trickle up at the head of the stream.

We might also take Mr. Dunn's testimony here where he indicated that it would take 24 months to finish the hydro projects and only 18 months to finish the steam projects, but he also stated, at page 14 of the hearings on this bill, that it would take 3 years to take advantage of the floodwaters on the Holston River.

Three years is a long time, and if we must have this power why not build steam plants instead of taking this rather speculative chance, only to find that we are a year delayed in providing the necessary aluminum for plane-casting plants?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield to me to ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Is not what the gentleman from Illinois says a reason why the House should not grant the item; it goes to the merits of the matter, but what does the gentleman say about the request of the committee that we be permitted to consider the matter upon its merits?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would say to the gentleman that I do not oppose the matter on that account at all.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Would the gentleman go further and join me in an earnest request that we consider this matter after the Advisory Council on Defense says this ought to be done? Will not the gentleman help me to get that permission?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I would say that since my advent into this House I have never objected to the consideration of any bill at any time, anywhere, at any place.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me, inasmuch as I had charge of that hearing?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it not a fact that Mr. Dunn testified it would not be beneficial to navigation, but that it would be for the storage of water?

Mr. TABER. For flood control.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Exactly, and that is what this is, the storage of water and power at some time.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But we are dealing here with the question of time, in order to provide necessary power with which to fabricate aluminum for planes—and if it take 3 years instead of 2, and in my humble judgment it will take 3 years or longer—what would be the matter with providing the necessary steam plant, which will probably cost one-sixth for each plant, of the entire amount?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does the gentleman think that Mr. Dunn will not see that that is accomplished within the time limit?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I have great doubt about it.

Mr. TABER. The worst part about that is this: The T. V. A. has built other dams of this same size and type, and it has always taken them 4 years, and they would have charge of this construction.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And is it not true that this dam they propose to build is not in the big T. V. A. program? It is not one of the essential dams at all. This is an afterthought, because it was developed last summer, that the T. V. A. authorities had made a great mistake in that they had not dammed up sufficient water. This is a new phase of their activities. It is the phase of damming up water without any reason except to have a reserve of water, and this will contribute but little to the production of power.

Mr. TABER. I think that is largely true. I will be frank with the gentleman and say that if I had had the items that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has called attention to, I should have gone into that matter more thoroughly in the hearings. I do not believe that the House has before it the information that it ought to have, before it acts upon the question, and for that reason I cannot join with others in asking the gentleman from New Jersey to withdraw his objection. If I thought it was in the interest of national defense that we proceed without knowing what we are doing—and I believe that is just what we are doing without having the information in front of us, which the time that has elapsed since it was brought before us has not permitted us to develop—I would join in asking him to do this, but I do not think we have.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It is very clear that there is a lot of merit in some of the items covered in this resolution. For instance, where they propose to put in new installation in the Wilson Dam. There is a case where they can produce a tremendous lot of additional power without the construction of any dam, but by the installation of generators.

Mr. TABER. But only secondary power. They cannot produce primary power lasting all through the year without further storage up above.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And the construction of a steam plant is a departure from their program. They never have advocated that until now; and, as far as I am concerned, although I have been opposed to the extension of the T. V. A., I would not interpose any objection to that, because if they are ever going to run the T. V. A. effectively, they will have to have stand-by steam plants, and they might as well start with them now as at any other time if they want to make a success.

Mr. TABER. I think the steam plant is probably something that ought to be built; and the more I go into it the more convinced I am that it ought to be built.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Relating to the question of steam plants, they can be built anywhere where coal is accessible and transportation is not unduly high. They can be spotted anywhere.

Mr. TABER. That is correct, but they should be close to coal mines.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Is it not a fact that electric power can be generated cheaper by steam than by water?

Mr. TABER. I think it is.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I shall only take a very brief moment under my reservation to object to thank the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] for his very fine compliment and to compliment him on his economy views and economy ideas and the need for economy in government, which I have praised and with which I have been glad to cooperate.

In explanation of my position on this situation, I would like to read a statement that I made here on June 21:

> In the tempo and anxiety of the times, opportunities for leakage, wastefulness, and extravagance are unlimited. Against the plea of national defense resistance is difficult. In fact, any proposal labeled national defense is a signal for affirmative action. The T. V. A. has been quick to take advantage of such a situation. Until we know more about this project and until our committees investigate it, this request ought not to be granted.

I feel very keenly on the subject of national defense. I have voted for recent authorizations and the recent tax bill, but I do not think we ought to become hysterical about it. There should be more time allowed us to study this measure. One element alone is convincing: The expenditure that we would commit ourselves to by its passage is in excess of $65,000,000, but only $25,000,000 is mentioned in the resolution.

Under the circumstances, I am constrained to object to the unanimous-consent agreement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances, I feel that request should be made to the leadership for a rule on this matter. It has been represented to us as being vitally necessary in the defense program, and I want to here publicly request the Speaker to set in motion the machinery that a rule be brought in and let two-thirds of the membership of the House vote on it. I think they will pass it. Then we can go ahead with this defense matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). Just a moment. I keep my contracts. I promised the House on last Tuesday, and on that promise 100 Democrats have left the city, that after the Hatch bill nothing would come up this week except by unanimous consent.

That is my answer to the gentleman from Virginia and it must be my answer. There can be none other. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a report by the subcommittee of the Military Affairs Committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, Mr. HARTER of New York was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the Appendix.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a letter from Dr. Alexander Garey, vice chancelor of Suwanee University.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DIMOND, by unanimous consent, was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein an article by Professor Griswold and another on the War Industries Board.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Senate has not passed the adjournment resolution. Of course, if we develop no quorum and have to adjourn, it might mean a very embarrassing situation, if the gentleman desires to insist upon his point of no quorum.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I was curious to know whether we had sufficient membership present to transact the important business of the Government, and to my mind that is the question of national defense.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia certainly is no more aware of that fact than the one who occupies the chair temporarily. If the gentleman insists upon his point of no quorum, the Chair, of course, will count. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 169]

Alexander	Darrow	Johnson, Lyndon	Risk
Allen of Illinois	Delaney	Kee	Routzohn
Allen, La.	DeRouen	Kennedy, Martin	Ryan
Allen, Pa.	Dies	Kennedy, Md.	Sacks
Anderson, Calif.	Ditter	Kilburn	Satterfield
Anderson, Mo.	Doughton	Kunkel	Schaefer, Ill.

Culkin	Jacobsen	Powers	Zimmerman
Cullen	Jeffries	Randolph
Cummings	Johns	Reece, Tenn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this roll call 297 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes after the disposition of the special order heretofore made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHAFER of Michigan, Mr. O'NEAL, and Mr. MCLEAN asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the sorry spectacle that has just been put on in connection with a vital link in our national-defense program, I would like to say that I propose to use these minutes I have asked for to discuss some of our national-defense problems, and particularly the stand that our Republican brethren have taken on those defense problems. To start with, I want to call to your attention a statement that was made by the permanent chairman of the Republican Convention, recently held in Philadelphia, the esteemed and distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, the minority leader of this House, our friend, Mr. MARTIN, now the campaign manager of Republican Nominee Willkie. In that address he made a statement that we should not allow to go unchallenged. I am quoting him. He said this:

> As long ago as April 1939 we appointed a special committee of House Republicans to study our national defense. The proposals of that committee were ignored by the administration.

I now call your attention to the fact that in January of 1939—to be specific, on January 12, 1939—the President delivered a message to the Congress with reference to an augmented defense program. I am not going to take your time to read that message, but I do hope you will read it for yourselves and see just how specific that message was in making recommendations for improving our national defense. During the regular session of Congress in 1939 various bills came before us for consideration. When a bill was brought out by the Committee on Military Affairs of the House the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] made a talk on it. He was asked to do that by the ranking minority member of the Military Affairs Committee of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS].

The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], had been named chairman of this special defense committee that the Republicans had set up. In the course of his remarks he read to the House the program of national defense which he and his colleagues constituting this Republican defense committee had worked out. I shall not read this statement but I refer the Members to page 1375 of the permanent RECORD of the day of February 14, 1939.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. May I suggest that the gentleman include in his remarks both the message of the President on that subject and the recommendations read by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I appreciate the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein the matters referred to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GORE). Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. In this very fine statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], a man to whom I pay great tribute for his patriotism and understanding of our national-defense problems, he gave specific approval to the appropriations strengthening the defenses of the Panama Canal.

First, I may say that he outlined what our national-defense area was and he stressed the importance of the Panama Canal as a vital link in those defenses. He went on to say that we should strengthen the personnel of the Panama Canal, and then he got down to the pending legislation that had come before us as a result of the President's message. Specifically this committee endorsed the appropriations for the Panama Canal defense, the authorization proposed for educational orders, and also the proposal to establish various air bases, both Army and Navy, in the Atlantic and in the Pacific Oceans. Now, I want you to listen to this. The only criticism that committee had to make at all was that the administration was proposing to buy too many airplanes and to procure them too fast.

This bill that was reported by the committee proposed to authorize the War Department to purchase 5,500 planes, and we did not restrict them as to the time in which they could do that. The Republican committee said that they ought to be spread out over a period of 3 or 4 years, and that is the only criticism that they offered to the administration's program.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Not now. I will yield later.

Mr. Speaker, that was the only criticism that was made to the program. If you will read this statement, as I propose to put it into the RECORD, you will see that every single item recommended by that Republican defense committee was put into effect by the administration, frequently over the protest of the Republican side—every one except the reduction in the number of planes that the Army ought to buy.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ANDREWS. I believe the gentleman is correct in his interpretation of the statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] insofar as the preparedness program at that moment was concerned. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact—and I think it is true—that looking back over the whole program of defense and preparedness to this end during the last 2 years, the statement of the special Republican committee outlining our defense policy and what it should be in its entire scheme is the only statement prepared by or submitted by any group either in the House or Senate during the last 2 years. There has never been any such clear statement attempted or made by the White House to give the General Staff an idea of what they might be expected to defend so far as this country is concerned. [Applause.]

Mr. SPARKMAN. I appreciate that from the ranking minority member of our committee, a very able Member and one who I know seeks to do his patriotic duty as he sees it.

It is possibly true that that is the only statement issued giving a general policy, but I am asking you to go back a month earlier and read the President's message, then tell me if there is a single thing in the Republican message that was not included in the President's message.

Mr. THOMASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON. Is it not true that when the President and the War Department sent the request down for 6,000 planes most of our Republican friends and the so-called National Defense Committee not only opposed that number but, if my memory serves me right, my genial friend from New York, Mr. ANDREWS, favored a staggering of the program?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is correct.

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TERRY. Last year when the War Department appropriation bill came up for a program involving 5,500 planes—3,300 for the first line and 2,200 rotating reserve planes—the Republican membership of the House fought that program very bitterly, wishing to reduce the reserve planes to 12 percent.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. If you will go back to the statement you will see that that report mentioned no objection to the 5,500 planes, providing they were not obsolete, but merely asked for a staggering of the order of 3,300 over a period of 2 or 3 years.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is correct; it did ask for a staggering.

In the minority leader's statement to the Republican convention he said that the administration paid no attention to that statement from the committee. My contention is that the administration was doing everything possible to put every one of those recommendations into actual effect except the one cutting down the number of planes.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SPARKMAN. With all due respect, may I ask not to be interrupted for a while; then I will yield if I can.

I want to comment on the point that the gentleman from Arkansas has just made. When the War Department appropriation bill was before the House, the ranking Republican Member, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. POWERS], offered a series of amendments, four in number, seeking to cut down the amount of the appropriations by the sum of some $37,000,000, taking a part of it from the Signal Corps, part from the Ordnance Department, part from the Air Corps and part from the procurement of these airplanes. He stated in his remarks that he advocated only 4,217 planes; in other words, a reduction of some 1,300 planes in the purchase program. I want to read to you a reply to a question that he propounded to the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER]:

> The gentleman certainly does not see any immediate emergency?

The reply of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. SNYDER was:

> I cannot say. World conditions do not look good to me.

The gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. POWERS, the ranking minority member of this committee, said:

> Oh, the gentleman cannot believe that.

That was a little over 2 months before the armies in Europe started marching, yet he was not willing to say that world conditions looked very bad.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Let me proceed, then I will yield.

Mr. TABER. Right at that point. It is an important question. I wonder if the gentleman at that point would put in the RECORD the number of combat planes that have been delivered to the Army since July 1, 1939?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I do not have those figures with me. I will be glad to have the gentleman put them in the RECORD. I do not have them available, therefore, I will not ask for that privilege.

Furthermore, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. POWERS] said:

> Now, who appeared before our committee, who told us there is any immediate emergency? I think this entire thing is nothing but a bubble, and I think the bubble has broken. I may say to the gentleman about national defense, "What crimes have been committed in thy name."

So it went through the course of the debate on the bill, ending up with the gentleman from New Jersey offering amendments to cut these appropriations $37,000,000 and to keep the number of planes down to 3,300, with the argument that that was all the planes this country needed.

In the roll call on the adoption of those amendments, which would have crippled severely our program, there were 150 voting for the amendments, among whom only 3 Democrats were to be found, and there were 217 voting against the amendments, and that number included only 6 Republicans.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GORE). The Chair may say that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] under a previous special order is entitled to be recognized for 10 minutes at this time.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I should like to yield to the gentleman from Alabama but I have been waiting to catch a train and I just cannot do it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from New York I be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes, and that my remarks be placed in the RECORD immediately following the remarks I have just concluded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to one other thing in connection with the appropriation bill, the following statement by the gentleman from New Jersey, the ranking minority member, who had control of the time on that side of the aisle, who said with reference to the planes:

> Mr. Chairman, if I had my way and if I were chairman of the committee writing this measure, I would have brought out a bill calling for 3,300 planes.

I mentioned a few minutes ago that some time after that we had this Navy appropriation bill up in the House. It is true that did not meet with a great deal of opposition. Nevertheless, there was a roll call on the bill. There were only 58 votes cast against it, but the noticeable thing is that of those 58, 56 were Republicans. They had been so accustomed to being led into a position against every national-defense measure that the administration brought up that they could not keep from going down the line; and 56 of them, about one-third of the membership on the minority side, still voted against that Navy bill, the bill that was seeking to maintain this great, strong, fine Navy that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has just discussed.

In this connection, let me say, it has always been a strange thing to me that the Republican Members, when they get up here to discuss our national defense, without exception pay tribute to the Navy. I believe I know why. They sunk our Navy in 1922, and the world knows it. Therefore they are alibiing, or rather building up protection against any such charge as to the weakness of the Navy.

Now, let me say this: Just as surely as they sunk our Navy they likewise sunk our Army. It is not as showy as the Navy. You have to go out among the posts and see; but I have been there. I have been there before we got under way with this national-defense program. I saw people living out there in the district of the gentleman from Colorado who were living under conditions that were an absolute disgrace to the Army of the United States and to the United States, because the Republican administration had never given them proper housing. I saw it not only there, but I saw it in Panama; I saw it in Hawaii; I saw it in practically every State in the United States. Our people who are relied upon to defend our Nation against all enemies, foreign and domestic, living in slum conditions that you would not tolerate for any employee of any company over which you had control.

That is where the great part of the moneys appropriated by the Democratic administration has gone, in order to rehabilitate the run-down conditions as a result of the sinking of our Army by the Republican administration, just as they sunk our Navy.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. In just a moment I will yield.

In this year we had up for consideration the building of a third set of locks at the Panama Canal. The President sent down a letter to the committee, I believe, urging immediate commencement of that work.

But under the leadership of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. POWERS], ranking minority member of that committee, we likewise had a roll call on that matter. I am not going to give you the results, but you can find it on page 10970 in the RECORD of May 30, 1940. It will be quite illuminating to read that roll call and see how the gentlemen on the minority side felt about giving to this vital link in the United States defense, according to the findings of the committee headed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], the defense to which it was entitled. And today we see the sorry spectacle of probably a full year's time lost in building up one of the strongest links in our national defense—that of power—simply because of the objection of one Republican Member, who had the nerve to stand up and object but who apparently was aided and abetted by his brethren on that side of the aisle.

Mr. Gano Dunn, who testified in the hearings, was outside of this Hall while the roll call was going on. He talked to me. I had never met him before. He found out the district from which I came. He said, "You know how I feel toward T. V. A." He said, "You know I am against it and always have been and have worked against it, but this is of such urgency." And yet this bill is carried over during the recess. Oh, you may say, that is only 10 days or 2 weeks, but remember this, that commitments are now being made for the manufacture of generators and for the manufacture of turbines, and all those things that are necessary, and not one single one of them can be authorized until this measure is passed giving them the power to order those things. If we miss these spring floods by 30 days we have lost our power supply for the whole year.

I am through, but that is the record of the Republican Members of this House with regard to national defense.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman include in his remarks the statement by Mr. Dunn and by Mr. Stettinius and Mr. Knudsen and others who appeared before the Appropriations Committee to the effect that this bill before us today was of such importance that even hours counted and that we ought to have immediate action?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I shall certainly be glad to do that. Let me say now that I pay tribute to the patriotism of many of my good friends on this side of the aisle. I believe they are patriotic, but you know they have a way of thinking that they alone can see the light. I was amused by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] when he was up here. He said that Mr. Gano Dunn was undoubtedly the most outstanding electrical engineer in the world, he knew more about it than anyone else. But in this case he was wrong. That is what he said. Oh, consistency, thou art a jewel. The great part that the Republicans have played in bringing our country to an adequate defense status has been to delay, to hinder, to obstruct, to reduce appropriations, and to throw every obstacle in the way that they could possibly devise.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I do not believe that the gentleman was a Member of the House in 1932. Since he has undertaken to speak about what transpired with reference to national defense, I suggest that he read the record of the Democrat-controlled House in 1932 when the Democrats who had control tried to scuttle our entire national defense by cutting off 2,000 Army and 2,000 Navy officers from our wholly inadequate personnel. They also attempted to sell the few Army transports which we had to private interests and reduce appropriations for the Reserves and the National Guard. I respectfully suggest to the gentleman that he should examine the national-defense scuttling record of the Democrat-controlled House of 1932, and examine the roll calls carefully and he will find nothing to boast about. [Applause.]

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is at least consoling that the gentleman has to go so far back to find anything to justify his remarks.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. BENDER. Is it not a fact that the Democratic Party has not only been in control of the administration but has been absolutely in control of both Houses since 1932? And if the country finds itself in the condition that the gentleman speaks of, then the responsibility rests on the Democratic Party and no one else. [Applause.]

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is true that the Democrats have been in control, and they have done an excellent job of rehabilitating what the Republicans left undone. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. THOMASON. The gentleman made some reference to alibis. I am sure he will recall that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] made the statement, or at least left the inference that the President of the United States had asked for compulsory military training. I have seen no such statement or no evidence of such request. But I want to ask the gentleman if this is not a fact, that the only bill so far as I know that is now on file or upon which hearings are being held is the one introduced by the very fine and able gentleman on the Republican side, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]? And that that is the bill upon which hearings are now being held?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is true.

Mr. THOMASON. Regardless of the merits or demerits of that bill—and some of us would like to express ourselves on it a little later when the hearings have proceeded a little further—the fact remains, nonetheless, that the father of this legislation is none other than the able gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. He is being supported in his stand by Col. Bill Donovan, who ranks high not only in political circles but also in military circles, and also by Mr. Clark, of the firm of the late Elihu Root of New York, and other prominent and leading Republicans. I do not mean to reflect upon anyone's sincerity, but when the gentleman from New York says this was the plan of the President of the United States I undertake to say that the record does not bear it out. It is being fathered and urged by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. The criticism, if there be any, should be directed toward him.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is true.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I am sure the gentleman does not intend to misrepresent the position of the minority in connection with the naval bill of some 3 years ago. I think the only exception we took was to the existence of a paper navy. Three battleships were proposed there which have never been laid down and which it is not now proposed to lay down. So that had the policy of the Republicans been followed there would have been no difference in the Navy which we now have in contemplation and the one we urged be provided. We did, however, take very serious exception to the proposal of the administration at that time and of the Naval Affairs Committee to limit naval planes to 3,000, and it was a result of the Republican action that the limitation was stricken. I believe the gentleman will agree that events since then have amply vindicated our stand.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will say to the gentleman from Maine that I did not have reference to that bill. I had reference to the bill that appropriated $770,473,241 for the Navy.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has the right to be recognized at this time.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes, with the consent of the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Apropos of what the gentleman from Texas said, I would like to make the observation that if the President has not actually declared for compulsory military training he ought to do so because we will not have adequate defense short of such action. Further, I can think of nothing that would counteract so completely those rumors that have for 6 years been going around against strong government here in the United States.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, that measure is being carefully considered by committees of both Houses of Congress. Of course, so far as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is concerned, he is well known for his ability to blow both hot and cold. Today he lambasted us for having no adequate defense, then he turned right around and said we ought not to have compulsory service because our present forces were sufficient to defend this country.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Is it not true that the present fleet of the United States and all the vessels in the Navy, or at least one-third of them, have been built during the Democratic administration during the last 7 years? Is it not further true that the Democratic administration in the last 7 years brought the Regular Army from around 110,000 up to 215,000 men before we had any foreign question?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is true. Here is the thing that many people often overlook. Not only did we bring the Army up, so far as its personnel was concerned, but we did a thing that was much more important. We took them out of the slum conditions in which they were living and gave them decent houses to live in and we gave them the equipment and matériel that they needed.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON. There has been some complaint from our Republican friends that we are not doing anything about defense. I would like for the gentleman to point out, or for the record to show, that it is not advisable for the War Department, the Navy Department, and the Government to reveal exactly every gun we may produce and every instrument of national defense we may have, where it is and all about it. The actual quantity and location of all our armament cannot be revealed with safety. Some of these things and some of the action that is being taken has to be kept within the bosom of the War and Navy Departments.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I agree with the gentleman. I do not see how anyone can question that statement. [Applause.]

To the Congress of the United States:

In my annual message to this Congress I have spoken at some length of the changing world conditions outside of the American hemisphere which make it imperative that we take immediate steps for the protection of our liberties.

It would be unwise for any of us to yield to any form of hysteria. Nevertheless, regardless of political affiliations, we can properly join in an appraisal of the world situation and agree on the immediate defense needs of the Nation.

It is equally sensational and untrue to take the position that we must at once spend billions of additional money for building up our land, sea, and air forces, on the one hand, or to insist that no further additions are necessary on the other.

What needs to be emphasized is the great change which has come over conflicts between nations since the World War ended, and especially during the past 5 or 6 years.

Those of us who took part in the conduct of the World War will remember that in the preparation of the American armies for actual participation in battle, the United States, entering the war on April 6, 1917, took no part whatsoever in any major engagement until the end of May 1918. In other words, while other armies were conducting the actual fighting, the United States had more than a year of absolute peace at home without any threat of attack on this continent, to train men, to produce raw materials, to process them into munitions and supplies, and to forge the whole into fighting forces. It is even a matter of record that as late as the autumn of 1918, American armies at the front used almost exclusively French or British artillery and aircraft.

Calling attention to these facts does not remotely intimate that the Congress or the President have any thought of taking part in another war on European soil, but it does show that in 1917 we were not ready to conduct large-scale land or air operations. Relatively, we are not much more ready to do so today than we were then—and we cannot guarantee a long period, free from attack, in which we could prepare.

I have called attention to the fact that "we must have armed forces and defenses strong enough to ward off sudden attack against strategic positions and key facilities essential to insure sustained resistance and ultimate victory." And I have said, "We must have the organization and location of those key facilities so that they may be immediately utilized and rapidly expanded to meet all needs without danger of serious interruption by enemy attack."

I repeat that "there is new range and speed to offense."

Therefore, it has become necessary for every American to restudy present defense against the possibilities of present offense against us.

Careful examination of the most imperative present needs leads me to recommend the appropriation at this session of the Congress, with as great speed as possible, of approximately $525,000,000, of which sum approximately $210,000,000 would be actually spent from the Treasury before the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940.

The survey indicates that of this sum approximately $450,000,000 should be allocated for new needs of the Army, $65,000,000 for new needs of the Navy, and $10,000,000 for training of civilian air pilots.

The several items will be submitted to the appropriate committees of the Congress by the departments concerned, and I need, therefore, touch only on the major divisions of the total.

In the case of the Army, information from other nations leads us to believe that there must be a complete revision of our estimates for aircraft. The Baker board report of a few years ago is completely out of date. No responsible officer advocates building our air forces up to the total either of planes on hand or of productive capacity equal to the forces of certain other nations. We are thinking in the terms of necessary defenses, and the conclusion is inevitable that our existing forces are so utterly inadequate that they must be immediately strengthened.

It is proposed that $300,000,000 be appropriated for the purchase of several types of airplanes for the Army. This should provide a minimum increase of 3,000 planes, but it is hoped that orders placed on such a large scale will materially reduce the unit cost and actually provide many more planes.

Military aviation is increasing today at an unprecedented and alarming rate. Increased range, increased speed, increased capacity of airplanes abroad have changed our requirements for defensive aviation. The additional planes recommended will considerably strengthen the air defenses of the continental United States, Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Canal Zone. If an appropriation bill can be quickly enacted, I suggest that $50,000,000 of the $300,000,000 for airplanes be made immediately available in order to correct the present lag in aircraft production due to idle plants.

Of the balance of approximately $150,000,000 requested for the Army, I suggest an appropriation of $110,000,000 to provide "critical items" of equipment which would be needed immediately in time of emergency and which cannot be obtained from any source within the time and quantity desired—matériel such as antiaircraft artillery, semiautomatic rifles, antitank guns, tanks, light and heavy artillery, ammunition, and gas masks. Such purchases would go far to equip existing units of the Regular Army and the National Guard.

I suggest approximately $32,000,000 for educational orders for the Army—in other words, to enable industry to prepare for quantity production in an emergency of those military items which are noncommercial in character and are so difficult of manufacture as to constitute what is known as bottlenecks in the problem of procurement.

The balance should be used, I believe, for improving and strengthening the seacoast defenses of Panama, Hawaii, and the continental United States, including the construction of a highway outside the limits of the Panama Canal Zone, important to the defense of the zone.

The estimated appropriation of $65,000,000 for the Navy should be divided into (a) $44,000,000 for the creation or strengthening of Navy bases in both oceans in general agreement with the report of the special board which has already been submitted to the Congress, (b) about $21,000,000 for additional Navy airplanes and air-material tests.

Finally, national defense calls for the annual training of additional air pilots. This training should be primarily directed to the essential qualifications for civilian flying. In cooperation with educational institutions it is believed that the expenditure of $10,000,000 a year will give primary training to approximately 20,000 citizens.

In the above recommendations for appropriations, totaling $525,000,000, I have omitted reference to a definite need, which, however, relates to the implementing of existing defenses for the Panama Canal. The security of the Canal is of the utmost importance. The peace garrison now there is inadequate to defend this vital link. This deficiency cannot be corrected with existing forces without seriously jeopardizing the general defense by stripping the continental United States of harbor defense and antiaircraft personnel. The permanent garrison in the Canal Zone should be increased to provide the minimum personnel required to man the antiaircraft and seacoast armament provided for the defense of the Canal. Such personnel cannot be increased until additional housing facilities are provided; and in the meantime additional personnel must be trained. I recommend, therefore, an appropriation of $27,000,000 to provide an adequate peace garrison for the Canal Zone and to house it adequately. Five million dollars of this sum should be made available immediately in order that work on necessary construction can be initiated.

All of the above constitutes a well-rounded program, considered by me, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and by my advisers, to be a minimum program for the necessities of defense. Every American is aware of the peaceful intentions of the Government and of the people. Every American knows that we have no thought of aggression; no desire for further territory.

Nevertheless, as the Executive head of the Government, I am compelled to look facts in the face. We have a splendid asset in the quality of our manhood. But without modern weapons and without adequate training the men, however splendid the type, would be hopelessly handicapped if we were attacked.

The young men of this Nation should not be compelled to take the field with antiquated weapons. It would be economically unsound to provide in time of peace for all the modern equipment needed in a war emergency. But it would be nationally unsound not to provide the critical items of equipment which might be needed for immediate use, and not to provide for facilities for mass production in the event of war.

Devoid of all hysteria, this program is but the minimum of requirements.

I trust, therefore, that the Congress will quickly act on this emergency program for the strengthening of the defense of the United States.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 12, 1939.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the courtesy extended to me by my colleague the gentleman from New York, Mr. ANDREWS, and I shall endeavor to restrain my loquacity to such an extent that it shall not keep the Committee of the Whole too long.

The gentleman from New York, Mr. ANDREWS, has stated that at a meeting of the Republican Members of the House held on last Thursday an agreement was reached with respect to a statement concerning the national defense. At the risk of repetition, at least so far as many Republicans now on the floor are concerned, and solely with the purpose of bringing to Members on the Democratic side of the aisle this expression of opinion from the minority, I beg leave to consume about 6 minutes in reading that statement.

Before I do so, I think I can say that you will find no evidence of partisanship in it. Furthermore, you will find no note of belligerency contained in it. We were not concerned with parties or their fortunes, nor were we concerned with any foreign nation in its relation to ourselves at this moment.

The statement is as follows:

"In the foreign policy of the United States, which has been consistent and has developed naturally with the years, there has been for over a century but one principle which has remained definite and unchanged—the principle known as the Monroe Doctrine. The famous declaration of President Monroe informed the nations of Europe that the United States would regard any attempt to extend European domination in the countries of Central and South America as an unfriendly act. It is not a treaty, nor has any foreign power ever approved it. It is, in truth, a 'no trespass' sign posted around the entire area south of the Rio Grande, and as the years have passed we have made it plain that the warning is addressed to all foreign powers, no matter where situated.

"While the doctrine may be of advantage to the nations of Latin America, fundamentally it is our doctrine and ours alone. We adhere to it because we are convinced that our safety is dependent upon its enforcement. It is a policy of defense.

"The United States may from time to time adopt new attitudes and pursue new policies relating to other matters in this ever-changing world, but there can be no lessening of its devotion to the Monroe Doctrine because this, more than any other single aspect of policy, involves the safety of the Nation and its vital interests. Especially is this true now that, by an act of Congress we are withdrawing from the Philippines and shall not be expected to defend those islands.

"Obviously, our Military Establishment must be adequate to carry out the obligation so clearly implied in the Monroe Doctrine—the obligation to prevent the extension of foreign political domination through military action in the Western Hemisphere. This may well be considered as part of the supreme obligation to defend the continental United States. We thus envision our whole defense. Without the Panama Canal we should be sadly handicapped. It is our life line and must be maintained.

"For our defense in the Pacific we believe the mission of our Military Establishment is the maintenance, impregnably, of the line following roughly the one hundred and eightieth meridian, commencing at the Alaskan Islands, passing somewhat westward of Hawaii, and thence generally southeastward to include and cover the Panama Canal. With comparatively slight additions our presently authorized military strength, both Army and Navy, is equal to that particular task.

"We conceive the disposition of our military forces in the Atlantic and the Pacific as having a common objective—the enforcement of our defense policy. We should look upon Oahu as an outpost not only of our Pacific coast but of the Canal. We should look upon Guantanamo and Puerto Rico and our naval and aviation establishments along our Atlantic coast as likewise outposts of Panama. Everything should be done to extend and strengthen such outposts in the areas of defense, whether they be in the hands of the Army or the Navy.

"As for Panama itself, there is great need of a substantial increase in the strength of the garrison in order that the armament now there or shortly to be installed may be manned with at least one shift; and we must add certain equipment vital to the conduct of its defense.

"If we control the sea and the air over a wide radius from the Canal it will not be easy for an enemy to reach it from the sea. Likewise, if when the need arises, we take instant measures to prevent the establishment of hostile bases in Central or South America, we shall have gone a long way toward closing the door.

"With our defense system made effective far out in the Pacific and far out in the Atlantic, with hostile military infiltration promptly prevented, and with the Canal itself fortified to the utmost degree of effectiveness, we shall be secure in the Western World. Such should be our military policy; such must be our defense.

"Proceeding to a discussion of certain provisions set forth in pending legislation having to do with the strengthening of our defense, we make certain recommendations.

"We believe that the item of appropriation which, if adopted, would go far toward perfecting our Panama defenses is sound.

"Likewise, the item providing for the placing of educational orders by the War Department is equally sound. In fact we believe that a state of reasonable industrial preparedness, while not as dramatic, is fully as important as preparedness in the purely military sense.

"Again we find ourselves in agreement with proposals contained in pending legislation looking toward the addition and strengthening of naval aviation and submarine bases in the Atlantic, as well as the addition of similar bases in the vast Pacific area bounded roughly on the west by the one hundred and eightieth meridian.

"We entertain serious doubts as to the necessity or wisdom of extending our line of defense as far to the westward as the island of Guam.

"Coming to a consideration of our air forces, we believe that our vital interests demand the procurement of additional planes for the Army which, when added to useful planes now on hand and to planes now in course of manufacture, shall bring the total to a maximum authorized strength of 5,500—all obsolete planes being eliminated.

"We suggest, however, that instead of acquiring additional planes in substantially a single increment, it would be wise to manage our production so that our maximum authorized strength will be reached by annual increments over a period of 3 or 4 years.

"By such a program the problem of training new pilots and the organization of new tactical units in the Army Air Corps would be greatly simplified, and, further, the ever-present problem of obsolescence in the planes themselves could be met from year to year without impairing the fighting strength of the Air Corps, as might be the case if obsolescence of a large proportion of our planes should overtake us at recurring intervals.

"By thus spreading the effort the financial strain to be reflected in the Budgets of 1940 and 1941 will be lessened.

"In any event, with an Army Air Corps at a maximum strength of 5,500, with additional Army personnel trained for its operation, coupled with a naval air force approximating 3,000 planes—"

And I interpolate here: That is the number now authorized—

"we believe the air defense of our country will be adequate."

That, Mr. Chairman, is the statement agreed upon by the members of the minority on last Thursday afternoon. I am not sure that it is expected of me at this time to continue very far with this discussion of national defense. Perhaps I will be allowed to make some observations and suggestions concerning the Air Corps and the function of aviation generally in warfare.

As has been suggested by questions propounded by the gentleman from Montana, I think we should approach the solution of our problem of defense in the air in a somewhat different way than it is approached in Europe. Every great industrial center in Europe, and every great political capital in Europe is today subject potentially to mass bombing. The air force of any one of those countries can, upon a moment's notice, deliver at least one attack upon the capital or the industrial center of almost any of its neighbors. The stories which have emanated from Spain and from China having to do with the loss of civilians and the destruction of private property have, quite naturally, made a deep impression upon the inhabitants of the capitals of Europe. I think without doubt the fear of mass bombing in that section of the world has had an enormous effect in the psychology of those peoples. I do not say that mass bombing, if inflicted upon London, or Paris, or Berlin, or some other great center of population, would result in the winning of the war by the side which did the bombing. In all probability the world has yet to learn whether mass bombing is actually effective from the military standpoint to the extent now dreaded by people on the other side of the water, but that mass bombing is dreaded and dreaded most acutely by millions of people in Europe cannot be denied. This fear accounts to a considerable degree for the immense importance placed upon war in the air.

I cannot escape the conclusion that at least so far as the art has progressed to this moment and so far as it bids fair to progress within a year or two, or three or four—no one knows just how long the period—no population center of the United States need be in acute dread of mass bombing by an enemy. So I am not quite as panicky as are some people about the menace to continental United States and her centers of population from air attack, although I would not contend that a sudden raid could not be inflicted from a hastily approaching airplane carrier or a secretly established air base. So it seems to me that the mission of our Air Corps in the Army and to a considerable degree the Air Corps of the Navy is somewhat different than that expected to be performed by the air corps, respectively, of great European nations.

As this statement endeavors to set forth, the military policy of the United States is to protect the Western Hemisphere or any part of it from domination by a European or an Asiatic power. This we regard as essential to our national defense, because, if a European power of the aggressor type should secure domination over some country of this hemisphere and from that country launch an attack upon us, then the story would be very different.

We need an air corps not so much to help in the defense of the city of New York or the city of San Francisco, which I cannot conceive to be in dire danger, as we need it to help in the defense of our life line, which is the Panama Canal. It is highly important that we develop an air force which, supplementing the Navy far out at sea, shall prevent an enemy reaching striking distance of the Canal, and then in turn supplement that far-at-sea defense to defend the Canal itself with such effectiveness and thoroughness that even should an enemy break through for a moment it could be repelled.

From the military standpoint that is the suggestion which comes to the House from the minority. May I say a word with respect to our disagreement in the matter of the production of airplanes? As the chairman of the committee has stated, it is the intention of the War Department, should this measure pass in its present form, to embark immediately upon the manufacture of 3,000 new planes. I think testimony before the committee was to the effect that should this legislation pass, the Department would place orders with the industry based almost entirely on present last-approved design—perhaps the phrase "frozen design" was used in the hearing.

GENERAL STATEMENT OF E. R. STETTINIUS, JR.

Are you going to make the initial statement for us, Mr. Stettinius?

Mr. STETTINIUS. I am, sir. I shall introduce it by saying it is a great satisfaction to have our associates on the Defense Commission, Mr. Knudsen and his executive assistant, Mr. John Biggers, with us. Mr. Knudsen and Mr. Biggers must go to Aberdeen immediately, and I hope you gentlemen can see your way free to excuse them after they say what you would like to have them say, as they have an emergency matter to attend to.

We have associated with us on the Defense Commission Mr. Gano Dunn, who is one of my personal aides in charge of power matters as they affect the whole defense program. Mr. Gano Dunn is a well-known electrical and mechanical engineer and has for many years been president and is now president of the J. G. White Engineering Corporation, of New York, one of the oldest consulting and constructing engineering firms in the country, which designed and built the present 60,000-kilowatt steam station of the T. V. A. at Muscle Shoals.

Mr. Dunn was the power-expert member of the Nitrate Commission of the War Department prior to the World War and at that time made studies of the Tennessee River with reference to its suitability as a source of power for the manufacture of nitrates.

In the lawsuit—this will amuse some of you—in the lawsuit which Wendell Willkie and the Commonwealth & Southern brought several years ago to test the constitutionality of the T. V. A. Act, he hired Mr. Dunn's firm to represent him against the Government. Mr. Dunn has previously been opposed to the Government's policy of entering into competition with private utilities, but he now strongly is in favor of this request of T. V. A. purely from the standpoint of the emergency at hand and the interest of the national defense.

I have been over this matter for approaching 3 weeks now, with Mr. Dunn and the members of our staff, and I am perfectly confident, gentlemen, that from the standpoint of our aluminum production to meet the aviation program which Mr. Knudsen is responsible for, and a great many other developments in the southeastern section, we must have this added power.

Mr. WOODRUM. And you cannot get it from private industry?

Mr. STETTINIUS. We cannot, sir, and it cannot be delayed for reasons which Mr. Dunn will bring out in his testimony. Not weeks but days count now, from the standpoint of speeding this work up so that we can get the full effect of the spring floods 2 years hence.

NATURE AND COST OF PROPOSED PROGRAM

With that introduction, Mr. Chairman, I will let Mr. Knudsen tell you about it.

Mr. WOODRUM. The program calls for the erection of a storage dam and hydroelectric power plant to be built on the Holston River, near Jefferson City, Tenn., at a total cost of $36,000,000; then for the installation of steam electric generating facilities at a cost of $10,500,000; Wilson and Pickwick units, $5,300,000; transmission facilities, $14,000,000—making a total of $65,800,000.

Now you are asking for $25,000,000 in 1941, $29,800,000 in 1942, and $11,000,000 in 1943.

Mr. STETTINIUS. That is correct, sir.

Mr. WOODRUM. And the Council of Defense has been over that thoroughly and regards it as necessary and important, and that time is of the essence?

Mr. STETTINIUS. I do not think I can say "the Commission," but Mr. Knudsen, in charge of production and I from the standpoint of materials, and Mr. Dunn, having jurisdiction of the power to be supplied, all definitely unite in the conclusion that this expansion is justified and must take place to meet the production ahead.

I think it would be very helpful if Mr. Knudsen could add a word, and then Mr. Dunn can answer as to the details.

ALUMINUM REQUIREMENT FOR PLANES

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Knudsen, we will be very glad to hear whatever you have to say to us.

Mr. KNUDSEN. I am not a power man; I am a manufacturer. My interest in this project is purely to see that we get aluminum enough or duraluminum enough to build the planes with. I suppose you know the average plane takes about 5 tons of this stuff.

Mr. WOODRUM. Five tons of aluminum?

Mr. KNUDSEN. Yes; that is the average, and my interest here in this project is to get aluminum enough for the planes, and the average quantity per plane is about 5 tons, meaning both in the frame itself and in the parts of the motor that are made of aluminum, such as the crankcase, pistons, and cylinder head. And in this area where the T. V. A. is located, that is outlined by the General Staff as area E. We have areas A, B, C, D, and E which are satisfactory to the General Staff for plant-location purposes, being away from the shore, and in this area E, besides aluminum plants, we have some other plants projected, the actual location of which I am unable to give you at this time, because the sites have not been picked; but they are in this area E. So that there will be a call for power beyond what will be required for aluminum.

Mr. WOODRUM. And you cannot get it from private industry?

Mr. KNUDSEN. Well, I do not know; frankly, I am not familiar with that.

Mr. STETTINIUS. I think Mr. Dunn can answer that.

Mr. KNUDSEN. The power people will have to tell you about that. I can only testify as to the manufacturing end.

Mr. O'NEAL. How long will it take to get into production with the money being asked for?

Mr. KNUDSEN. That is something Mr. Dunn will have to answer.

Mr. WOODRUM. Do you mean power production or aluminum production?

Mr. O'NEAL. I mean with the money spent that is proposed here, how quickly will it bring results?

Mr. DUNN. The steam will be ready in 18 months and the hydro in 24 months, provided you take prompt action; but there is a trigger action in this and, if the appropriation is not promptly provided, then there may be a whole year's delay, because you will miss the spring floods in filling the reservoir and with an empty reservoir you cannot get power even if your machinery is all installed.

Mr. O'NEAL. I know you have looked into the possibility of more rapid development along that line, but I understand at Grand Coulee there is a vast amount of power to be developed, and that can probably be developed in less time than here. Is that correct, or am I incorrectly informed?

Mr. WOODRUM. How about letting Mr. Knudsen finish his statement first, and then ask questions?

Mr. O'NEAL. I thought he had completed his statement.

Mr. WOODRUM. What else do you want to say about that?

Mr. KNUDSEN. I do not know of anything else.

Mr WOODRUM. That is the whole story?

Mr. KNUDSEN. Unless you want to ask me something.

Mr. WOODRUM. I would like to ask you this general question, if you do not mind: How is the general work of the Defense Commission coming along? Is everything going satisfactorily?

Mr. KNUDSEN. Well, you are a better judge of that than I am, because, naturally, I have only been here a month and the time has been spent in getting the schedules for the requirements both of the A schedule, which covers the money appropriated here last month, and the B schedule, which is coming up on the Hill here to Congress either this afternoon or tomorrow. We are trying to plan our work so that we can place all the contracts we have got money for now and at the same time we study the capacity, or try to study the capacity, so that we can handle the second program either with contract authorizations or with cash.

Mr. WOODRUM. But you are finding cooperation, are you, in your work?

Mr. KNUDSEN. Yes, sir; absolutely. We have nothing to complain about.

Mr. WOODRUM. There is no holding back or failure to cooperate on the part of anybody that retards your work?

Mr. KNUDSEN. No, sir. We try to work through the existing agencies and act there purely on the basis of our experience to give them our judgment of what is right and what is wrong.

Mr. WOODRUM. Referring to aluminum, the proposition is to build another aluminum plant there near this power?

Mr. KNUDSEN. About that, Mr. Stettinius can tell you. We have split our work this way, that he brings the material up to the siding and then I cut it up; so that there is a straight division of our work.

Mr. WOODRUM. He has to bring this aluminum up to you before you can make planes out of it; is that the idea?

Mr. KNUDSEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LUDLOW. Is this power needed entirely for the production of aluminum?

Mr. KNUDSEN. No, sir.

Mr. LUDLOW. You are going to use it for other purposes, too?

Mr. KNUDSEN. There are other plants plotted in that area.

Mr. LUDLOW. For what production?

Mr. KNUDSEN. Some of them for munitions, some for other things—for powder.

Mr. LUDLOW. But the major part of it would be for aluminum?

Mr. KNUDSEN. That is the thing I am mostly interested in at the moment, because in planes that is the important item; that is the major item in a plane.

Mr. TABER. To what extent are you shy of your supply of aluminum or aluminum-factory capacity that can be operated by the industry existing now?

Mr. KNUDSEN. I think there are some others here, sir, that will give you that information.

Mr. TABER. Then all you are giving us is a sort of picture indicating that you feel that we need more aluminum capacity?

Mr. KNUDSEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TABER. That is all you are giving us right now?

Mr. KNUDSEN. That is all I can give you.

Mr. TABER. And how much, in detail, you are not prepared to discuss with us?

Mr. KNUDSEN. Except knowing that it takes 5 tons on the job, on the average.

Mr. WOODRUM. All right; thank you, Mr. Knudsen.

Mr. STETTINIUS. Mr. Chairman, in order to clarify the picture, let me say that Mr. Knudsen was not avoiding a discussion of production. Production is in our division, not in his division, and we are completely responsible for the aluminum study, and we have facts and figures on any question you may wish to ask with regard to aluminum.

Mr. WOODRUM. Do you want to give them to us now, or will Mr. Dunn do that?

Mr. STETTINIUS. Mr. Dunn can give them, or I can easily get them on the telephone, if necessary.

USE OF BONNEVILLE POWER

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask one or two questions of Mr. Dunn first. I want to ask about Bonneville as well as Grand Coulee. I understand that the generators at Bonneville can increase their power facilities, and Grand Coulee, as I understand, can increase their facilities in the near future.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, answering the first of Mr. O'Neal's questions, he is exactly right about it, and before we recommended this large block of power for T. V. A., we sought other places where we could get the power. We found a very good supply at Bonneville, and we are planning to take 60,000 kilowatts from there before we take this increase from T. V. A.

Mr. O'NEAL. You can make more speed, then, by T. V. A. than at Grand Coulee?

Mr. DUNN. Yes, sir.

PROSPECT OF GETTING POWER FROM PRIVATE COMPANIES

Mr. LUDLOW. Did you develop the prospect of getting it from private companies?

Mr. DUNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LUDLOW. And ineffectually?

Mr. DUNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LUDLOW. What was the problem, then?

Mr. DUNN. No one company system can furnish it. It would have to be furnished by transmission lines coming in from several different companies. It would be a good deal more expensive than the present power from T. V. A. There would be long delays in negotiating such a supply, and we have got T. V. A. right down there where the main plant of the Aluminum Co. is. Now, it is good management, when you want to increase a manufacturing plant and a power supply, to increase an existing manufacturing plant at an existing power supply. They are both there right together in the Tennessee Valley. We found no other place as favorable as T. V. A. for this large block of power increase; and, as Mr. Knudsen said, it is not only for aluminum but for other national-defense projects as well. The increase, in our opinion, is justified on the aluminum alone, but almost every day now there is some new national-defense demand for power directed in the region of the Tennessee Valley.

For instance, since we first investigated this, there has been a contract signed with the Du Pont people for a powder plant, the Tennessee Powder Co. which requires 7,000 kilowatts, and this is already being increased to 14,000 kilowatts. There are other plants where the increased power for national-defense needs, besides this aluminum need, is going to add up to almost the full capacity that we are here recommending for aluminum. Besides this there is the normal growth in the demands for power by the municipalities that are already located in the Tennessee Valley and are being supplied. You cannot limit or cut off that growth; it would disturb the industrial and social conditions if you did. Of the increase that we are recommending, 50,000 kilowatts goes to supply the growth of what is already connected up with T. V. A.

Does that answer your question.

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes.

LETTER IN RE INCREASE IN POWER CAPACITY OF T. V. A.

Mr. WOODRUM. Now I want you to start off in your own way and give us what the picture is, and then we will ask you questions.

Mr. DUNN. We did not expect to come before this committee. We were under the impression when the President had sent in a recommendation several weeks ago, at the time the matter was before the Senate, that his recommendation would be approved. Before we approved this increase in power, I was asked by Mr. Stettinius to write him all the reasons that led us to approve the increase, and I have here a letter which was not intended to be presented to this committee, nor for publication, but as I read it over I rather think it is the best presentation of the case that we could make, especially as it was made as an interoffice explanation of the purpose in hand. I would like to put it in the record, if you will allow me.

Mr. WOODRUM. All right, sir.

Mr. DUNN. It is dated July 1, 1940, addressed to Mr. Stettinius, from Gano Dunn, and the subject is entitled "Justification of approval of 300,000 kilowatts increase in power capacity of the Tennessee Valley Authority."

It would bore you to have me read that letter in full, and therefore I will only take up the high spots in it, if you wish.

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; and put the whole letter in the record, if you will.

The letter referred to is as follows:

MEMORANDA FOR E. R. STETTINIUS, JR.

MONDAY, JULY 1, 1940.

From: Gano Dunn.

Subject: Justification of approval of 300,000 kilowatts increase in power capacity of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

In response to your request of June 24, Mr. Raynor and I have prepared a documented chronology of the Tennessee Valley Authority power increase covering all the transactions of which I am aware from June 8 to June 28, inclusive, which chronology in bound form is attached hereto.

The calculations of Mr. Batt and Mr. Folsom for an estimated annual requirement of aluminum (exhibit XVI) based on a production rate of ——— planes per year, beginning July 1, 1942, indicates a shortage of 60,000,000 pounds per year over and beyond the increased production of aluminum that will by that time have been brought about by what may be called a normal increase in the rate of production.

This so-called normal increase involves 30,000 kilowatts of water power to be developed at Nantahala in Tennessee and 30,000 kilowatts more of water power to be developed at Glenville in Tennessee both by the Aluminum Co. itself plus 60,000 kilowatts which by July 1, 1942, will have been developed at Bonneville in Washington and applied to aluminum production there. This represents 120,000 kilowatts of additional power for aluminum before any increase in the capacity of T. V. A. has been considered.

In arriving at the 60,000,000 pounds per year shortage of aluminum after July 1, 1942, due allowance has been made for the supply of aluminum derived from recoveries from scrap and other sources, but no curtailment in normal consumption or its growth during 2 years has been planned.

The energy required to produce aluminum is variously estimated at from 10 to 12 kilowatt-hours per pound. On the assumption that the plants run continuously day and night, which is what is termed at 100 percent load factor, the production of 60,000,000 pounds of aluminum represents a power requirement of approximately 80,000 kilowatts.

There are several possible sources for the whole or part of this power. Among these are the Santee-Cooper project now under construction in South Carolina, the Bonneville project through a still further increase in the power from that project over the 60,000 kilowatts that has already been included, and there is the possibility of some increase in the power from Boulder Dam, although this latter is likely to be preempted for other projects. There are also power increases in varying amounts possible from other sources.

No increase is possible from T. V. A. with its present installed capacity, for this capacity is not only fully loaded but often overloaded and makes maximum use of the limited amount of water that is available. As the documented chronology will show (exhibit I), the Aluminum Co. has already been given notice of the possible necessity of cutting off 30,000 kilowatts of its secondary power on account of low water.

From the point of view of national defense an increase in power for the production of aluminum can best be obtained by an increase in the capacity of the Tennessee Valley Authority. The principal plant of the Aluminum Co. of America, which is practically the sole manufacturer of aluminum, is located in the Tennessee Valley. Notwithstanding the increase of that company's plant at Bonneville the extension of their plant in the Tennessee Valley is likely to be accomplished with greater certainty and with greater facility than the building of new plants elsewhere, having in mind the time limitation within which the airplane-production program must be accomplished. The same argument that applies favorably to the extension of an existing aluminum plant applies favorably also to the extension of an existing power system such as that of the Tennessee Valley Authority. Also, in recommending power expansion in the Tennessee Valley we had in view creating new sources, not all of one kind of power, but partly of water power and partly of steam power, which gives two alternatives on which to rely in the event that something went wrong with the program.

The increase in the hydro power of the Tennessee Valley Authority is advantageous because, by installing 90,000 kilowatts of generating equipment at the Holston Dam, the water impounded by that dam will not only energize the 90,000 kilowatts there installed but an additional 90,000 kilowatts to be installed at the Pickwick and Wilson Dams farther down the river. This is because the Holston Dam happens to be the highest one upstream from other dams in the Tennessee Valley over which other dams the water which is stored in the Holston Reservoir is also discharged with accompanying power, which would not be the case if the Holston Dam stood alone by itself. By this particular development of the Tennessee Valley it may be said that we get 2 kilowatts of power for every 1 kilowatt that the Holston Dam itself develops.

Our approval of 120,000 kilowatts of steam plant to be located near the Watts Bar Dam has the effect of transforming a large amount of what is termed secondary or dump power resulting from the variations in the flow of the river into primary or continuous power which the Tennessee Valley Authority system greatly needs. The amount of power we approved was 180,000 kilowatts of hydro and 120,000 kilowatts of steam, but while this constitutes a total of 300,000 kilowatts of increased installed capacity, it does not constitute 300,000 kilowatts of increased power, since the hydro power and the steam power overlap, and they are not both in full operation at the same time. The net amount of increased power made available by the 300,000 kilowatts of installed capacity is in the neighborhood of 220,000 kilowatts.

If the increased requirements for aluminum were the only increased requirements for the national defense for which power will be needed in the Tennessee Valley, an increase in capacity of 100,000 kilowatts would have been adequate to take care of 80,000 kilowatts demand for aluminum and allow some spare capacity.

But in addition to the national-defense demands for aluminum involved in the airplane program, there are other power increases in prospect for the Tennessee Valley; for instance, 7,000 kilowatts to supply the new Du Pont powder plant at Memphis (Tennessee Powder Co.), for which a contract has just been let. There is also the requirement of 14,000 kilowatts for a proposed paper mill at Savannah, Tenn., and 8,000 kilowatts for metallurgical operations at Wilson Dam. There will also be by the time of 2 years hence an estimated increase of 50,000 kilowatts in the requirements of the various municipalities in the Tennessee Valley which now are supplied with power by the Tennessee Valley Authority. These increases besides the increase for aluminum and others which may yet arise in the development of the defense program fully justify the increased capacity which we have approved.

In the case of hydro expansion at T. V. A. the construction work can be performed in less than the usual time, because, as we have been informed, the designs are wholly complete and the technical staffs, now finishing one of the other projects, can be immediately transferred to the Holston River project. The Tennessee Valley engineers assure us that under these circumstances the hydro expansion can be ready within 24 months if the appropriation is promptly approved, but that if there is delay in starting the hydro work through delay in making the appropriation, the power will be delayed nearly a year through missing the opportunity of filling the new reservoir with the spring floods.

With respect to the steam expansion, we are informed that, provided orders are placed for the machinery prior to July 15 and provided authorization is given to employ negotiated contracts instead of competitive bidding, the first part of the steam power can be available within 18 months.

As has already been mentioned, additional power will probably be available from the hydroelectric development at Bonneville, in Washington, but the plans for the aluminum requirements (exhibit XVI) already include 60,000 kilowatts additional from there by July 1, 1942.

More power than this it is not considered desirable to apply to the production of aluminum at Bonneville because the site is so far from the sources of bauxite, one of the principal raw materials entering into the aluminum production, that the transportation from Tennessee and Arkansas where the material is now found to Bonneville, which is on the Columbia River, in the State of Washington, not only involves large additional expense but with the return shipment of the finished product eastward will tend to clog the railroad systems of the country at a time when the requirements of national defense are going to place heavy additional demands upon them.

In selecting the Tennessee Valley as the location for the principal power expansion which we have approved, we have had in mind not only the location there of the principal plant of the Aluminum Co. of America but also the excellence of the organization, technical and otherwise, that has been assembled there. On account of the large developments that have already been made in the Tennessee Valley, their engineers and others staffs are part of a going organization, experienced in the construction of dams and transmission lines to an extent not likely to be found in any entirely new project not yet completed.

GANO DUNN.

CAPACITY OF PROPOSED POWER SITES FOR PRODUCTION OF ALUMINUM

Mr. DUNN. We have in view power sites that are coming along to take care of the production of aluminum, in the meantime, between now and July 1, 1942, 2 years hence, which latter is the critical period. These are power sites that are already under construction. For instance, there is 30,00 kilowatts at the Nantahala development which is under construction.

Mr. TABER. That is not in T. V. A.?

Mr. DUNN. No; it is privately owned by the Aluminum Co. itself, which has several other sources of power, that it is developing with its own money.

Mr. LUDLOW. It is not Government subsidized in any way?

Mr. DUNN. No, sir. Then, there is another plant at Glenville, Tenn., with 30,000 kilowatts which is also under construction by the Aluminum Co. with its own money. That makes 60,000 kilowatts.

Then we looked to Bonneville, and between now and the expiration of the 2-year intermediate period there will be developed there 60,000 kilowatts. The Aluminum Co. is already building there an extension of its own aluminum plant. And Bonneville therefore, complies with the principle we have followed, namely, that instead of risking a brand new aluminum plant and a brand new power development at some new place, we confine ourselves to extending an existing aluminum plant and an existing power development.

After we take 60,000 kilowatts from Bonneville, 30,000 kilowatts from Nantahala, and 30,000 kilowatts from Glenville, or 120,000 kilowatts in all, there is a shortage of aluminum, as of July 1, 1942, of 60,000,000 pounds per annum. You may remember that the President's program for this extensive aircraft-production schedule provides for gradual increase in the number of airplanes that are made, accumulating up to a point where, on July 1, 1942, the rate per annum of producing airplanes shall reach ———.

Now, for that goal we are 60,000,000 pounds of aluminum per annum short, and there is no other place in the country where such advantageous power arrangements can be made in connection with a going concern in the production of aluminum as the T. V. A. The principal plant of the Aluminum Co. is there. These other private power plants under development by the Aluminum Co. are near there, and it is natural, therefore, to look to T. V. A. for this power increase. Moreover, if we go to T. V. A. under these circumstances we have a case where the water power is cheaper than ordinarily to develop. I have long been opposed to Government water powers, and I think Mr. TABER may remember hearing me speak against Government water powers here in Washington about 2 years ago.

Mr. TABER. I did.

Mr. DUNN. You remember?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

VALUE OF HOLSTON RIVER DAM

Mr. DUNN. And here am I, talking in favor of Government water power. The reason for this is, first, that it is a matter of national defense; and second, this is an unusual situation for a water power, because the storage that will be created by this Cherokee Dam on the Holston River is at the top of a series of dams. It is the topmost storage on the stream, and therefore the storage created by it will not only energize the 90,000 kilowatts that it is proposed to put at its own dam, but 90,000 more kilowatts down the river as that storage water falls over some of the other dams, like the Wilson and Pickwick Dams.

Mr. TABER. Well, that depends.

Mr. DUNN. No, sir; it does not depend. It is absolutely so.

Mr. TABER. It depends on to what extent your storage enables you to increase the normal flow of the stream.

Mr. DUNN. That is right; it does depend on that. And the storage from the Holston Dam is such that in addition to the 90,000 kilowatts that it will energize at Holston, it will energize 90,000 other kilowatts down the river, at the Pickwick and Wilson Dams.

Mr. TABER. You are getting a very considerable portion of that anyway. The only thing you would lose would be what you could hold back during the flood time.

Mr. DUNN. If the Holston Dam was the last dam downstream, you would not get any of it. That is the thing I am pointing out.

Mr. TABER. Well, you would not get any increase on your other dams.

Mr. DUNN. No; you would then get only what your Holston Dam develops. By having the Holston Dam at the top of the series of dams, you not only get the power from the Holston Dam, but you get the increase that that storage gives to the other dams that it goes over.

The CHAIRMAN. It equalizes the stream flow?

Mr. DUNN. That is right. It equalizes the stream flow. I have no hesitation in recommending this particular water-power development, because those are the facts.

Mr. TABER. You mean that none of this water would come down in such a way that it could be used except for storage?

Mr. DUNN. Yes, sir. In other words, all the storage water that comes down adds to the effectiveness of each dam that it goes over; or, to put it the other way, if the Holston Dam was alone, if there was only one dam across the stream, the way most of the water powers in the country are, you would only get 90,000 kilowatts out of it, and no more. Here you not only get the 90,000 kilowatts out of it, but 90,000 more down the stream, and the appropriation that is here asked for covers both of those sets of 90,000 kilowatts.

Mr. O'NEAL. Can that additional power be utilized for the purpose of the manufacture of aluminum?

Mr. DUNN. That is the program.

Mr. O'NEAL. But will the other dams be available for that purpose?

Mr. DUNN. Yes, sir. The whole thing is connected into a network and used in the program for aluminum production.

NORMAL GROWTH WOULD ABSORB INCREASED POWER PRODUCED

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. What would you propose to do with this power if the war should end?

Mr. DUNN. The rate of growth of consumption in the T. V. A. Valley is rapid. The T. V. A. capacities are now overloaded. They are called upon for more power than they can easily deliver, and the rate of growth of the community down there is such that it would only take a few years completely to absorb it in the event the war requirements were removed.

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. In other words, it would not be lost if the war was lost?

Mr. DUNN. Oh, no.

Mr. LUDLOW. You mean there would be such an influx of new industries down there?

Mr. DUNN. There would be the large normal growth. In the 2 years between now and July 1, 1942, the rate of public consumption of power in Knoxville, Chattanooga, Nashville, and those other cities that are now supplied by T. V. A. is estimated to increase so that 50,000 kilowatts more power will be required for this increase alone.

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. Will private industry absorb this power if the war should cease?

Mr. DUNN. A large part of it.

Mr. TABER. After awhile?

Mr. DUNN. Yes; after awhile. But if by "private industry" you mean the public consumption of power in these various municipalities, it will absorb 50,000 kilowatts of it in any event in the next 2 years. While we are approving an increase of 300,000 kilowatts in installed capacity that is not the net amount of power that we are approving. The actual net amount of power that we will get out of that 300,000 kilowatts of installed capacity is about 220,000 kilowatts.

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. In any event, will private industry get the benefit of this development?

Mr. DUNN. By "private industry" do you mean manufacturing concerns and residential users living in the valley?

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. Yes.

Mr. DUNN. Yes; they will.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Dunn, you subscribe, then, to this statement by the Tennessee Valley Authority in connection with the supplemental appropriation for 1941:

"Should the emergency period end in the near future, the power capacity made available by this program will be absorbed within a few years by normal growth in demand."

Mr. DUNN. I do, fully.

RELATION OF INCREASED POWER PRODUCTION TO ADDITIONAL DEFENSE FUND RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Dunn, is there any relation between this necessity for increased power and the additional defense recommendations that are presently coming before the Congress? We are advised through the public press that we will probably get a very large additional request for defense items.

Mr. DUNN. I think, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Stettinius can answer that.

Mr. STETTINIUS. Yes; it all is a part of a coordinated whole, in that the plane production, and specifically aluminum, and the powder production that are contemplated to be financed through this approximately $5,000,000,000 request that you will shortly receive, are all part of the program, and are in proper relation to it. The chemical plants, the ammonium and other plants, and the aluminum plants must be served by this power increase.

NEED AND VALUE OF EARLY COMPLETION OF HOLSTON RIVER DAM

Mr. DUNN. There is another reason for haste, which is not as urgent as the reason that I have previously dwelt upon. The reason that I have previously dwelt upon is what I called the "trigger action" of getting this great dam finished in order to fill the reservoir with the spring floods of 1942. It is a case where 2 or 3 weeks lost may mean a year lost. That is unusual. There is a speculative element in it. You cannot tell. We are short of time already and the year may already be lost; but if on account of a short delay now, a year is lost, we will be held responsible by the public when the time comes, and Congress will be held responsible by the public when the time comes.

Mr. LUDLOW. What time limit do you give yourselves on the completion of this program?

Mr. DUNN. July 1, 1942, for the hydro, and December 1941 for the steam.

I think I know what is in Mr. TABER's mind, and I can show him to his complete satisfaction that in this case the building of this Holston Dam is the equivalent of building two dams, because on account of upstream storage you get 2 kilowatts for 1—for every kilowatt that that dam itself delivers.

Mr. TABER. For every kilowatt that the storage adds to your down-creek production of power?

Mr. DUNN. Exactly. That is exactly it.

Mr. TABER. But not the other way?

Mr. DUNN. I did not say in what other way.

Mr. TABER. You said that every kilowatt that dam produced would add just as much down the creek.

Mr. DUNN. It does.

Mr. TABER. It only adds what it increases the average flow of the creek as a result of your increased storage to your down-creek proposition.

Mr. DUNN. That is right. I did not mean to say anything else than that. This is a huge storage reservoir.

Mr. TABER. How big?

Mr. DUNN. Very large. I understand it is about the size of the Norris Reservoir. It is a very large one, and at the time when the flow of the river is very, very small practically all the water that is released from that dam is storage water.

Now, my original figures, when I was expert of the Nitrate Commission before the war showed that the Tennessee River, which had no dams on it at that time, was good only for about 50,000 kilowatts at minimum flow, and because each dam put upon it stores and increases that minimum flow, the great power that is now developed there is possible. The actual power from the run of the stream at Holston Dam is very small. Its principal power comes from its storage capacity in low-water time.

Mr. WOODRUM. A million four hundred thousand acre-feet?

Mr. DUNN. I am not familiar with the figures.

Mr. TABER. That is approximately 60 percent of the Norris.

Mr. DUNN. But here is the point: If that dam were not there, then all the water that it stores—I am now using "storage" in the limited sense—would be absent from all the other dams down the stream.

* * * * * * *

Mr. WOODRUM. Is there anything else that you want to say to us before we ask Mr. Lilienthal to come up to the table?

Mr. DUNN. I do not think so, except to say again that I would like Mr. TABER to verify the statement that the last time he heard me talk I was attacking the Government policy; that I was saying steam power was cheaper than water power, and that I was saying everything I could say against everything that I am now recommending.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Willkie himself was a Democrat up to 2 years ago.

Mr. DUNN. I would like to read a statement by Mr. Willkie into the record. Here is what Mr. Willkie said on that subject on June 15, when this proposal was presented in a memorandum to the President. On June 12 it was presented, and it became public, without our knowledge. The reporters went ahead and saw Wendell Willkie, expecting to get a grand slam from him against doing this thing. I will quote from this newspaper interview of June 14, in a Scripps-Howard paper. This is what Mr. Willkie said:

"Nothing is more important than defense, and there is nothing which might and will mask more political logrolling than the flag-waving variety of national defense. But if some impartial group, the United States Army or its engineers, for instance, do say that the completion of these dams is a link in our national defense, the dams should be completed and as rapidly as those charged with our defense think necessary."

That is a quotation from Mr. Willkie.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is a patriotic statement.

Mr. DUNN. Yes. He said an impartial board, and I think I can submit that men like those associated with the National Defense Commission are an impartial board.

NEED FOR INCREASING FACILITIES FOR PRODUCTION OF ALUMINUM

Mr. WOODRUM. Do you wish to say anything further in reference to the aluminum shortage?

Mr. STETTINIUS. There is a shortage of aluminum, and I can tell you that we must increase our aluminum facilities as rapidly as possible to meet the plane program.

Mr. WOODRUM. There is nothing like an adequate amount of power for carrying on this work in connection with the national defense.

SUPPORT GIVEN BY INDUSTRY AND GOVERNMENTAL AGENCIES TO NATIONAL DEFENSE COUNCIL

Mr. STETTINIUS. That is true. I might add, Mr. Chairman, that the support we are getting from the President, and all the way down throughout all the agencies in Washington, is most encouraging and most inspiring. I include Congress in that statement, of course.

Mr. LUDLOW. Do you see anything in the expanding national-defense preparations to indicate that the Government may be infringing upon free private industry too much, or that it is likely to do it?

Mr. STETTINIUS. No, sir. I think there are many emergency expenditures that should be made by the Government for facilities that should be owned by the Government. I might mention the vast expenditures for the item, for instance, of armor plate, which will approach $20,000,000. That, of course, will never be used in peacetime, and my recommendation is that the plants we build be owned by the United States Government. If necessary, they could be leased to private companies for operation, with the title remaining in the Government of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, private industry everywhere is interested in the national defense.

Mr. STETTINIUS. That is correct. The Commission is getting full support from industry on all sides, and we are getting the full support of the Government agencies in Washington. Particularly, I would like to go on record as to the magnificent cooperation we have been receiving from the Army and Navy.

Mr. LUDLOW. As a member of the committee, I am heartily in favor of this proposition, but if it were not in a time of emergency you would not be in favor of the Government engaging in the power business?

Mr. STETTINIUS. No, sir.

Mr. DUNN. Neither would I.

Mr. STETTINIUS. Mr. Dunn is an expert in the field of power. I am not an expert in the field of power, but I subscribe to everything that Mr. Dunn has said in his testimony.

SCHEDULE FOR PURCHASE OF EQUIPMENT

Mr. DUNN. Before I conclude, I would like to mention that in this letter of July 1, from which I have taken the high spots, there is one point bearing on the time required to get this work started, on which I have not dwelt. With these huge expenditures that Congress has been providing for, the industries of the country will be filled with orders. Therefore, it is of the greatest importance, particularly with respect to steam machinery, that the orders for the increased T. V. A. equipment be placed promptly while there is a place for them in the factories. In order to place those orders promptly, negotiated contracts are much more desirable than competitive bidding, because of the long time necessary in providing for competitive bidding.

* * * * * * *

INCREASED ALUMINUM PRODUCTION

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. How many pounds of aluminum will this produce annually?

Mr. DUNN. The amount that T. V. A., with this increased power, will produce, is 60,000,000 pounds of aluminum, of which we are short.

NEED FOR EARLY COMPLETION OF HOLSTON RIVER DAM

Colonel PARKER. I just want to emphasize the importance of the date of beginning this job; that is, in order to fill the reservoir in the spring of 1942, as is contemplated, and just to get the whole benefit of the thing, we have to get it done before the spring high water, and it is already projected to start almost immediately this summer, so as to get it done before the spring high water. If we actually miss that, it means the thing goes over another year before you can fill it.

Mr. WOODRUM. You mean by that the time is so important that the question of days or weeks would make a difference?

Colonel PARKER. Well, we certainly should actually start it some time next month—actually move in there with our construction force. If we do not, we run a serious chance of not being able to fill it. Of course, we can always concentrate and increase our force; but, in order to guarantee that, we ought to start right away.

Mr. DUNN. May I add a word to what Colonel Parker has said?

Mr. WOODRUM. Certainly.

Mr. DUNN. I want to differ with him somewhat with respect to the urgency of starting this work. There are liable to occur accidents, there is liable to occur bad weather, there are liable to occur delays, and we may have such a glut here in the supply of machinery and other things, before the contract is let, that we feel we have a speculative problem ahead of us. If, for instance, there is a few weeks' delay now—we are already late in starting it—I do not think his organization can complete this water power in 20 months; I think he is underestimating it; therefore, in the Defense Commission, we feel we should lose no time whatever, because something might go against us, and this is a case where a few weeks mean a lot, as I know. In fact, we may already be too late. My firm has built many water powers. It built three of the water powers now in the T. V. A.—Ocoee No. 1, Ocoee No. 2, and Ocoee No. 3. Every once in awhile we get caught with the appearance of spring floods earlier than expected, and then it is impossible to close the dam. We should not take the risk when the defense of the United States is at stake and, if we do take it and lose, we will all be subject to criticism.

COST AND VALUE OF STEAM PLANT

Mr. WOODRUM. Is there anything else, gentlemen?

Mr. TABER. About this steam plant, you state here it will cost you $10,500,000, and it is to take about how long to complete?

Colonel PARKER. Eighteen months. We originally had that down as completed in December, but that was a month ago. It would now not be completed before the middle of January 1942.

Mr. TABER. That is about a year and a half?

Colonel PARKER. About a year and a half from now.

Mr. TABER. Now, that is supposed to produce 120,000 kilowatts?

Colonel PARKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. TABER. Why would not we be better off to do something like that, than to go ahead with the large development of that water proposition, where the cost of the power runs into more money?

Colonel PARKER. There are a number of reasons, sir. In the first place, the over-all cost of the power with hydro development is slightly less, because the cost of operation is so much less; but, in preparing the schedule for the total requirements of some 300,000 kilowatts, we thought, in the first place, we should diversify that in order to avoid getting into difficulties along some one line of endeavor, in an emergency. In the first place, we believe if we should put all of that effort into steam capacity, under present conditions the equipment would be more difficult to get.

That is because there has been so much development by utilities of steam power plants during the last year or two, so that the manufacturers are considerably congested with orders for that kind of equipment, and it is easier now to get hydroelectric equipment. It is ordinarily true you can build steam faster than hydro; but I live down there, and we can put in hydro just as quickly as we can put those additional units in existing stalls, and the hydro storage set-up is a distinct asset to our system and to the Government in any event. But we do think this combination of those two things is really the best plan and avoids getting into difficulties and obstacles along some one line.

Does that answer your question?

Mr. TABER. Well, I just do not understand why we should go ahead with this $65,000,000 development when, for much less money, we could go ahead and put in what we are going to need in the line of steam plant.

Now, here is your trouble: When you get all through, if you have a surplus of power you can lay up your steam plant without any particular cost, except deterioration; but with the water plant you have a great lot more capital tied up in what you have to lay up by five or six times.

Colonel PARKER. Of course, the steam plant, when it is operating full load, will burn about 1,400 tons of coal a day, and that is an awful lot of coal to mine and carry on those railroads down there, and that sort of thing. There is a limit to what you can do in that direction.

Mr. TABER. Why have not you contemplated putting the steam plant right near the coal mine?

Colonel PARKER. It will be put as near the coal as is possible and still get on a source of water supply, which is equally important. It probably will be put right near all of our major reservoirs and as near to the coal fields as we can; but that means 1,400 tons of coal a day, which is a great deal of coal.

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. Mr. Engineer, why do not you go out in West Virginia and locate one of these electrical outfits? They have coal there; you do not even have to go under the earth to get it in some places.

Colonel PARKER. Another thing is that this particular steam plant is designed not to run continuously. If it had to run continuously and burn all that coal every day, it would cost very materially more than our hydro-generated energy. It is intended to supplement our existing hydro plant and to operate only perhaps 25 or 30 percent of the time; so that it will, in that way, be a relatively economical development. But if we were to overdevelop it, to build more of it than could be taken care of by our present system, or to develop, as the gentleman says, without relation to our present system, it would cost the Government a great deal more—probably twice as much—as water-generated energy does at the present time.

Furthermore, I do not think it is going to be possible in this emergency to get the delivery of very much steam-generating equipment. I think that is going to be a serious difficulty. Do not you agree with that, Mr. Dunn?

Mr. DUNN. I am sure it will; and, unless the orders are placed promptly, they will lose their place in rank in the factories.

Colonel PARKER. Last month we had a quotation from the Westinghouse Co. on a steam turbo generator, and they gave delivery as 14 months. It has now gone up to 16 months, with the lapse of 2 or 3 weeks, and next month I hesitate to think what it will be. We are right at the point where, if we delay any longer, it is going to be almost impossible to get the steam equipment that we can do this thing with.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at, the conclusion of the further remarks of the gentleman from Alabama I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short address.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York is recognized from 10 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to apologize to the gentleman from Alabama who has just spoken. I would have been glad to have let him continue except for the fact that I am scheduled to catch a train, and trains do not wait. That is the only reason I had to insist on taking this time now.

My remarks will be on the same subject as that on which the gentleman from Alabama has been speaking, national defense. I propose to put into the RECORD some information that I think all Members of the House should have and will want to have before they leave here today, before they see their constituents, and before they make up their minds whether they want to support a bill for universal military service. I propose by the information I am about to put in the RECORD to explode a myth that has been built up so carefully—that the American people have been given to believe—that the volunteer system has broken down completely and that the armed forces of America, particularly the Regular Army, have been unable to secure their quotas.

I have received a letter dated today from The Adjutant General of the Army, General Adams, which shows specifically that every quota for the Regular Army has been lived up to, and that they do not expect any difficulty in securing the total number of 375,000 in the Regular Army, as prescribed by the Congress of the United States.

However, everyone I have heard speak about universal military service has said that we must have universal military service because our volunteer system has broken down. This myth should be exploded, and Members of Congress, Republicans or Democrats, who have not yet made up their minds, should study these figures. They will find in every instance where the General Staff, or The Adjutant General following the advice of the General Staff, has established certain quotas over a certain period of months, that those quotas have been lived up to on every occasion.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD at this point a letter from The Adjutant General of the Army showing the figures and giving the full number of volunteers in the Regular Army up to the present date.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

JULY 11, 1940.

Hon. HAMILTON FISH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. FISH: In compliance with your telephone request to General Ulio, I am pleased to inclose figures on the strength of the Army and information concerning our recruiting program.

The Chief of the National Guard Bureau has been requested to furnish you with the desired information concerning the National Guard.

Very respectfully,

E. S. ADAMS,
Major General, The Adjutant General.

Strength of the Regular Army, including Philippine Scouts

	Authorized strength	Actual strength
On July 1, 1939	171,415	174,079
Increase of 38,000 authorized by acts of Apr. 3, 1939, and July 1, 1939 (Bulletin of May 15, 1939, and Aug. 11, 1939), was allotted to corps areas on July 10, 1939, for procurement in monthly quotas and completion by June 30, 1940	38,616
Increase of 16,969 authorized by Executive order of Sept. 8, 1939 (Bulletin No. 18, War Department 1939), was allotted to corps areas on Sept. 17, 1939	16,969
Strength to be reached by June 30, 1940	227,000
On Oct. 30, 1939, instructions were issued to the Recruiting Service to accelerate recruiting and the strength which was to have been reached by June 30, 1940, was obtained by Feb. 7, 1940	227,000	227,986
Increase of 15,000 was allotted to corps areas on May 16, 1940, for procurement by June 30, 1940	15,000
Increase of 38,000 was allotted to corps areas on June 19, 1940, for procurement by Aug. 31, 1940, June quota	3,413
Strength to be reached by June 30, 1940	245,413	246,949
Remainder of 38,000 increase to be procured by Aug. 31, 1940: 38,000—3,413	34,587
Strength to be reached by Aug. 31, 1940	280,000

The additional 95,000 increase to bring the Army to a strength of 375,000 has not yet been released to the Recruiting Service for procurement.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ANDREWS. I would be interested in knowing what The Adjutant General reports as to the number of volunteers in the Regular Army.

Mr. FISH. He says that the estimated strength of the Regular Army, including Philippine Scouts, on July 10, 1940, is 252,000. He further says that they expect to have on August 30, 1940, 280,000, and that the 95,000 additional authorized to bring the Army to its strength of 375,000 has not yet been released to the recruiting service for procurement. Naturally, if they have not asked for these volunteers, they do not have them; but they have not opened for enlistment this extra 95,000, and, according to the figures, they have filled every quota they have asked for. From this record, I cannot see how they can anticipate failure in the future.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. In view of what the gentleman has stated, what is the reason for this demand on the part of the President for compulsory military training and drafting of that kind?

Mr. FISH. That is what I cannot understand. I could understand if the volunteer system had broken down and we could not raise enough recruits to fill our full quota in the Regular Army of 375,000 that possibly we might need a quasi or a partial conscription system, or a partial universal military service system.

I happen to be bitterly opposed to universal military service in time of peace. [Applause.] I would advocate it in time of war if it were necessary in defense of America, but as a peace measure, when the volunteer system has not broken down, I cannot conceive why we should need it in America when we have the greatest Navy in the world and one that is increasing in comparison every day as the other navies are being destroyed. We are also building up a huge air force, and very properly so, and we have now increased our Army and are getting the recruits according to the quotas as established. The reason I am opposed to universal military service in this country is that I believe that is the war system. I believe it is the European war system that creates wars in Europe and will continue to create them just as long as they have such universal military service, because it does away with all peace elements and leaves nothing but a great armed camp, an armed nation, a huge military machine which eventuates into a Frankenstein. Then some dictator comes along and presses a button, and that nation marches off to war. The wage earners and the farmers have nothing whatever to say. There are no peace elements left. They are educated and trained and they go forth when some dictator, whether it is Hitler or Mussolini or someone else—and we might have the same kind of man in America—presses the button and the whole country goes to war.

So I do not believe, unless we have a war and it is necessary, in importing this vicious, European war system into America, that turns us into an armed camp and does away with our traditions of a volunteer service and makes war in the minds of those peoples abroad inevitable and natural.

This is what I found on my trip abroad. This is what I found in Germany and it is what I found in France. There were no peace elements at all. They were trained to arms. They were an armed camp and they thought that war was inevitable and, naturally, asked "Why not now?" They were armed, the enemy was armed, and they were ready for war and therefore why not go forth to war.

I do not want that war system and that militarism and that autocracy brought over here to free America unless we have to have it in time of war in defense of our country.

Mr. KELLER and Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin rose.

Mr. FISH. I would like to yield, but I have not the time.

I now want to say a few words in answer to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN]. The President of the United States, Mr. Roosevelt, was elected to office the same year that Mr. Hitler was in Germany. In 1933 they took over power. At that time there was practically no army in Germany.

Hitler built up a huge army, equipped it with all the modern weapons, and turned his country into a gigantic military machine. The President had full knowledge, through his agents over there, his Ambassadors and his counselors and his military attachés and his naval attachés, of exactly what was going on while Germany was building up this huge military machine, but nevertheless the President did not act and made no recommendation to the Congress until in recent years, until Germany was fully armed, utterly ignoring what was transpiring in the rest of the world, with the net result that our Army today, at this present moment, is totally unequipped in modern weapons, in antiaircraft guns, in tanks, in antitank guns, in mechanized machines and mobile armament and all the modern weapons of modern warfare. We are totally and wholly unequipped, and who is responsible more than anybody else? The Commander in Chief of the Army, the President of the United States, and not the Congress of the United States. The President had all the advantage of this information. He is the Commander in Chief and it is his duty to inform the Congress and insist upon proper armament. I agree that we have a great Navy. I give him all the credit he deserves and I give the chairman of our Naval Affairs Committee all the credit that he deserves for having the greatest and most efficient Navy in the world.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 2 additional minutes to answer the questions of certain gentlemen here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GORE). Is that agreeable to the gentlemen who have special orders following the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am agreeable to that, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman from New York be permitted to proceed for 2 additional minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the gentleman will yield to me?

Mr. FISH. I will yield to both gentlemen. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia now.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman not find himself in an inconsistent position in condemning the administration for its failure to take account of what has been happening in Germany, when the condition here is the result of the same sort of counsel the gentleman has been giving the House and the country in his present appearance upon the floor? In other words, he is not preaching pacifism, but he has been resisting urge to arms because of what has been happening in Germany.

Mr. FISH. Oh, the gentleman is giving me credit for too much power if he thinks I can control the President of the United States.

Mr. COX. Are not the failure of France, the collapse and ruin of France, and the weakness of England the result of listening to the same sort of counsel that the gentleman has himself been preaching to the House?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman is criticizing me because I am opposed to universal military training in time of peace, that is his privilege, but I repeat that I am opposed to universal military service as long as the volunteer service can work out in America. As far as armament for National Guard and the Regular Army is concerned, I have always been for it, and I have been for modernizing the Army for mechanized units and for an adequate air force. That is one thing. I am not criticizing today the size of our Navy, though sometimes I think we have too many airplane carriers, weapons of aggression which in my opinion we do not need, but I am not discussing that. I am discussing my opposition to universal military service and that I believe in a voluntary system. I shall put in the RECORD the War Department figures, and I say further that if we had had universal military service 6 months ago, I think this country would have been in war today.

I have always stood for adequate national defense, but I do not believe in hysterical defense or turning this country into a gigantic military machine in time of peace. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request again for 2 minutes additional for the gentleman from New York so that I may ask him some questions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules of the House the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] should be recognized.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is agreeable to me to let the gentleman from New York have 2 minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman believe that 375,000 men in the American Army, including the Philippine Scouts, are sufficient?

Mr. FISH. That is what the Congress of the United States says.

Mr. KELLER. I did not ask the gentleman that. What does the gentleman think about that?

Mr. FISH. I think in addition to the 400,000 in the National Guard and with our Reserves, making a total of about 800,000, that is adequate and sufficient, because I do not believe with the greatest Navy in the world, no matter what happens to these other navies—and, mind you, they will have to have a navy three times larger than ours to dare to attack us—that they could ever land in America 50,000 troops, and if our 800,000 troops could not liquidate 50,000 foreign troops in a few weeks time, before they could go back and bring any more, then we better give up anyway. And let me say further, that although I happen to be just like anyone else here, a Member of Congress, still at the same time I also happen to be a colonel on the General Staff, and I have been assigned to go out to the maneuvers of 130,000 troops next month as an umpire in maneuvers. I think I know something about the Regular Army, and I am convinced that our National Guard and the Regular Army, amounting to about 800,000 men, when the full complement is secured, will more than take care of all of the national defense that we need, when we have the greatest Navy and a large air force.

Mr. KELLER. One more question. The gentleman says that he is against universal military service in time of peace. I have a bill before the House at the present time along that line, to which I will call the gentleman's attention and I also call attention to the fact that when war comes is no time to train an army and unless we provide for a reserve army, our present system is nonsense.

Mr. FISH. Oh, I think the gentleman is confused. This country is over 3,000 miles from Germany, and it is not Holland, it is not France, it is not Belgium, and I think before war comes we will have plenty of time to train any sized army that we want, and I say to the gentleman from Illinois and also to the gentleman from Georgia, what I have preached in this House and will continue to preach is that this country should keep out of all foreign wars. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered for today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes after the disposition of the pending special orders.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate a brief newspaper article in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short newspaper article.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. THILL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOLMES]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEMKE, Mr. SMITH, and Mr. SNYDER asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I have just made and to include therein certain extracts referred to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article by David Lawrence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. YOUNGDAHL]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I must say I was beguiled by the remarks of my good friend from Alabama because it brought to mind an incident in the life of Abraham Lincoln who once suggested to a man this question. He said, "If you should call a sheep's tail a leg, how many legs has the sheep?" And the man with avidity replied, "Five." Lincoln stated, "No; four, because calling a tail a leg does not make it so."

May I say to my good friend from Alabama that calling the Republicans to account for their derelictions in national defense, according to the record which he cited, does not make it so. Let us look at the proof. In 1930, 1931, and 1932 the administration under Herbert Hoover appropriated $707,500,000 for national defense. Just bear that in mind. In 1932–33 they appropriated $667,000,000. In 1932 there was an election. In fact, it was a debacle, and then came our good friends over on this side. They came here pursuant to a great, dynamic personality and to a platform. That platform provided for national defense, after a careful survey, because the President of the United States had informed the people everywhere that our defense program was going up to $1,000,000,000 and that something must be done about economizing. So what happened? When all you good and lovely folks over on this side came down here to assume the reins of responsibility what did you do? In the first year of your stewardship, in 1933–34, you cut the defense program to $479,000,000. What did you do in 1935? You cut it to $523,000,000. Now, my good friend from Alabama, what have you to say about that record? We were going to the country with a defense program and were way up to $700,000,000 and more, and you come and cut it to the level of $500,000,000, or a net curtailment of about $375,000,000 for a 2-year period.

In view of the attack leveled against the Republican Party for its alleged derelictions on national defense, perhaps it is just as well to document the statement which I just made to the membership conncerning the Democratic plank of 1932 concerning national defense, and so I submit the following plank taken from that platform as recorded on page 147 of the official proceedings of the Democratic National Convention of 1932. It reads as follows:

> We advocate a Navy and an Army adequate for national defense, based on a survey of all facts affecting the existing establishments that the people in time of peace may not be burdened by an expenditure fast approaching a billion dollars annually.

May I also, in connection with these observations, submit to the membership a very illuminating article by that well-known student and publicist, Mr. John T. Flynn, which appeared in the Washington Daily News as of July 10, which deals with this very situation and which is very illuminating?

PLAIN ECONOMICS

(By John T. Flynn)

NEW YORK, July 10.—The day does not pass that someone in Washington does not blame someone else for America being defenseless. In fact, almost every day some Democratic statesman rises to damn the Republicans for opposing the President's armament plans.

And now former Navy Secretary Edison uncorks a blast that Congress was responsible for the slowness of naval expansion and the lack of proper facilities to that end.

Now, as a matter of fact, there is a little history here worth repeating. In 1931–32 the Hoover administration appropriated $707,500,000 for national defense and in 1932–33 provided $667,000,000. But this seemed a tremendous menace to the Democrats.

In the platform of 1932, on which the President was elected, appeared a plank declaring for national defense but only on a careful survey of all the facts in order "that the people in time of peace may not be burdened with an expenditure fast approaching $1,000,000,000 a year."

In other words, the expenditures of President Hoover, which never got beyond $707,000,000 in a year, seemed a menace to the Democrats and they pledged themselves to protect the people from the growing burden.

Now, of course, a candidate runs on his party's platform without approving everything in it. But in this case Mr. Roosevelt, running for President, read this plank with approval—singled it out—in several of his national addresses during the campaign. I am informed by men who were then on the inside that he wrote that plank and had it put into the platform.

To make good on that pladge, one of his first acts was to cut defense appropriations to $479,000,000 in 1933–34 and $533,000,000 in 1935. Thus, 2 years after Hitler came into power, the President himself whom many consider a militarist was holding defense expenditures below the Hoover level. Now the Democrats, who denounced the Republicans for spending too much on national defense, are denouncing them for not spending enough.

This is recalled, of course, not in support of either the Democratic or Republican position, but merely to emphasize the amount of purely political twaddle that makes its way into this talk.

Now as to Mr. Edison. Back in 1937 Senator BONE—who has bitterly opposed the administration's policy of foreign meddling, but has believed in the defense of this country—introduced a bill for the immediate expansion of Government arsenals and for the creation of a huge stock of jigs, dies, tools, and machine fixtures sufficient to tool up private plants in case of emergency. He recognized then that the machine-tool industry—at that time idle—was a bottleneck.

This bill went to the Army and Navy, where it was turned down. Private industry, they said, could take care of the situation if an emergency arose. Now, it appears neither private nor Government facilities are adequate to arming this country in less than several years.

But that is not what I rose to speak about today. I know there is some discomfiture and some discomfort of mind on both sides of the aisle because of the earlier action of the House, or a Member of the House, in refusing to grant unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill involving $65,000,000 of over-all expenditure. I say for myself, as I said to the gentleman of Virginia, that I would not object because in all my tenure in the House I have never objected to the consideration of a measure at any time. But there are some facts that I believe ought to be brought to attention. The first one is this:

The 27 pages of hearings on this bill disclose that none other than Wendell Willkie on the 14th of June 1940 made a statement regarding the use of these additional dams. Is it not singular that Mr. Willkie knew all about this almost a month ago? I did not know about it until yesterday. I went to the Appropriations Committee yesterday afternoon to procure a copy of the hearings. They were not yet in print. I never saw the hearings until 11 o'clock this morning, but Mr. Willkie knew about it a month ago and it was in the press a month ago. Is it fair on the eve of a great convention to come along and ask us to grant unanimous consent to consider a bill involving $65,000,000, when the members of the Appropriations Committee outside of those who are on the deficiency subcommittee never saw the hearings, never saw the bill, and never saw the report until 11 o'clock this morning?

After all, Mr. Speaker, national defense often covers a multitude of sins, and I think we can afford to be cautious in the light of a rather exasperating and delinquent record in the last war. Let me cite something from the Chamberlain report. This is a report prepared after the last World War by Senator Chamberlain of the United States Senate during the Sixty-sixth Congress regarding the military efficiency of the country. These are some of the facts and data that were adduced.

Our Ordnance Department spent $4,000,000,000 between April of 1917 and June of 1918 to fabricate 20,000 guns of all calibers. Why, the Civil War cost less than the amount that was allocated for guns. Only 133 guns of a single caliber and only 600 shells of a single caliber ever got to General Pershing in time to be used in the World War. With that kind of a record before us in the last generation, do you not believe it behooves us to be a little bit cautious?

Further, the War Department ordered 20,000,000 hand grenades, because they were not satisfied with the simple grenades that were being used over on the other side. So what did they do. Not being satisfied with hand grenades that were actually being effectively used, they ordered 20,000,000 that were rather complicated, and not one of those hand grenades got to General Pershing in time to be used in the World War by our forces.

We spent $1,000,000,000 for aviation in 1917 and 1918. There was not a single American pursuit or combat plane that actually got over there that was effective. A few observation planes got to France.

I soldiered in the Tours, the Toul, and the Nancy sector, where they had an air concentration camp known as Colombey La Belle. I used to mess around with the aviators because in those days I was in the balloon service. We used to go out together, and they referred to these planes as suicide crates and flaming coffins. I remember being at a camp down at St. Lazaire when every morning they called the roll and asked for volunteers for the day bombing squad and the night bombing squad. We used to kid each other as to who was going to be killed that particular day. That was the record after we expended $1,000,000,000 in 1917 and 1918.

We spent $116,000,000 for gas to make our chemical warfare service effective, and General Pershing got every pound of gas that was fired by the American troops in France in 1917 and 1918, according to the Chamberlain report.

The Congress appropriated money to build three picric acid plants and seven phenol plants, and all of them produced exactly nothing that was made in time to get over there for effective use in the course of the World War.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. What does the gentleman say about the gas? Where did we get it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. From the Allies on the other side.

Mr. REED of New York. The gentleman did not say that.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I thought I said that. We got it from the Allied Powers.

We had a plan for an army of 4,000,000 and 86,000 horses, and this, to me, is one of the ironies of our preparation for that war—that we were going to provide for 86,000 horses and here is what some of the experts at the other end of the Avenue bought to caparison and equip 86,000 horses: First, 50,000 sets of double harness, 110,000 sets of single harness, and then they bought 945,000 saddles, or 11 saddles for every horse. [Laughter.] Then they bought 2,800,000 halters, or 33 halters for every horse; 1,500,000 horse brushes, or 18 brushes for every horse, to make sure they were properly manicured before they went into action. Then they bought 2,000,000 feed bags, or 24 bags for every horse. Then they bought 1,000,000 horse covers, or 12 covers for every horse. I may say to you that when I was a horse officer, with a battery in France, I never saw a horse cover. I do not know what happened to them.

Then we bought 195,000 copper branding irons, or 3 branding irons for every horse, and I never saw one of those branding irons on those horses whose backs were galled and seared with mustard gas and chlorine gas.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TERRY. My friend, who is a balloonist now, was in the horse marines during the war, and while he is going back into past history and bringing up the 1917–18 situation, will he not go a little further back and tell us whether they also got some embalmed beef as they did in 1898, under a Republican administration?

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I say, just for the clarity of the RECORD, I landed over in France as an artilleryman and was subsequently assigned to the balloon service as an artillery observer.

Mr. TERRY. I am sure the gentleman was a most excellent soldier.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ANDREWS. I just want to inform the gentleman that Mr. Willkie was in France.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON. Some of these figures that the gentleman has given here no doubt are ridiculous, and no one, of course, would want to defend them, but does not the gentleman think that he ought to point out that if the war had gone on 4 or 5 years longer—and no one knew in 1917 or 1918 how long it would go on—we might have utilized a lot of those airplanes and a lot of the other things that the gentleman has been talking about?

Mr. DIRKSEN. They started out with plans for 86,000 horses as the maximum and 4,000,000 men, and then they proceeded to order 33 halters for every horse.

Mr. MAHON. I am not talking about the last war. The gentleman has talked about airplanes and other matters of that sort, and as the gentleman knows, you cannot get just as many of those things as you will need, because you do not know when a war is going to be over.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Is not that the very best reason why we should exercise the utmost of caution before spending millions upon millions of dollars so we may be sure that the American taxpayer gets a dollar's worth of value for every dollar that is expended?

Mr. MAHON. We ought to cut the red tape and exercise all the care and caution we can.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. What the gentleman means is that at the present time he would like to see them use a lot more horse sense than they used in 1917 and 1918?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me go a little bit further, gentlemen, because while this appears ridiculous, yet it is terribly serious when you stop to consider its implications.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the distinguished gentleman, the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. MAY. As I understand the situation, when the debate started it arose over the question of taking up the proposal to authorize $65,000,000 for the T. V. A.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is correct.

Mr. MAY. Now, in view of the fact that we have appropriated and are planning to appropriate about $10,000,000,000 for national defense, and that the President has been allocated $200,000,000 to use as he likes, why would it not be a good idea, in view of all of the financial situation that confronts us, that he take this $65,000,000 out of that $200,000,000 and let them go ahead with this work?

Mr. DIRKSEN. There is a persuasive point in what the gentleman from Kentucky says.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It may be a persuasive point, but the gentleman from Illinois and the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] would be two of the first gentlemen on their feet to criticize the President for taking money given to him under a blanket authority and putting forth a project of the kind suggested, without coming to Congress and saying something about it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And I say frankly to the gentleman that I would exercise my responsibility as a Member of this House to criticize if I felt so disposed.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Do I understand the gentleman from Virginia, who is chairman of an important subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, to say that the President is going to come back to Congress to see how he shall spend these $200,000,000?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I said that, if the President should undertake to expand the T. V. A. out of the emergency funds that we have given him, the gentleman, and I think quite properly, would be the first to object if he undertook to build a dam without getting congressional approval—if he did that, my friend would be one of the first to criticize.

Mr. MAY. I might not criticize, but I would oppose it.

Mr. TABER. Then, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I would even propound the suggestion that the President does not have authority with the funds given him to go ahead with the T. V. A.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I think my time is about exhausted and with the permission of those who have subsequent orders I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes. Is that agreeable to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. BENDER. It is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And also agreeable to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. POAGE. It is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. There are one or two other items that I wish to emphasize. The next one is that we spent $1,200,000,000 for the building of cantonments all over the country. I lived in one of them for quite a while, and I rather fancy, in view of the fact that they were built on a cost-plus basis, with the contractor sort of writing his own ticket, that there was a tremendous waste and extravagance which might have well been saved to the American taxpayer with the exercise of caution. We spent $50,000,000 on spruce for airplane manufacturing, and yet 92.6 of all of the spruce actually used was obtained independently of the spruce project, on which we spent $50,000,000, and finally we spent $10,000,000 on narrow gage and other types of railroads with which to haul this spruce to market, and those railroads were never used.

In the light of that record I submit that we can very properly proceed with caution as we undertake to expend large sums, because the chances are that with a little more time to look into the matter, to develop the record further, the Congress will do a real service to the people of the country. I emphasize again that it is rather funny that in the RECORD should appear the comment of the Republican candidate for the Presidency of the United States as early as June 14 on the establishment of additional dams and the building of additional dams, when we as the Congress were not advised on the point in particular until yesterday and today. Mr. Willkie's statement regarding this matter was entirely unbiased and statesmanlike. It was what might be expected from a real American.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. PATRICK. Is there any concrete evidence available that any group or section or assembly of individuals have inspired this other than those who are interested in national defense?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, I do not believe there is any partisanship or sectionalism in this. I think every Member of the House is big enough to sublimate every bit of provincialism and partisanship he possesses in the larger cause of national defense, but here is a thought that occurred to me in connection with the proposal.

They said it would be 2 years before the Cherokee Dam could be built, and then Gano Dunn also testified, and you will find it on page 14 of the hearings, that maybe the extra year in catching the spring floods is already lost, and, if that is the case, it will be 3 years before the dam could be completed, and we could avail ourselves of the power.

He testifies, also in the hearings, that it will take only 18 months to complete a steam plant. We can build steam plants in any part of the country. We can be absolutely sure that its efficacy and completion is not contingent upon an act of nature or anything else, not upon flood waters or anything else, to make it a producing instrumentality whereby aluminum may be provided for the plane program that is now in contemplation. Under those circumstances, with a probable cost of eleven and one-half million for each plant, developing 120,000 kilowatts of firm power, it persuades itself to reason and sound judgment that perhaps we would be better off to take all this money and spend it for steam plants rather than take a chance on a dam which may not be in operation for 3 years or more, according to Mr. Gano Dunn himself, because he recognizes that contingency if we do not catch the floods in the spring of 1942.

Mr. MAY. To that may be added the fact that it has been demonstrated in a number of ways that electricity can be produced by coal at a steam plant cheaper than it can be produced by hydro.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes, and there are figures to establish that fact.

Mr. PATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. PATRICK. But what was attempted here was to get this particular subject before the House for discussion, when all of that could be brought out intellectually and developed and any argument that could be produced for this steam business could be put forward. I will concede there is a lot in its favor by reason of its coming sooner, but what was attempted was to get the measure before this House to be developed and discussed, and not to determine how it should be voted on.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I fully agree with the gentleman from Alabama. I do not set myself up as steward of the action of any Member of this House. I did not oppose consideration of the matter.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Just to keep the record straight, I would like to remind the gentleman that the Budget estimates for this development of T. V. A. came to the Appropriations Committee just before the Congress adjourned for the Republican Convention. It was considered in the Senate. They held hearings on it and it was put in the deficiency bill, but because there had been no hearings at all the House conferees, of which the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and myself and others were members, felt there should be hearings. So it has been before the committee and before the Congress for some weeks.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But it was not actually presented to the attention of the House.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It was not presented to the House.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think the gentleman from Virginia will agree that so often supplementary messages that come up here from the White House for additional appropriations are very meager in their content and do not always give full indication of what the issue is that is involved.

It is one thing to delay and another thing to exercise that degree of prudent supervision over huge expenditures of public funds which the taxpayers of the country expect the people's representatives to assert in connection with every appropriation.

There is not one single Member of the Congress who is disposed to delay the present program. Not a single Member of Congress is insensible to the present need of expeditiously expanding the defense establishment of this country. There is not a single Member of Congress who does not appreciate the need for diligence and proper speed in pursuing the preparedness program which has been shaped to fit the needs of the country.

But, by the same token, there is not a single Member of Congress, be he Republican or Democrat, who would pledge himself to sacrifice proper caution in attempting to make certain that the people of this country will have a defense system which is stable, durable, and efficient, and which was contrived with a minimum of waste. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6884) entitled "An act to encourage travel in the United States, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9877) entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate and to put into effect charges for electrical energy generated at Boulder Dam, providing for the application of revenues from said project, authorizing the operation of the Boulder Power Plant by the United States directly or through agents, and for other purposes," be recommitted to the committee of conference.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 582. Joint resolution making an appropriation to enable the United States Maritime Commission to establish the marine and war-risk insurance fund.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the foregoing joint resolution, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 458. An act extending the benefits of the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act of May 24, 1928, to provisional, probationary, or temporary officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard who served during the World War.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees without amendment to concurrent resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H. Con. Res. 73. Concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of the proceedings at the unveiling of the painting depicting the signing of the Constitution of the United States as a document; and

H. Con. Res. 86. Concurrent resolution providing for an adjournment of the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress.

MARINE AND WAR-RISK INSURANCE

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 582) making an appropriation to enable the United States Marine Commission to establish the marine and war-risk insurance fund, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the House joint resolution.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 10, after "hereunder", insert "and all such expenses shall be certified by the Chairman of the Commission in each case as necessary and reasonable."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have been over this amendment and it simply places a restriction upon the way that funds for experts and that sort of thing may be spent, and it requires the Chairman of the Commission to certify to the need of those things. I believe the amendment is desirable and should be adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BOULDER CANYON PROJECT ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 9877) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate and to put into effect charges for electrical energy generated at Boulder Dam, providing for the application of revenues from such project, authorizing the operation of the Boulder power plant by the United States directly or through agents, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9877) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate and to put into effect charges for electrical energy generated at Boulder Dam, providing for the application of revenues from said project, authorizing the operation of the Boulder Power Plant by the United States directly or through agents, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments.

KNUTE HILL,
J. W. ROBINSON,
CHAS. HAWKS, JR.,
Managers on the part of the House.

KEY PITTMAN,
HIRAM W. JOHNSON,
ALVA B. ADAMS,
HENRY F. ASHURST,
CHAS. L. MCNARY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9877) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate and to put into effect charges for electrical energy generated at Boulder Dam, providing for the application of revenues from said project, authorizing the operation of the Boulder Power Plant by the United States directly or through agents, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate recedes from its amendments.

KNUTE HILL,
J. W. ROBINSON,
CHAS. HAWKS, JR.,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman tell us what this is about?

Mr. HILL. The conference report was agreed to by the conferees of the Senate and the House. The Senate receded on their amendments, and it was passed in the Senate.

Mr. MICHENER. The Senate did recede, and the minority members on the conference are agreed to this report?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I want to get some information. Is this power that is being sold at the Boulder Dam being sold by the Government at the switchboard or is it sold after being distributed over power lines to the direct consumer?

Mr. HILL. The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] probably can answer that better than I.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. The power is being sold at the switchboard by the Government. The charge is based, as I understand it, upon the value of falling water for power production, but is measured at the switchboard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 4119) to provide for the transfer of certain land in the De Soto National Forest to the Secretary of War for use for military purposes.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a bill which has passed the Senate. A similar House bill has never been considered by the House committee to which it was referred. Ordinarily this is not a desirable way of bringing up legislation. I understand, however, that the Department of Agriculture has no objection to this transfer, and that there is some necessity for prompt action. In view of the fact that no appropriation is involved and there seems to be no objection, I am not going to object at this time; although it seems to me that, generally speaking, this is not the proper way to legislate.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, did the gentleman take the matter up with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], the minority leader, before he left?

Mr. COLMER. In response to that I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that I did discuss this matter with the minority leader, I did discuss it with the majority of the members of the Agriculture Committee, and there is no objection to it at all. The minority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], agreed that the matter might be considered today and said he had no objection to it.

Mr. MICHENER. Personally, I do not believe in bringing bills up this way that have not had consideration by the House; and were it not for my great respect for the gentleman whose bill it is and for the fact that the minority leader has agreed that it might come up, I would object, but I shall not.

Mr. COLMER. I thank the gentleman for both his compliment and his cooperation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon request of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to transfer to the Secretary of War, for military purposes, such tracts of land, not in excess of 65,000 acres, contiguous to the Camp Shelby State Military Reservation, Miss., and now included within the limits of the De Soto National Forest, Miss., as the Secretary of War may select: Provided, That in the event the area transferred pursuant to the provisions of this act shall cease to be used for military purposes, it shall revert to its former national-forest status.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANDREWS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein a brief resolution adopted by the Lions Club of Waxahachie, Tex.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

TO ENCOURAGE TRAVEL IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. LEA submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 6884) to encourage travel in the United States, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6884) entitled "To encourage travel in the United States, and for other purposes", having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment to section 1 of the bill and agree to such section as it was passed by the House and the House agrees thereto;

That both Houses agree to the balance of the bill as passed in identical form by both Houses;

That said section 1 of the bill as agreed to by the conferees, following the enacting clause, shall read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed, through the National Park Service, to encourage, promote, and develop travel within the United States, its Territories and possessions, providing such activities do not compete with the activities of private agencies; and to administer all existing travel promotion functions of the Department of the Interior through such Service."

CLARENCE F. LEA,
A. L. BULWINKLE,
CHAS. A. WOLVERTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

HATTIE W. CARAWAY,
THEO. G. BILBO,
A. H. VANDENBERG,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6884) entitled "To encourage travel in the United States, and for other purposes," submits the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The bill, as it passed the House, authorized the National Park Service "To encourage, promote, and develop travel within the United States," etc. The only Senate amendment provided for insertion of the words "to and" before the word "within."

The Department of State questioned the propriety of this amendment on the theory that it might be inferred that the National Park Service was to conduct activities in foreign lands and with relation to other nations. No such purpose was intended. There was no desire to conduct such foreign service or duplicate the authority of the Department of State as to international relations. To obviate any misunderstanding of the act it is deemed advisable that the Senate amendment should be eliminated.

The Senate recedes from its amendment, which leaves the bill exactly as passed by the House.

CLARENCE F. LEA,
A. L. BULWINKLE,
CHAS. A. WOLVERTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6884) to encourage travel in the United States and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the conference report?

Mr. LEA. The Senate added one amendment to the House bill. In conference the Senate receded, on objection of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. MICHENER. As the matter now stands, therefore, we are just reaffirming the action taken by the House when it passed the bill originally.

Mr. LEA. Exactly.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain what the amendment was? I notice it was a very short amendment.

Mr. LEA. The amendment from which the Senate receded consisted of the words "in and." These words are stricken out.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. That was in order to get travel from foreign countries headed our way? I rather favored that amendment, especially now that Europe is closed to travel.

Mr. LEA. Those words that referred to travel to the United States were eliminated from the bill.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Perhaps it will cost less to center our efforts upon our own people. No country has more—or as much—to offer our travelers as has America. I trust that this measure will greatly stimulate our See America First movement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] yield to permit me to submit a unanimous consent request to address the House for 1 minute?

Mr. BENDER. I have yielded to a great many requests, but I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, within the past 24 hours I have circulated among the Democratic Members of the House a statement urging the reelection of President Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1940. The statement was circulated on the floor of the House and in the cloakrooms. Members from States having favorite-son candidates for the Democratic nomination were not asked to sign. No effort was made to obtain more than a few signatures from any one State delegation. In this brief space of time and limited canvass 77 Democratic Members of the House indicated their desire for the reelection of President Roosevelt. We hope and pray that President Roosevelt will heed the call of his countrymen from every section of the Nation and continue his able and inspired leadership of our domestic and foreign affairs, strengthen our national defense, and keep our country out of war. He can perform each of these difficult tasks better and more successfully than any other man living in America today. [Applause.]

The statement referred to and signatures appearing thereon are as follows:

REELECT FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT IN 1940

"Social Justice and Economic Security."

"Preserve American Democracy—National Defense Against All Foreign and Domestic Enemies."

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama prompted me to ask for this time. I recall rereading the Democratic campaign book of 1932 only about a month ago, in which the Republican administration was criticized for its "wasteful, extravagant expenditure of funds for defense purposes." The Democratic administration in this House at that time had been in power for 2 years and since 1932 the present administration, and the New Deal party, has been in overwhelming control of both Houses of Congress, if there is anything to complain of the gentleman should reexamine the record of his administration and of both Houses of Congress during the past decade, because his party has been in power during all this time.

In the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama, the question was raised whether or not the present incumbent of the White House made reference to universal military training. There was a loud denial that the President had made any reference to that matter. This is in line with denials that have been made as the result of the publication of a statement a year ago attributed to the President in which he was alleged to have said that the "new frontiers of America were on the Rhine." After that statement attributed to the President by the American press was made it did not go down so well with the American people, and there was a loud denial on the part of the membership of the House and new dealers generally that the statement had been made.

Then some time later the American press attended a conference at the White House, and there was a certain reference made, and it must have been made, because all the newspapers of the Nation carried a story regarding that conference. The statement at that time which was attributed to the White House was "that Congress should adjourn; that there was no further need of Congress remaining in session," and because that did not go down so well with the American people, the leadership on the floor of this House denied that any such expression had come from the White House.

I recall only a week or two ago a statement was credited to the White House calling for universal service, not only on the part of the men and boys of the country but of the girls of the country as well. Now, apparently because that has not met with great favor, there is denial that any such reference had been made. It seems to me that consistency is a virtue, and that it is essential we keep the record straight and call attention to these statements that are handed out to the press by the White House, then because they are not so well received are denied by his fellow partisans on the floor of the House.

The T. V. A. subject has been referred to by every speaker since the gentleman from Virginia discussed that matter in connection with defense. Only last week I received in my mail a beautiful booklet from the Florida Ship Canal Authority asking that we revive that project, and it was labeled a national-defense measure. I would not be a bit surprised if they did not come in one of these days and ask that the Florida ship canal be built for national-defense purposes, even though the experts say it will take about 6 years to complete. The mail is flooded every day with letters from housing authorities all over the country asking that we give them more money for housing for national defense. In connection with this T. V. A. project they ask us for $68,000,000 when there is plenty of power available now at Bonneville that could be used for all the manufacture of aluminum that is needed.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON. If the gentleman will read the hearings he will find that the last statement about power at Bonneville will not be sustained. Mr. Knudsen, Mr. Stettinius, and Mr. Dunn, all of whom are Republicans and have been for years, say that this dam ought to be constructed in the interest of national defense and constructed immediately.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, all we ask is the opportunity to read the hearings. We understand the printed copy of these hearings was made available only yesterday. By our action here today we ask the time to read the hearings. My impression is that at Bonneville there is plenty of power available for that purpose. I talked to a Member from that State and he so informs me.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 5 additional minutes so that I may answer questions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SOUTH). Without objection on the part of gentlemen who had previously arranged for time or any other Member, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Knudsen did not attempt to say anything about this power proposition. All he attempted to say was there was a need for aluminum. Mr. Stettinius based all he had to say on a recommendation from Mr. Dunn. Now, there are things in that statement that do not go with the statement made by Mr. Carter, Chief Engineer of the T. V. A., as to the value of that dam. My own idea is that that should be pretty thoroughly developed before we spend another $36,000,000.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. ANGELL. I thank the gentlemen from Ohio. The gentleman mentioned Bonneville, which is in my district. The fact is the dam itself at Bonneville has been completed a long time ago and is now available with the water behind it to generate the full capacity of the plant, 518,400 kilowatts. The generators themselves for all the power units have not been installed. The first two units will have 86,400 kilowatts and an additional two will have approximately 100,000. So it would seem to be a matter of good judgment, the dam being already completed and the water being available, to complete that project and put in the additional units and not wait 2 years to build dams at another project which have not yet been begun. I might add further that an aluminum plant is now being erected by the Aluminum Co. of America in that vicinity to manufacture aluminum for this purpose, and all the facilities may be made available to utilize this power for national defense if additional generators are installed.

Mr. Speaker, as I have said, units 1 and 2 of the Bonneville project are now in production and produce 86,400 kilowatts a year. Two additional units, 3 and 4, under the speed-up program recently authorized by this Congress, will be completed by January 1, 1941, which will make the combined production 194,400. In addition, units 5 and 6 are under way by appropriations made by this Congress and contracts for generating machinery are already let, which will make the combined production of 300,000 kilowatts by June 1, 1942.

There are still four units provided for in this project, which could be installed at once, which will bring the total production of the Bonneville project to 518,400 kilowatts. An aluminum plant is now being constructed in the Bonneville area, and additional plants may be installed or the capacity of the one now under construction increased so as to utilize all of the power which will be available for that purpose. It should be understood that a portion of this power must be reserved for other uses as provided in the Bonneville Act.

In view of the fact that urgency is a factor for defense purposes, it would seem a matter of good judgment for this Congress immediately to authorize the construction of the remaining four units at Bonneville, as the dam is already completed. Under the program for T. V. A., which we considered today, the reports disclose that it would take at least 2 years, and possibly 3, to complete the dam. In addition to the power generated at Bonneville, Grand Coulee will go into production and bring in 300,000 kilowatts by the end of 1941. Transmission facilities will be available within a month to bring 100,000 kilowatts of this power when generated into the Portland area, which could be utilized in connection with aluminum plants there to take care of any shortage in power needed for national defense. Speed is paramount, therefore, regardless of what may be done at T. V. A. Bonneville should be completed to full capacity at once.

Mr. BENDER. I thank the gentleman for his contribution and for his confirmation of my statement.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is it not a fact that this new dam is to furnish power for the aluminum monopoly, and that this very same aluminum monopoly for which our New Deal Democratic brethren are now fronting and which they bitterly denounced in past years, has sufficient money to build steam or hydroelectric plants to generate the electricity which is necessary for the operation of their aluminum plant?

Mr. BENDER. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

We have already spent over $386,000,000 for the Tennessee Valley Authority. The Tennessee River flows through five States and drains the entire Nation. In that connection, I wish to say that it was a former Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Castle, I believe, who said:

> Our finances are in a deplorable state. We must not further injure them by going into an ill-considered program of military expansion.

It seems to me that in view of our internal condition, in view of our present financial condition, when you break down the financial structure of the Nation you break down national defense in our first line of defense. I say that is more essential than anything else. When you create a condition where you appropriate millions of dollars and hand out money by the bushel basketful, as we are handing it out for the Tennessee Valley Authority, without considering it, then it is a serious situation. You are asking us to put this bill through like a cat goes through a dog show, just as you pass most of the bills the White House has sent down here for consideration. Every time the White House sends a bill down here the "rubber stamp" Congress shoots it through. Yet they complain about a lack of national defense.

I will say to the country and to the Members of Congress that if it had not been for the Republican minority, along with an intelligent part of the majority which went along with them during these past 2 years, this country would be in a much worse condition than we find ourselves in today. [Applause.]

I wish to call attention to a statement made by an expert, Colonel Lindbergh. Colonel Lindbergh is an expert; in fact, one of our committees of the House called him here and listened very attentively when he spoke regarding our national defense and the condition of our country. This is what he said:

In times of war and confusion it is essential for our people to have a clear understanding of the elements upon which our national safety depends. Aviation has now become one of these elements, and it is about the air defense of America that I speak to you tonight.

The power of aviation has been greatly underrated in the past. Now we must be careful not to overrate this power in the excitement of reaction. Air strength depends more upon the establishment of intelligent and consistent policies than upon the sudden construction of huge numbers of airplanes.

Even here in America, it is difficult to think clearly amidst the conflict of facts and headlines, the contradictory advice of columnists, the claims and counterclaims of propaganda, and the blind selfishness of party politics. The conservative who scoffed at aviation yesterday has become the radical who says that tomorrow we will be invaded by European aircraft.

Let us reexamine the position of America in the air. New discoveries and developments affect nations in different ways. In Europe aviation has affected England adversely and Germany advantageously. One nation may have a psychology and topography which promote the development of aviation, while another finds itself entirely unadjusted to the tempo of the air.

OUR POSITION FORTUNATE

Judged by aeronautical standards, we in the United States are in a singularly fortunate position. Our people have natural ability in the design, construction, and operation of aircraft. Our highly organized industry, our widely separated centers of population, our elimination of formalities in interstate travel all contribute to the development of American aviation. From the standpoint of defense, we still have two great oceans between us and the warring armies of Europe and Asia.

In fact, there is hardly a natural element contributing to air strength and impregnability that we do not now possess. Aviation is for us an asset. It adds to our national safety. With a firm and clear-cut policy, we can build an air defense for America that will stand above these shifting sands of war.

But until we have decided upon a definite policy of defense, the mere construction of large numbers of aircraft will not be adequate for our national safety. In fact, without a strong policy of defense, we will not even know what types of planes to build.

The speed and range of our fighting planes must depend upon the bases available for their use. If we are to defend the United States alone, then we must construct numerous air bases along the Mexican and Canadian borders. Such a plan would require large numbers of small bombers and pursuit planes, and eventually it would leave us as vulnerable to air attack as the nations of Europe are today. On the other hand, if we are to defend the entire Western Hemisphere, we need long-range bombers capable of attacking a hostile fleet a thousand miles or more at sea. But there is little use discussing types and numbers until a defense policy is established.

SEES ISSUE ON HEMISPHERE PLAN

This brings us to an issue which must sooner or later be faced. An adequate air defense of the Western Hemisphere necessitates the cooperation of the other nations of this hemisphere. Our military aircraft must have access to their bases. Their foreign policy must have some relationship to ours. We cannot hold this hemisphere free from foreign war if nations which lie within it declare war on foreign powers.

Let us not be confused by this talk of invasion by European aircraft. The air defense of America is as simple as the attack is difficult when the true facts are faced. We are in danger of war today not because European people have attempted to interfere with the internal affairs of America but because American people have attempted to interfere with the internal affairs of Europe.

It is true that bombing planes can be built with sufficient range to cross the Atlantic and return. They can be built either in America or Europe. Aeronautical engineers have known this for many years. But the cost is high, the target large, and the military effectiveness small. Such planes do not exist today in any air force. A foreign power could not conquer us by dropping bombs in this country unless the bombing were accompanied by an invading army. And an invading army requires thousands of small bombers and pursuit planes; it would have little use for huge trans-Atlantic aircraft.

THE ADVANTAGE LIES WITH US

No, the advantage lies with us, for great armies must still cross oceans by ship. Only relatively small forces can be transported by air today, and over distances of a few hundred miles at most. This has great significance in Europe, but it is not an element that we have to contend with in America. Such a danger can come, in any predictable future, only through division and war among our own peoples.

As long as American nations work together, as long as we maintain reasonable defense forces, there will be no invasion by foreign aircraft; and no foreign navy will dare to approach within bombing range of our coasts.

Our danger in America is an internal danger. We need not fear a foreign invasion unless American peoples bring it on through their own quarreling and meddling with affairs abroad. Our eyes should not search beyond the horizon for problems which lie at our feet. The greatest lesson we can draw from Europe today is that national strength must be built within a nation itself and cannot be achieved by limiting the strength of others.

What of the unforseen developments of science? Rocket propulsion? New forms of energy? New methods of destruction? No generation can entirely safeguard the future for those that follow. They must meet their own problems as those problems arise. The greatest inheritance we can pass on to our children is a reasonable solution of the problems that confront us in our time—a strong nation, a lack of debt, a solid American character free from the entanglements of the Old World.

CRITICIZES NATION'S RECENT COURSE

Let us guard America today as our forefathers guarded it in the past. They won this country from Europe with a handful of revolutionary soldiers. We certainly can hold it now with a population of 130,000,000 people. If we cannot, we are unworthy to have it.

But the course we have been following in recent months leads to neither strength nor friendship nor peace. It will leave us hated by victor and vanquished alike, regardless of which way the tide of battle turns. One side will claim that we aided its enemies; the other, that we did not help enough.

To be successful in modern warfare, a nation must prepare many years before the fighting starts. If anyone doubts that, let him turn his eyes to Europe. Years ago we decided to stay out of foreign wars. We based our military policy on that decision. We must not waver now that the crisis is at hand. There is no longer time for us to enter this war successfully. The result of vacillating policies lies clearly before us in the chaos of Europe today.

Let us turn again to America's traditional role—that of building and guarding our own destiny. We need a greater air force, a greater army, and a greater navy; they have been inadequate for many years. Let us form with our neighboring nations a clear-cut and definite policy of American defense. But above all, let us stop this hysterical chatter of calamity and invasion that has been running rife these last few days. It is not befitting to the people who built this Nation.

SAYS NO ONE WANTS TO ATTACK US

That the world is facing a new era is beyond question. Our mission is to make it a better era. But regardless of which side wins this war, there is no reason, aside from our own actions, to prevent a continuation of peaceful relationships between America and the countries of Europe. If we desire peace, we need only stop asking for war. No one wishes to attack us, and no one is in a position to do so.

The only reason that we are in danger of becoming involved in this war is because there are powerful elements in America who desire us to take part. They represent a small minority of the American people, but they control much of the machinery of influence and propaganda. They seize every opportunity to push us closer to the edge.

It is time for the underlying character of this country to rise and assert itself, to strike down these elements of personal profit and foreign interest. This underlying character of America is our true defense. Until it awakes and takes the reins in hand once more, the production of airplanes, cannon, and battleships is of secondary importance.

Let us turn our eyes to our own Nation. We cannot aid others until we have first placed our own country in a position of spiritual and material leadership and strength.

[Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech by William Harman Black.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SOUTH). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

STILL FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Still a further message from the Senate, by Mr. Baldridge, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 8372. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Chester, Ill.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 3046. An act to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939; and

S. 3097. An act for the relief of Katherine M. Drier.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE] is recognized for 10 mintues.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I had not expected to trespass upon the time of the House today. I had thought, and I still think, that we should be doing more work and less talk. I am afraid we are getting too much talk into our program of national defense. However, since at least one Member of the minority party saw fit to make it impossible for this House to work this afternoon, there is nothing left for us to do but talk. I felt that it might not be amiss, since one member of the Republican Party preferred that we should not work this afternoon, for me to talk about the problem that confronts us and the importance of taking prompt action.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] eloquently suggested a few moments ago that during the World War we spent billions of dollars for matériel, for implements of war, and for ammunition and guns, that did not arrive on the front until after the armistice was signed. We all recognize the truth of those statements. However, he failed to call attention to the fact that we won the war in 1918. We won the war because we were building everything that was necessary to carry on a war, no matter how long it might last.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. Surely.

Mr. MAHON. Would not the gentleman also express the hope with respect to all the vast sums that we are spending now for armament, that such armament may never be used in a war; that we may use our military machine to prevent war rather than utilize it in actual combat.

Mr. POAGE. Exactly; I feel that is the hope and the desire of every Member of this House—as we arm that we do so not for the purpose of carrying on war, but that we arm for the purpose of preventing the necessity of every engaging our troops and our equipment in war.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Is it not true that the very tactics employed by the minority today will produce exactly the same effect in the event a war should come upon us now that was produced in the World War; that is, we did not start our preparation in time, and the very delay we put in the way of one of these projects now simply means postponing into the future by that much the time that we may be prepared to defend ourselves.

Mr. POAGE. As I see it, the tactics now pursued by a number of minority Members of this House, and as I understand it, the proposal as suggested by my good friend from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] that we should delay—forever delay—to pursue that policy today would be a thousand times more dangerous than the policy we pursued in 1917 and 1918, because war moves with lightning quickness today, far faster than destruction ever moved in 1917 and 1918. We will not have 2 years to prepare now as we had at that time. We must make preparation more rapidly than we made preparation in 1917 and 1918.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HAWKS. I would like to remind my good friend that nobody on the minority side is sticking a dagger in anybody's back.

Mr. POAGE. The gentleman has not heard me refer to sticking a dagger in anybody's back. Does the gentleman mean to infer that he has heard me make any such remark as that?

Mr. HAWKS. No; but I heard the eminent leader of your party talk about it one day on the radio.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. Just a minute.

Mr. SPARKMAN. May I ask if the gentleman from Wisconsin differs with the President in that statement?

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I am not yielding to anybody because I want to get this straight here. When the gentleman from Wisconsin talks about sticking a dagger in anybody's back, the President of the United States referred to the leader of a totalitarian government. If the gentleman of the minority seeks to put himself in that class, if he would proclaim that the minority party of this country stands for that kind of government, then I will be glad to say that the remark belongs to him and all who follow those practices. For my part, neither I nor the President has ever suggested that any party in this great country falls in that category, and may God grant that the day will never come when the great Republican Party will espouse the practices in this country that we have seen engaged in by the leaders of the totalitarian states. If the gentleman feels that he wants to lead his party into that kind of government then, certainly, I would say without hesitation that every man—Republican, Democrat, Socialist, or Communist—who would seek to pervert our form of government into the form of government of which President Roosevelt spoke was definitely sticking a dagger and a six-shooter in the back of free government everywhere.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. My good friend from Texas is always very fair, and I hope he will not put into my mouth words that I did not use, when he states that I embrace a policy of delay, delay and continuing to delay.

Mr. POAGE. Possibly, I should not have said "continuing," and I will retract the "continuing."

Mr. DIRKSEN. I did not object to the consideration of the bill today.

Mr. POAGE. The delay and delay, however, I will let stand. I understood the gentleman to say that he felt it was wise to delay; that while he would not object, he felt it was the part of wisdom to delay.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman never heard me say that I objected to the consideration of the bill today.

Mr. POAGE. The gentleman is right, because the gentleman specifically said he would not object, but am I not correct in stating that the gentleman suggested it was wise to accomplish the delay that was accomplished today?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman heard me say that it is always wise to use caution in examining the expenditure of the people's money.

Mr. POAGE. And did not the gentleman intend to give the impression—if I am wrong I want to be corrected—that he felt it was a good thing that we did not consider the bill today although he himself would not have objected to it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I stand by the statement I have just made.

Mr. POAGE. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. POAGE. Did not the gentleman intend to give that impression?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; for my part——

Mr. POAGE. All right.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Wait a minute. Speaking for myself, I am not in favor of delay. I simply favor caution in the expenditure of money.

Mr. POAGE. But the gentleman did not think it was wise to take up the bill today?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I suggest that if you bring the bill back on the floor you will not hear me object to its consideration.

Mr. POAGE. No; we did not hear the gentleman object to it, but did he not give comfort to those who suggested that we should not take up a matter of vital national defense today?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That comfort was probably given to the Democratic side also.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is it not a fact that all of this quibbling about a Member of the minority preventing consideration of this so-called national-defense bill for the benefit of the Aluminum Trust is nothing but bunk. The New Deal has a preponderant majority in the House and on the Rules Committee, and if it was so essential for our national defense the bill could be considered in the House under a rule.

Mr. POAGE. And I have a good idea that the bill will be brought up under a rule, but the gentleman knows that there is no way to get it up today except by unanimous consent, and the gentleman knows very well that the majority that he speaks of did not raise any objection and the fact remains, philosophize as you may, that the objection was raised on the minority side of this House. But I don't want to speak simply of what was done today.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. No; I cannot yield. I am not now speaking of the minority Members only, but I am speaking of all Members, and I say that we must realize the importance of carrying on this national-defense program without any kind of delay. It is unfortunate that a great convention is about to take place just at this time, and it is also unfortunate that there was a convention just a week ago that took the time of this House. It is unfortunate that there should be anything that should stand in the way of the consideration of every bit of this defense legislation. I am not criticizing. I realize that the American processes of government must go on, and that it is proper and right that this country should make provision to carry on our free Government under the two-party principle that we have long followed, and that without that two-party principle in this country we would not have the great free Government that we do have.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that as soon as the gentleman has concluded I be permitted to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair informs the gentleman that there are two others who have been granted time.

Mr. PATRICK. Then may I get unanimous consent to talk when they get through?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas that he proceed for 5 additional minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. Yes.

Mr. PITTENGER. I would like to say in connection with the gentleman's comment about party conventions that it is my understanding that on the 22d there will be another 3-day recess, and after that, another, and that the party leaders do not plan to bring us back until July 29. Is that right?

Mr. POAGE. Certainly I do not know of any such agreement as that, and I would never be a party to such an agreement.

Mr. PITTENGER. Neither would I.

Mr. POAGE. I do not know what agreement anybody else has entered into, but I want the Members of this House to know that I am not going to be a party to any agreement to extend the inactivity of this House one day beyond the necessary requirements to carry on party government in the United States. I think that possibly we have gotten ourselves so close to the departments and to the slow processes of large governmental activities here in Washington that we fail to realize sometimes just how anxious the people at home are that we should proceed with every possible dispatch toward the preparation of the necessary armaments for this land. I think I am justified in calling to the attention of this House an incident that occurred to me last Sunday. I had flown home over the Fourth of July, and Sunday afternoon I went out to a friend's home. A number of people were there, all talking about the war, just like everybody else is talking about the war, all wanting to know what the Government is doing, just what everybody else wants to know, and wanting to know just what contracts are being let, just what dams and power were being provided to manufacture aluminum for airplanes, and what machinery and what airplanes and tanks are being turned out, and they asked me when consideration was going to be given to the next defense measure. I suggested that I had understood the Military Affairs Committee was going to have a meeting on Tuesday, and they almost as one man rose up and said, "Why wait until Tuesday? Why could they not meet this afternoon?"

I said, "Oh, it is Sunday. They do not meet on Sunday." They said, "Wait a minute. When this Nation goes to war the troops will march on Sunday the same as any other day." They said, "If there is no danger of attack, then why are you spending this money, and if we should be attacked, the attacking power is not going to wait until some convenient day to have some committee meet."

I think those questions were well taken. I think that we might well submit those questions to ourselves. I want to know why there should be any delay. I apply that to all of us—to myself, to you, and to all the rest. I want to see this Congress recognize that we are faced with an emergency—not an emergency as my colleague from Texas so correctly suggested that necessarily results in war, but we want to take action now, to take action before it is necessary to have this country go to war. I am firmly convinced that unless we take action to prepare ourselves, we are in danger of armed conflict. I am equally convinced that if we take adequate action immediately we may in all probability avoid any armed conflict.

So I rose to talk, when we could not work, with the idea of simply emphasizing the fact that we all know; that is, that we must not further delay. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute, with the consent of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, recently this House adopted three kindred or companion bills. I refer to the bill to deport Harry Bridges, the Walter bill, and the Smith amendments to the Labor Act. Those three measures are tied up now in the Senate. It very naturally arises as to the reason why.

Touching those three bills, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a short editorial appearing in a recent issue of the Washington News. Supplemental to that I ask unanimous consent to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a brief statement recently made by the metal-trades department, American Federation of Labor, on the question of national defense.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein a speech I delivered recently at Pottsville, Pa.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, for a number of years as chairman and member of Military Appropriations Subcommittee, I have insisted that warfare in the future would be carried on in armored vehicles on the ground and in the air and have urged military preparedness in that direction. For this attitude I have been criticized but I am glad to say today a changed attitude prevails and with a proper cooperation between military men and the mass-production enterprises of the country adequate machines can be had and with the training of men to operate them our Army can be transformed into the world's most effective military machine.

It is necessary, however, for us to know what we want and the types of weapons we will have to face in the event of an emergency.

The Chief of Staff, a very efficient officer, and his capable associates are making every effort to find out what other countries, including Germany, are doing, how it is being done, and the weapons that are used, and in this definite progress is being made.

Last week—I believe it was Wednesday—I was talking to Col. W. B. Smith, of the Office of the Chief of Staff, and in the course of the conversation he told me that a picture showing a good deal of Germany's equipment would be presented at 1:30 that day in the auditorium of the War Department, and that while the public would not be admitted, if I would come down at that hour he would see that I was admitted, so I went down and saw the picture. It was shown a number of times in the War and Navy Departments, and I am certain most of the officers stationed in Washington saw it.

The picture was of German origin and represented the German advance into Belgium and perhaps other countries. It showed planes dropping bombs, parachutists, large and small tanks, and the devices for wholesale slaughter, and brought to my mind the definite idea that if we do not prepare to resist this type of warfare our preparation will be futile and our country in a war will perish as have other countries that have clung to the military technique of the past. General Arnold, our able Chief of the Army Air Corps, who saw the picture when I did, told me he learned lots from the picture that he considered valuable to the Air Corps. Colonel Smith, a wide-awake younger officer, commented on the training of the men, the large number of mechanized weapons employed, and the helplessness of an adversary that did not prepare for this type of weapons. Another colonel whose name I do not recall, said he would like to see the picture shown at every Army post so that our officers would see first-hand what Germany was evidently doing in Europe. These were some of the comments I heard.

I felt that if it was safe for Army officers to see the picture—the men who must sacrifice their lives if war comes—and if they were of the opinion that they secured worth-while military information from the picture, that Senators and Members of Congress, who are responsible under the Constitution to maintain an army and navy, should likewise see the German intruments of slaughter and their operation so that they could help to prepare our defense against them. Accordingly, I asked Mr. Brown, of News of the Day, to give a showing to Senators and Representatives, believing when I did so that I was doing a real service to my country.

I then phoned the Speaker and the Democratic leader briefly about the film and the use of the caucus room for Friday night but was advised few Members would be able to attend, so it was postponed until Monday and later until Tuesday night. I had to be at home to vote on Tuesday, so I asked my friend the gentleman from Oklahoma, JED JOHNSON, to tell the Members it was a German news film. I also talked over the phone with the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE], a Republican colleague on military appropriations, about the picture.

That is the story.

If any Member of Congress has been offended, I am sorry. If, however, there are others who have been made to see the new dangers that lie ahead and are now more determined to so prepare our country that it cannot be overcome by a foreign foe, then I will gladly stand the criticism that may come to me. Our whole present-day defense program is predicated upon the information that has come to us during the last 2 months, and the information has come from foreign sources. There is no virtue in ignorance.

No one knows the intentions of a dictator. We have ample time to prepare in the right way, and we can know the right way if we know the technique of the adversary and the weapons employed by them. We must not bury our heads in the sand. Now is the time to see clearly, to think straight, and orderly remold our defense forces so that our Nation will continue to exist, if necessary by armed force, as a free people who know the blessings of liberty, equality, and the pursuit of happiness. The President correctly said in his defense message to Congress yesterday, "This Nation through sacrifice and work and unity proposes to remain free." [Applause.]

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I yield.

Mr. HINSHAW. As one of those who tried to serve his country in the World War and who spent a year of that time in France, I was very glad to have the opportunity to see this picture and to see the advances that had been made in the art of destruction, as it might be called, and to be able to realize more fully how important it is for us to do as the gentleman has so long advocated—completely mechanize our armed forces.

Mr. COLLINS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I know that the gentleman from Mississippi was a pioneer in advocating the mechanization of our defense forces. As a Member of this House who served our country 22 months overseas in the World War, I was very glad to receive the invitation to see the picture and observe the operation of mechanized war machinery. I saw the picture to which the gentleman refers. It brought me to a realization, as it did to many other Members, that we have to get away from "horse and buggy day" methods of defense and spend some money for many better mechanized units than those we saw in operation in that movie.

Mr. COLLINS. I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin; and I want to say to him that he is sitting by the charming wife of the late Chester Bolton, who worked side by side with me all these years in trying to provide this country with mechanized military weapons on the ground and in the air. [Applause.]

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I was much interested in and instructed by the picture to which the gentleman refers. While there obviously were propaganda parts to it, I feel I am capable of being exposed to propaganda without succumbing to it. I want to congratulate the gentleman for arranging the program, and I express the hope that he will arrange more in the future. I feel that we have had entirely too much secrecy and hush stuff about acquainting Members of Congress with what is going on in our own Government and in other governments, and I am delighted to see the gentleman take the lead in informing his colleagues as to what is going on in a military way or in a propaganda way on the part of foreign governments.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Permit me to say that I too saw the picture in question and feel that the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi rendered a real service to both Houses of Congress in arranging for its showing.

I desire to add that no man in America has made a greater contribution to the mechanizing of our armed forces than has the able gentleman from Mississippi. [Applause.]

THE REPUBLICAN NATIONAL CONVENTION

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, on last Tuesday week my lovable, distinguished, and able friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] was on the floor of this House and made a very fine campaign speech on behalf of Mr. Willkie—if one, of course, did not know the facts. At that time, without any intention on my part of becoming engaged in the inner councils of the Republican Party, I stated what I had read in the newspapers, that 100 good, decent colleagues of mine on the Republican side of this House had gone to Philadelphia in order to stop Willkie from receiving the nomination. That statement was challenged at that time by both the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and the equally able and distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER]. I would not take time to address the House now on this subject were it not for what the gentleman from Pennsylvania said at that particular time, and I quote him:

Mr. DITTER. I was about to make the observation that the information that my friend has here—like much of the information that he gives to the House from time to time is neither factual nor real. It is one of these hypotheses of the imagination upon which my friend here delights to found many of the observations that he usually makes.

Meaning myself—

I had read it in the newspapers and I had heard it over the radio. While I was home over the week end I made it my business to gather the facts, to see whether I was correct or not, because there were many things that transpired in the Republican Convention that did not concern me as a Democrat. But for the respect and regard I have for my colleagues on the Republican side of this House I was curious to find out what was going on.

I will take first the Philadelphia Record, which has a heading, "Stampede to Willkie stalled—One hundred G. O. P. Congressmen oppose him." Now, apparently I was right in my statement of July 2.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGRANERY. In just a moment. I will use a direct quote and perhaps save some of my fine friends from embarrassment. I will use a direct quote.

The Idaho Senator, Senator THOMAS, said, "I would not even attempt to run for reelection if the $75,000 a year Wall Street tycoon is the standard bearer. The public utilities have done enough damage to our party, the Republican Party, in the last 15 years."

One of the leaders of the "Stop Willkie Drive" would appear to be one Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS]. Following that they quote the gentleman from Wisconsin, Representative KEEFE, the gentleman from Minnesota, HAROLD KNUTSON, and the gentleman from Indiana, the home State of the very erstwhile candidate, FOREST HARNESS. They also quote the gentlemen from South Dakota, CARL MUNDT and FRANCIS CASE. There are some other quotations in here. So for the benefit of the RECORD, it might be well at this time to ask unanimous consent that this article be included in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McGRANERY]?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what paper is that?

Mr. McGRANERY. It is the Philadelphia Record.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. That is a Democratic paper owned by the multimillionaire, 100-percent new dealer, David Stern.

Mr. McGRANERY. The paper is owned by Mr. Stern, yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I asked the gentleman to yield awhile ago. He stated as a fact that 100 Members of Congress did a certain thing. He gets what he calls facts from that newspaper article. The gentleman does not mean to vouch for the truth of the statements made in that article, does he?

Mr. McGRANERY. I can only say to the gentleman that I am not on the inner councils of the gentleman's party. This has not been repudiated anywhere. I have not seen or observed in the Philadelphia Record or in any of these other papers where there has been a request by the National Committee of the Republican Party for a retraction of that statement.

Mr. MICHENER. Of course not. Does the gentleman vouch for the truth of the things he is asserting here and does he state that these newspaper articles state the facts?

Mr. McGRANERY. I vouch for them in that the paper is a reputable paper. Some of these papers are Republican papers, one of which I will quote from claims in its editorial to have been the first newspaper to come out for Willkie.

Mr. MICHENER. Let me ask the gentleman, did he make inquiry of the newspaper as to the authenticity of these articles concerning his colleagues before making this speech?

Mr. McGRANERY. Here is the headline.

Mr. MICHENER. I am not talking about the headline. Before you took the floor to present this matter, did you make inquiry of the newspapers to see whether the statements you are now making are backed up by the facts?

Mr. McGRANERY. I accepted them on the basis that more than 10 days have elapsed. It was stated in reputable newspapers all over the country and by reputable commentators on the radio, and there has been no refutation made. I took it to be the fact.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not believe the editorials can properly go into the RECORD under the rules of the House because, under those rules, we are prohibited from casting aspersions or reflections on a Member of the august body at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. McGRANERY. This has nothing to do with anything that transpired in that body. It is outside that body.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. This is merely a report from the Philadelphia Record, which is owned and controlled by the multimillionair, 100-percent new dealer, David Stern. In view of that identification, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McGRANERY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, I will now quote from the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, which the gentleman knows as a fact to be a most independent paper, not a Democratic paper, but a paper usually with Republican leanings. They say—

Congressmen act to stop Willkie. Bloc of 28 questions his views on trade pact in European war.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, so that the record will be clear, that this be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McGRANERY]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to inserting these articles in the RECORD with the gentleman's statement that he is making a political speech based upon clippings taken from Democratic partisan newspapers and that he has no personal knowledge as to the truth or falsity of the statements.

Mr. McGRANERY. I do not agree to that.

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman concedes that I will not object; otherwise, I shall be compelled to object.

Mr. McGRANERY. I do not agree to that statement. The gentleman will have to object, then I will read them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McGRANERY]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I object unless the gentleman states the fact, which is the fact, that he is making a political speech and the articles he is reading came from Democratic newspapers and that the gentleman speaking has no personal knowledge as to the truth or falsity of the articles which he asks to have inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. DINGELL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, why does not the gentleman from Michigan make the speech for the gentleman, and that would just save him so much time.

Mr. McGRANERY. The gentleman has been entirely incorrect. This is not a Democratic newspaper. The Evening Bulletin is not and never has been a Democratic newspaper.

Mr. HEALEY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman and to my friend the gentleman from Michigan that the articles appearing in the papers in Philadelphia which the gentleman has referred to and has read to the House appeared also in the New York and Boston papers. I read the same articles.

Mr. McGRANERY. They appeared throughout the 48 States of the Union.

Mr. HEALEY. They were to the effect that 100 Members of Congress were opposed to the nomination of the candidate.

Mr. MICHENER. The statement that 100 Members of Congress were there and were opposed is absolutely false. Anybody who knows anything about it knows that. Therefore, I do not like to put my good friend who is on the floor in the position of reading something which everyone familiar with the facts knows is incorrect. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is one of the outstanding Members of the House and he must not be deceived by newspaper propaganda.

Mr. McGRANERY. The gentleman may be sure that his good friend can rely on what he said and will stand on it.

Mr. McCORMACK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, without getting into this argument on the basics, I simply want to call to the attention of my distinguished friend from Michigan, who is one of the ablest and best-liked Members of the House, that it is very dangerous to impose conditions to a unanimous-consent request. I know the gentleman from Michigan realizes that more than I do. If the statement is not correct, in time the truth will assert itself. It is with a great deal of doubt and hesitation that I see such an outstanding Member of the House try to impose conditions upon another Member when he submits a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. MICHENER. The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts has a way of accomplishing the things he wants to, usually. Possibly my reservation is a trifle severe. After all it is possibly best to take notice that political newspapers carry political news stories and Congressmen make political speeches.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. McGRANERY. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that I offer this for the enlightenment of the Republican Members who have challenged this statement. It is perfectly all right. I have made my statement. If the gentleman does not intend to assert his objection properly and forcefully, I shall withdraw my unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. McGRANERY. I withdraw it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MICHENER. I object to his withdrawing it.

Mr. McGRANERY. Do either one thing or the other.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCORMACK. Whether or not a Member in the House has the right to withdraw as a matter of right a unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair believes the gentleman cannot withdraw it without unanimous consent.

Mr. McGRANERY. I will leave it up to the gentleman from Michigan. He can now object if he wishes. We are back to the status quo.

Mr. MICHENER. If I understood the ruling, it was that the gentleman from Pennsylvania could not withdraw his request without unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the gentleman can withdraw his request if he so desires.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order. The gentleman has offered to withdraw his request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a parliamentary inquiry cannot be made unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania yields for that purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield for that purpose?

Mr. McGRANERY. I do not yield, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGRANERY. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Since some of the gentlemen on the minority side have interposed such tremendous objection to this matter's being aired about the Congressmen objecting to the candidacy of Mr. Willkie, and inasmuch as they object to taking the newspaper accounts, since some of those gentlemen are on the floor at the present time I wonder if they may not get up and deny the statements that have been put into the RECORD.

Mr. McGRANERY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield, just in the interest of clarity?

Mr. McGRANERY. In a moment I will yield, as soon as I finish this statement.

I want to thank the gentleman for his contribution. Last week at the time this controversy arose I asked if we were going to hear from all or a part of these 100 Members of Congress who objected. I do not believe the gentleman from Michigan ought to assume the laboring oar because we all know, as a matter of fact, that our very lovable minority leader got the foot in that convention at Philadelphia, and he got it from his own delegation in Massachusetts because of jealousy. They were afraid of him. They were afraid of his rise. He was not the man to do their bidding. With all these jealous interests in his own delegation, when he was assured of from 200 to 250 votes on the second ballot, his own delegation would not go along with him.

I do not see how any decent man can rise to the defense of tactics such as these, a packed gallery and a stacked deck against the most lovable man, in my opinion, who ever sat in the halls of Congress.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGRANERY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CHURCH. In the interest of clarity, the gentleman has just stated that the Members who did object are on the floor. As a matter of fact, and in the interest of the facts, and the gentleman is interested in the facts——

Mr. McGRANERY. That is right.

Mr. CHURCH. The gentleman does not see a single one of those Members now, and they were not here when he made that statement.

Mr. SPARKMAN. May I correct the gentleman by saying that I immediately see the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GILLIE], whose name was mentioned.

Mr. CHURCH. I understand not a single one of those people is on the floor now.

Mr. McGRANERY. I am told that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GILLIE] is here.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGRANERY. Yes.

Mr. CHURCH. The last fact the gentleman has related is that there were 28 of these persons, and the last clipping referred to says 28.

Mr. McGRANERY. This newspaper, the Evening Bulletin, says, "Bloc of 28 questions his views on trade pacts and European war."

The heading is "Congressmen act to stop Willkie."

If the gentleman will indulge me for a few moments I will read to him the article from the Philadelphia Evening Ledger, which, in an editorial, claims to have been one of the first newspapers in America to come out for Willkie. The Philadelphia Evening Ledger, of course, as you know, is a Curtis-Martin publication and is controlled by the Curtis-Martin outfit.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGRANERY. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. Most of us were in Philadelphia and read most of the good papers in Philadelphia at that time. Why does not the gentleman tell us something about the Democratic Convention; that might concern him more.

Mr. McGRANERY. I may come back here next week or the following week, perhaps, and tell the gentleman just who will be both President and Vice President of the United States for the next 4 years. I will tell you something about the Democratic Convention, but you must wait until we have it. [Laughter.]

This Philadelphia Evening Ledger, which is the first paper to claim credit for endorsing Willkie, and say he is a great candidate, they start out with the heading "Congressmen fight Willkie."

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGRANERY. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Does the gentleman vouch for the veracity of that part of the paper?

Mr. McGRANERY. It is another reputable paper, although strongly Republican.

CONGRESSMEN FIGHT WILLKIE

Upward of 100 Congressmen—

This is Mr. Willkie's paper, a utility outfit—

Upward of 100 Congressmen from 20 States, led by an isolationist spearhead from the Midwest, today organized to combat the Wendell L. Willkie Presidential boom.

Spokesman for the group was Congressman FRANK B. KEEFE, of Wisconsin, who declared: "We can't possibly win with Willkie," and then elaborated his position in a statement signed by Congressman ROY O. WOODRUFF; HAROLD KNUTSON, Minnesota; KARL E. MUNDT, South Dakota; CLIFF CLEVENGER, Ohio; STEPHEN BOLLES, Wisconsin; EARL R. LEWIS, Ohio; and GEORGE W. GILLIE, Indiana.

And the number directly quoted is far in excess of what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] said was the number on the petition. He said there were eight.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. How many have you there?

Mr. McGRANERY. More than a good baker's dozen.

KEEFE said Willkie had not committed himself either on the administration's reciprocal trade agreements program or on the appointment of Henry L. Stimson as Secretary of War and Frank Knox as Secretary of the Navy.

Then the article goes on to say:

Although no direct mention was made of Willkie in the statement, KEEFE left no doubt in the minds of his interrogators that he meant the Hoosier.

He pointed to a portion of the statement which read: "A canvass revealed that a majority of the Republican Members of Congress of 20 States are of the opinion that the Republican Party can best serve the Nation at this time by nominating a candidate for the Presidency whose personal views and public statements present an opportunity for a clear-cut vote on foreign and domestic issues in harmony with the Republican record in Congress.

"We call upon the convention to name such a man. The Republican Party will win in November if it selects from its ranks a leader with a past record of consistent support of Republican policies and principles, and whose recognized position and recent pronouncements are a guarantee to the American people that he will not lead the Nation into a foreign war."

I presume that has some reference to the Republican platform committee. It will be recalled that in Philadelphia the resolutions committee first proposed a war resolution, and when Senator PEPPER and another gentleman put on their hats and walked out, they got former Vice President Dawes to bring them back, and then they went on record as being a war party.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD at this place this article from which I have been reading.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH] from July 22 to July 31, on account of important business.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 3008. An act to authorize the President of the United States to dispose of certain public vessels, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 2751. An act to repeal sections 3711, 3712, and 3713 of the Revised Statutes which relate to the purchase in the District of Columbia of coal and wood for public use, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9576. An act relating to the admission to St. Elizabeths Hospital of persons resident or domiciled in the Virgin Islands of the United States.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 458. An act extending the benefits of the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act of May 24, 1928, to provisional, probationary, or temporary officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard who served during the World War.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.
